stance which should be known as "American money," and which, by reason of its cheapness, could only be a medium of exchange in our own country. And now comes the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means and reports to this House that, after a fair diagnosis of the case mentioned by the gentleman from Indiana, that committee has come to a deliberate conclusion that there can be no relief to the country except by a revision of our tariff and revenue laws, and that committee, in order to carry out its views, reports to this House the bill now under consideration.

The committee seems to have had four objects in view in the framing of this bill: first, to gratify the heavy importers of foreign productions who are doing business in New York and other seaport cities; second, to promote the cause of free trade by aiding to build up the manufacturing industries of Europe, by the oppression of our own; third, to carry out the principles laid down in the national democratic platform of 1876, by which that party proclaimed that "we demand that all custom-house taxation shall be only for revenue;" fourth, to aid in perpetuating the memory of the honorable chairman of the committee, by having an act of legislation on our statute-books, which should be known in all future time as the Wood tariff law.

Sir, I am led to believe that the latter object was that which controlled the committee, or, at least, a portion of its members, in the preparation of this bill, for they have at all times seemed ready and willing to modify, change, or amend any section or clause of the bill in case the applicant for such change was able to control one or more votes in support of the bill when so amended.

It does not seem possible that a fixed and permanent revenue law for a great nation like ours can be perfected when every principle in such a measure can be changed or modified in consideration of votes. I am wholly unable to comprehend what other motives than those mentioned could have actuated the Committee of Ways and Means in attempting to revise our revenue laws at the present time. I have neither seen nor heard of any petition being presented to this House praying for a revision or reduction of our tariff duties. On the contrary, we know well that thousands upon thousands of men from all parts of the country have petitioned this House that our tariff duties might remain unchanged. These petitions have come from the farmer and the manufacturer, the producer and the consumer, from the capitalist and the laborer, and, in fact, from those representing every interest in the country. Yet, notwithstanding the prayers of idle but willing laborers and the depressed industries of our country, this committee insists upon glorifying itself by adding another blow at our producing and manufacturing interests—interests which supply labor, bread, and clothing to millions of dependent men and women.

I know well that the people of the great agricultural State of Michigan, the State which I have the honor to represent in part, have not asked for any such law as this, but more than two thousand of the men engaged in tilling the soil in my own district have protested against its enactment. I have not heard the cry uttered or complaint made by the consumers of our home products that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wood] claims to have heard; but, on the contrary, the trouble chiefly is that too little labor is employed in the creation of such productions, and that which is now employed is too illly paid. The effect of the passage of this bill must be either a reduction in the amount of duty laid upon foreign importations and a lessening of the indirect taxation of our people, or, if such reduction does not take place, it will be but a changing of the tax from one article of foreign production and placing it upon another. If the latter should be the result, then it will give no relief to the people by a reduction of taxation, and, if the former should be the result, then we have voted to decrease our revenues below the actual necessities of the Government and to build up the industries of foreign lands by crushing out the very life-blood of our own. The English capitalist and the English laborer are both watching the results of our action upon this measure with as much anxiety as the people of our own country are watching it, for they know well that the passage of this bill will be for their interest.

A correspondent of the Birmingham (England) Post, writing from the city of New York, the home of the gentleman who reported this bill, to that journal in February last, says, "The new bill will allow the revival of export to this country;" while the London Iron-Monger of a recent date says, "There will assuredly be a good prospect for trade opening if the new tariff bill is adopted." Whatever may have been the intention of this committee, if this bill becomes a law the three months' labor bestowed thereon by the committee will have been faithfully expended in the interest of the foreign producer and the foreign importer, to the prejudice of the great mass of our own peoples. When, sir, before this, did the Committee of Ways and Means of this House, while framing so important a measure as this, decline to hear the accredited representatives of the various industries of our country, which are to be so injuriously affected? It is a well-known fact that accredited representatives of the wool and woollen interests of the country, of the iron, lumber, salt, and other interests, have been refused a personal hearing before this committee. These representatives were practical men, and knew well the effect this measure must have upon the industries they represented. The gentlemen upon that committee who aided in the adoption of that rule for the exclusion of such representatives must have supposed that the combined wisdom of the age was possessed by the members composing that committee.

I know well that the honored chairman of that committee is a man of great experience in public affairs, and possessed of great and varied accomplishments; but sir, it is not within the compass of his wisdom, or that of his committee, to frame a tariff bill that will be satisfactory to the people of this country, without listening to the advice of practical men who are engaged in the various occupations of life. I have no unbending or unyielding theories as to what should be the rates of duty on foreign products, only that such duties shall be levied as shall tend to aid our home industries and incidentally protect our home labor. No one country can or should be a correct standard for another in the laying of duties upon foreign importations. What is protective or prohibitive in France may not be in the United States, and it is for each nation to see and know particularly its own condition and graduate its tariff duties in its own interest. England changed its duties on iron and steel seventeen times within one hundred and fifty years, raising them each time, until it could undersell the world, when it abolished such tariff and cried out for free trade.

As for us, with our imperative need for customs duties to meet the running expenses of our Government and the interest upon our public debt, with a higher rate of interest for money, with better wages for labor, and with still vast national resources to be developed, we cannot, with safety to our credit and our industries, materially decrease our tariff duties. It is said by our free-trade friends that our tariff system is the main cause of our business depression at the present time, but every laboring-man in the country and every capitalist whose judgment is not warped by his personal interests must know such assertions to be untrue. If it be true, why is it that in free-trade England, with her vast cumulative wealth of a thousand years, labor seeks employment in vain at lower rates than in our own country and that failures of capitalists are occurring from day to day. If it be true, why is it that France, with a tariff law protective and upon some articles prohibitive, is to-day one of the most prosperous countries in Europe, notwithstanding her recent war and the payment of her immense war debt to Germany. No; it was not our tariff laws that caused the depression in business, but the overtaxed and ruined credit of our people and of our private and municipal corporations from 1863 to 1873, which forfeited the confidence of capital, and the labor of our country remains unemployed by reason of such ruined credit. We are told by the author of this bill that our tariff laws lessen our export trade; but if we compare our trade with that of free-trade Great Britain we find that for ten years, from 1865 to 1875, our import trade increased 33 per cent. and our export trade 72 per cent., while the import trade of Great Britain increased 34 per cent. and her export trade 25 per cent.

In fact our export trade never was larger than at the present time, and for the last three years the balance of trade has been largely in our favor. In 1877 our exportation of domestic products exceeded our import trade to the amount of $128,000,000. Let us examine this more closely, to see how our tariff laws have affected the American farmer, and we find that we exported during the four years from 1858 to 1861, inclusive, with a tariff lower than now, only 47,321,422 bushels of wheat, at an average price of $1.15 per bushel, and 20,478,542 bushels of corn, at an average price of 67½ cents per bushel, while during the four years from 1874 to 1877, inclusive, with the present high rates of tariff, we exported 219,485,838 bushels of wheat, at an average price of $1.26 per bushel, and 183,647,581 bushels of corn, at an average price of 67½ cents per bushel. This shows conclusively that our increased tariff duties have not depressed our foreign trade, and that during the latter period of time the amount of our manufactured productions has largely increased, while the price for such productions has diminished. The value of provisions, such as hams, bacon, pork, beef, lard, tallow, butter, and cheese shipped from the ports of New York, Boston, Baltimore, and Portland during the month of January last alone amounted to the sum of $11,170,659.

But our free-trade friends again tell us that our high tariff prevents other nations from buying from us, when in fact, as I have already shown, they have never bought so largely from us as at the present time. The State which I have the honor to represent in part is largely interested in the production of wool, lumber, salt, iron, and copper. The growing of wool has become one of the largest industries in the country, and perhaps no other single industry extends over so large a portion of our country as that. No one of the million of men engaged in the production of wool has asked for a change in our tariff duties upon foreign wool; but, on the contrary, the wool producers and most of the wool manufacturers are in entire harmony in their urgent request that no change be made. In the State of Michigan alone more than $500,000,000 are invested in pine lands and lumbering, and upward of fifty thousand men are given employment during the whole or a large portion of each year in the production of lumber. I am certain that no one interested in this large business has ever asked this House to reduce the duty on lumber one-half or any other amount, for they know well that such reduction cannot be made without correspondingly decreasing the wages of the laborer engaged in such production.

This industry in Michigan opens up a home market for some eight million dollars' worth of the products of the farm and six million dollars' worth of the products of the shop and factory annually. What we should aim to accomplish and to maintain is a varied industry upon the farm, in the mill, and in the factory all over our country, from Maine to Texas and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I am heartily in favor of such legislation as shall, while meeting the wants of national revenue, incidentally protect and encourage every industry, believing it to be far better for the people that we should provide for their wants from the productions of their own labor rather than from the productions of foreign labor. Of the thirty-five millions of sheep in the United States the farmers in Michigan own about two millions. The people engaged in wool-growing have studied the tariff question thoroughly so far as it affects their interests, and I believe they are a unit in their condemnation of the proposed change of the duties on foreign wool. The Michigan Wool-Growers' Association and many other like associations in other States have recently declared their adhesion to the present classification of wools and rates of duty thereon, and to-day the National Wool-Growers' Association and Wool Manufacturers' Association are united in their opposition to any change.

Still, we are politely informed by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that the proposed change of duty on foreign wool will be in the interest of the wool-grower. So far as I am concerned I prefer to take the judgment of practical men who for years have been giving the subject a careful investigation. Previous to 1867 the most of our imported wool was of a finer class usually known as Cape and Mestiza wool which principally came from the Cape of Good Hope and the Argentine Republic. In 1866 we received from the Argentine Republic 36,915,776 pounds, and from Cape of Good Hope 7,424,217 pounds, or a total of 44,340,011 pounds. We received during the same year from other places than those mentioned about 23,000,000 pounds of wool principally of a lower grade, making the total amount of wool imported that year 67,064,986 pounds. In 1867, the year the present tariff law was enacted, we imported only 36,240,107 pounds, and of this only 6,227,991 pounds came from the Cape of Good Hope and the Argentine Republic, being a decrease in the importation of finer or clothing wools of about 37,000,000 pounds, while there was an actual increase that year in the importation of wool of a coarser quality from other places.

One of the principal objects in arranging the tariff duties on wool in 1867 was to encourage our wool-growers in the growing of the finer wools, recognizing the fact that it would be unwise legislation to encourage the production of a poor article.

Hon. Henry S. Randall, now deceased, late of Courtland, New York, and president of the National Wool-Growers' Association, informed us that the price of Cape and Mestiza wool previous to the war was 13 cents per pound, and during the war averaged 15½ cents per pound, exclusive of tariff duty. For the purpose of plainly showing the effect of the proposed tariff let us illustrate it in this way: call Mestiza wool 15 cents per pound, although it is worth at the present time but about 12 cents. The duty under the present tariff, 10 cents per pound and 11 per cent. ad valorem, would be 11.65 cents per pound, while under the proposed law, at 35 per cent. ad valorem, the duty on each pound would be 5.25 or 6.40 cents less per pound than under the present law, and yet we are told by some of these theoretical gentlemen on the Committee of Ways and Means that the proposed duty on wool is in the interest of the wool-grower. If they mean that it will be in the interest of the foreign wool-grower then they are correct, but it certainly cannot be in the interest of our home producers. But let us show again how this proposed measure is in the interest of foreign wool-growers and against the interest of our own people. The following statement is furnished me by the secretary of one of the largest wool manufacturing establishments in Massachusetts. It will be here seen that we placed the price of Cape and Mestiza wool too high in our former statement:

Cape and Mestiza wool—
Present cost, say, 6d., or.....	$0 12
Proposed duty, 35 per cent.....	4 3/4
Cost to land, including commissions, gold premium, &c.....	2
Total cost.....	16 3/4

This wool will shrink in washing 67 per cent.; therefore it would cost scored about 55 cents. It is as fine as XX fleeces of Ohio and Michigan growth. These are now very low, but will bring to-day in the Boston market 42 cents; shrink 48 and 50 per cent.; therefore they would cost, clean, 80 to 84 cents.

It will be seen how poor a chance 80 and 84 cent wool has to compete with 55-cent wool, equally fine, and worth for a great many purposes just as much clean per pound.

Cape and Mestiza wools, cost under present duty—
Value at port of shipment, (see above).....	$0 12
Duty, 10 cents per pound and 11 per cent. ad valorem.....	11 3/4
Cost to land, &c.....	2 1/2
Total cost.....	25 3/4

Cost, clean, 67 per cent.; shrinkage, 77 cents.

This is more nearly the value of our own wool than 55 cents would be.

It needs no further illustration to show the ruinous effect which this proposed change in the wool tariff will have on wool-growing in the United States. In 1872 Congress, in making a general reduction in tariff duties, reduced the duty on wool 10 per cent., and during that very year we imported 122,256,499 pounds, and over 54,000,000 pounds more than we imported in 1871, the year before such reduction took place, while in 1873 we imported 85,496,049 pounds. In 1874 the original tariff duty was again restored on wool, and during that year the amount of imported wool decreased to 42,939,541 pounds. In 1872 and 1873 wool bore a high price in this country and this had something to do, without doubt, in increasing the amount imported. But the 10 per cent. reduction in the duty had much to do in encouraging the importation of wool to the detriment of our own wool-growers. It is manifest that our wool-growers must market their wool with our wool-manufacturers, and they are desirous of aiding in building up and maintaining the wool-manufacturing interests of the country until the wool-grower and wool-manufacturer can clothe our own people without expending from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000 annually in the purchase of foreign wool and woolsens.

The tariff of 1867 was framed in the mutual and common interest of the wool-growers and the wool-manufacturers, after the leading men engaged in these industrial pursuits had been consulted and heard by the Committee of Ways and Means, and under this tariff our wool product has reached upwards of 200,000,000 pounds per annum, while the improvement in the quality of our wool far exceeds the ratio of the increase in quantity. From 1860 to 1867, inclusive, we imported 414,165,844 pounds of wool, while from 1868 to 1875, inclusive, we imported 486,282,805 pounds, showing a gradual but average increase under the tariff of 1867, and that the present tariff is not in any sense prohibitive, but is only fairly competitive. Our home consumption of wool for a term of years has increased, while the price of our woolen products has decreased from year to year. The following table tends to show the effect of the tariff upon our wool and woolen trade:

Statistics from official reports of imports of wool and woolsens into the United States for the ten years before and the ten years since the present tariff became a law.

That our revenue has gained rather than lost will be seen by this statement from Edward Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in the United States Treasury Department, showing the amount of duty received on wool and manufactures of wool entered into consumption in the United States during the fiscal year, ended June 30, 1862, to 1877, both inclusive:

I do not propose to take the time of this House to combat the proposition of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that the amount of tariff duties levied upon foreign goods is a tax of the same amount levied upon all similar goods consumed by our own people. It is a doctrine which has been controverted over and over again by Washington, Hamilton, Clay, Webster, Henry C. Carey, and others, and over and above all it has been proven to be unsound as a principle and untrue in fact by the practical experience of every laboring man in the country. From 1863 to 1873 a large proportion of the people, in fact the very Government itself was living on the future or on borrowed capital, when all classes of people turned speculators and fortunes were made and lost in a day. We saw a large proportion of our young men in the rural districts allured by the excitement attending such speculation leaving the farm and entering the store, the office, the shop, and the factory, in the many villages and cities throughout the country. What has been the effect? To-day we have a large surplus population in these cities and villages, and idleness fills the streets with men and women seeking employment, while poverty and hunger are found in many a household. Should it not be the policy of our Government to so legislate as to encourage these unfortunate and unemployed to seek homes on our fertile but unoccupied lands, millions of acres of which are now waiting for cultivation at their hands? Let me ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means what inducement do you hold out to these men to engage in agricultural pursuits? By the passage of this bill you strike a fatal blow at one of the most important industries connected with agriculture.

Sir, in behalf of the agriculturists and in their interest I protest against the passage of this bill, and for them I stand here to speak and vote against it. The gentleman who reported this bill and urged its passage here the other day, said:

Much that has been said with reference to the steel and iron manufactures applies to worsted and woolsens. Great progress has been made in these articles. If the falling off in the amount of duties received from them without any change in the tariff is an indication of a decrease in the consumption by us of foreign productions, the following table is very significant.

And for the purpose of establishing that statement he furnishes the following table, which I introduce here for the purpose of showing to the House and to the country why this bill should not pass:

Statement showing the amount of duties received from manufactures of wool and woolsens during the five fiscal years from 1872 to 1876, inclusive.

This table shows just what was claimed for it by the gentleman, that there has been a large decrease in the consumption of foreign goods in our own country. Sir, I did not expect when I came here to this House but a few months ago to see the leader of the dominant party arise in his place and upbraid the American people because they did not patronize foreign producers and foreign manufacturers instead of consuming the productions of our own labor. Again he says:

The principal opposition to a change in the tariff emanates from the friends of extreme protection to the manufacturing interests.

Whatever may have been the excuse originally for the governmental bounty to the then infant manufacturers, it does not now exist and should not be continued, because the necessity for it no longer remains. They have reached so high a degree of excellence and grown so strong that they not only need not fear foreign competition here but are able to maintain themselves in other countries against any opposition or rivalry there. This is the fact especially with regard to the leading and the most protected interests. The iron and steel, the woolen, the cotton, and the silk productions of the United States are now forcing themselves into foreign markets by no other aid than their own superiority and conceded merit.

The honorable gentleman fails to tell us, what is manifestly true, that this "high degree of excellence" that he mentions was brought about under our present tariff laws which he so bitterly complains of. Again he says:

The consumption of foreign metals, iron, steel, and manufactures of, has fallen from $57,333,158 in 1873 to $10,222,220 in 1877. The mean average for eight years consumption of these metals and manufactures thereof amounted to $38,030,766 per annum. The large falling off in the importation of these articles may be properly traced to two causes: first, the high duties and the vexatious and cumbersome classifications, and secondly, the wonderful progress and improvement which our own country has made in similar manufactures. To the latter cause, in my judgment, may be attributed the principal influence which is operating. It is quite certain that the exportation of manufactured articles which come under this head has largely increased. According to the official returns issued by the Bureau of Statistics, November 10, 1877, the average increase has been fully equal to 30 per cent. for the nine months ending 30th September last, over the preceding nine months of 1876. We exported in 1876 during this period of machinery, $1,891,330, and in the like period of 1877 $2,131,231, and of pig-iron, $70,544 in 1876 and $138,100 in 1877; of railroad bars for rails, $128,567 in 1876 and $198,770 in 1877; of sheet, band, and hoop iron, $4,988 in 1876 and $23,072 in 1877; of steam-engines, $429,405 in 1876 and $22,040 in 1877, and other manufactures of iron not enumerated, $2,510,038 in 1876 and $2,712,516 in 1877.

The exportations of steel show a more gratifying result. Of edge-tools we exported for the nine months of 1876 $448,717, while for the same period in 1877 the export amounted to $609,842; and of muskets, pistols, rifles, and sporting-guns we exported in 1876 $2,015,662, and in 1877 $4,361,752, an increase of about 133 per cent., and in other manufactures of steel not enumerated $112,517 in 1876, $247,316 in 1877. The total exports of iron and the manufactures of iron for the fiscal year 1877 was $6,029,540, thus showing that the apprehension arising from the competition of foreign mechanics with American workmen has now little force.

Well may the gentleman proclaim that the facts stated by him show a "gratifying result;" but he again fails to tell us that this "gratifying result" was brought about by our manufacturers and producers under the very law which he seeks to wipe from our statute-books. One reason why there has been a large reduction in the importation of foreign goods is that our people are living more economically than they were during the flush and speculative times which I have mentioned. And another reason is that by our wholesome tariff laws we have built up manufactures that are able to supply our people with such articles as they need and which are the product of our own labor. The conclusion to be drawn from the argument of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is that he believes the prosperity of our country can only be brought about by an increase in the importation of foreign goods.

This, without doubt, is the judgment of many of the gentleman's immediate constituents who are engaged in the importation of such goods; but the gentleman should remember that, as chairman of his committee, he should have in view the interests of the whole country, and that but a small proportion of the people are engaged in or interested in the importation of foreign goods. It seems to me that the prosperity of a country, like that of an individual, is indicated by its being able to sell more than it buys. Millions of men in this country from 1863 to 1873 attempted to gain wealth by buying more than they could sell. This was so with private and municipal corporations and even with the General Government itself, and for the last five years we, as a people, have suffered untold hardships by reason of our former efforts to carry out the doctrine advocated by the gentleman from New York.

In his anxiety to strengthen this offspring for which he stands sponsor before this House, our friend had read a letter from Colonel Withington, an excellent gentleman from my own State, informing the Committee of Ways and Means that he could manufacture hoes, forks, and other farming implements from steel purchased in England and sell such implements in the English market in competition with their own manufacturers; but the gentleman from New York neglected to tell the House, although that fact must have been known to him, that there was a drawback of a large amount of the duty paid by Colonel Withington upon the steel from which these implements were manufactured, and that they were manufactured by convict labor in the Michigan State's prison, at a price per day paid for labor which could scarcely board the men were they outside the prison walls. Let me inform my friend that the people of this country are not desirous of having a tariff law that shall place our free labor in competition with that of convict labor, or even the cheap labor of foreign lands. Again he says that the wool-growers are made to believe that the rate of 35 per cent. proposed is detrimental to their interest. Sir, they have not been made to believe that the proposed change will be detrimental to their interest, but they know it from their own practical experience, which is more convincing to them than all the theoretical knowledge possessed by the gentleman from New York upon this subject.

It is said that there will be but a small decrease in revenue to the Government by reason of the proposed change in the duty upon wool, and a statement is given by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means purporting to come from the American Woolens and Wool Association. Sir, if I am correctly informed this association only exists in the imagination of a few gentlemen who are either engaged in the importing or manufacturing of the finer class of woolen goods, and five of these gentlemen are holding themselves out to the world as an executive committee of this imaginary association, and they complain because under our present tariff law the duty is greater on the finer classes of wools than on the common grades. This, without doubt, is true, for I find that we imported of the finer wools and those which come in competition with our own production, 11,189,502 pounds in 1876, and during the same year we imported of coarse wools, a class of which very little is produced in this country, 26,334,757 pounds. Is there any man here that wishes to encourage by legislation the growing of a poor article of wool?

The great advancement which we have made in the quality of our wool is because the law was framed to carry out that very object. It is true that this proposed law will increase the duty on the coarser grades of imported wool and, as I have already shown, will largely decrease the duty on the finer grades, which come into direct competition with the wools grown in our own country. Our producing and manufacturing industries are not in a condition to be harassed by this ruinous change in our tariff duties. In 1876 a sweeping change in our tariff laws was attempted in this House, and like the present measure it received a favorable report from the Committee of Ways and Means. It greatly reduced the duty on wool and woolen goods, and was pending here until Congress adjourned on the 15th of August and after the wool season had principally closed. What was the effect of the pendency of that bill backed up by a favorable report? The wool manufacturers, thinking it might become a law, were afraid to buy our farmers' wool, except at low figures, and the great bulk of the wool in Michigan was marketed before Congress adjourned at from 25 to 28 cents per pound, while those who held on to their wool until after Congress adjourned received from 30 to 38 cents per pound. Is this same infliction to be placed upon the farmers again by keeping this measure here threatening ruin to their industry until the wool season is over? I trust not. As we love our country and glory in its advancement, as we wish to promote our own industries and favor our own labor, let us manifest these sentiments by the defeat of this bill at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. BACON addressed the committee. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. MORSE. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COVERT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to impose duties upon foreign imports, to promote trade and commerce, to reduce taxation, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ALDRICH: The petition of P. F. Munger and 95 others, of Illinois, for the establishment of a branch mint at Chicago, Illinois—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. BOUCK: The petition of citizens of Wisconsin, late employees of Day, Call & Co., Government contractors, for relief—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. BRENTANO: Papers relating to the pension claim of Mary F. Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The petition of Adeline M. Osgood, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. CABELL: The petition of citizens of Danville, Virginia, against the establishment of warehouses for the export of tobacco—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky: The petition of Peter S. Rusk, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLYMER: Three petitions of citizens of Berks County, Pennsylvania, numerously signed, against the imposition of a tax on incomes—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petitions of the publishers of the Reading (Pennsylvania) Adler and of the Republican, Reading, Pennsylvania, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

By Mr. COX, of Ohio: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route between Fayette and Pioneer, Ohio—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FELTON: The petitions of citizens of Dalton and Whitfield County; of Rome and Floyd County, and of Cartersville and Bartow County, Georgia, for Government aid for the Texas and Pacific Railroad to be built from the east bank of the Mississippi River to San Diego, on or near the thirty-second parallel—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts: The petition of Theodore Dean and other citizens of Taunton, Massachusetts, against the imposition of a tax on incomes—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Theodore Dean and 19 other business men and firms of Taunton, Massachusetts, for the repeal of the bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARRISON: The petition of a large number of residents of Chicago, Illinois, for the removal of the duty on quinine—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. HENDERSON: The petition of Hon. Samuel Guyer and others, citizens of Illinois, favoring the location of a mint on the island of Rock Island, Illinois—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. HUNGERFORD: The petition of Robert L. May, late lieutenant-commander United States Navy, to be restored to the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HUNTON, (by request:) The petition of James W. Havenner, for the reference of his war claim to the southern claims commission—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JONES, of Alabama: The petition of James B. Rawls and other citizens of Washington County, Alabama, for the distribution of the proceeds of the sales of public lands for the use of schools—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. JOYCE: The petition of Elizabeth S. Roberts, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MULBROW: The petitions of Samuel E. McGlathery and of Theophelus S. Robertson, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of citizens of Davenport, Iowa, for the location of a mint on the island of Rock Island, Illinois—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. SINGLETON: The petition of Sallie Yerger, Maggie J. Miller, and others, heirs of Henry Miller, deceased, for compensation for property taken by United States Treasury officials—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of citizens of Mississippi, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1670) to return the cotton tax to the States in which it was paid, to be used for educational purposes, not called for or claimed by those who paid it within three years—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. TURNEY: The petition of Elizabeth F. Long, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VANCE: Papers relating to the claim of Bryan Tyson—to the Committee of Claims.

Also, memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington, North Carolina, in opposition to transferring the life-saving service from the Treasury to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WATSON: The petition of citizens of Venango County, Pennsylvania, against the imposition of a tax on incomes—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WIGGINTON: Joint resolutions of the Legislature of California, asking the establishment of a post-route from the city of Visalia, by way of Townsends, to Fairview, in Tulare County, California—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon: The petitions of citizens of Linn, Marion, Lane, and Benton Counties, Oregon, for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Cape Foulweather—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. YOUNG: Papers relating to the war claims of John Bate-man, John H. Bills, and William A. Williamson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of members of the American Postal Microscopic Club, for the amendment of the postal laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 16, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that the Journal may be corrected. I find that my name is not recorded as having voted on the passage of the bill to repeal the bankrupt law. I cast my vote in the affirmative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The correction will be made, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee.

The Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the following communication from the secretary of New Mexico; which was read:

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO,
Santa Fe, New Mexico, April 8, 1878.

The honorable the PRESIDENT of the Senate:

I have the honor to transmit to you sundry memorials passed by the twenty-third Legislative Assembly of this Territory.

Very respectfully,

W. G. RITCH, Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. These memorials relating to divers subjects will lie upon the table. They are in print.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I present the petition of certain bankers and business men of Chicago, praying for the establishment of a branch mint in that city; and as it is very short I ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read, in the absence of objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, bankers and business men in the city of Chicago, beg leave most respectfully to petition and urge that you pass a law establishing a branch mint in this city. For a more particular statement of the reasons why the mint should be located here we refer to the exhaustive report of a committee of the Chicago Board of Trade, made at the request of Dr. Linderman, Director of the Mint, on the 20th day of November, 1875, a copy of which is herewith transmitted. All the facts and reasonings therein stated are as true to-day as they were then, with the exception that all the departments of business in Chicago have for the last two and a half years increased in a ratio fully equal to that of any other similar period in the history of the city. In the mean time the price of labor, coal, the acids, produced in unlimited quantities and at the lowest rates, and of the incidentals used in coinage, has largely decreased; our railways penetrate every part of the Mississippi Valley, and are rapidly extending in Colorado and toward New Mexico and Arizona, and the Northern Pacific will, by the time a mint can be established here, reach Montana, and gather in the mineral product of that Territory and Idaho; and, generally, we believe that the vast farm products of eight or ten western States, of our forests, and of our manufacturing industries would furnish more active employment for whatever coin a branch mint here could produce and with more advantage to the Government than were it located in any other central city in the Republic. All of which, we beg to assure the honorable Senate and House of Representatives, is and can be verified by facts and figures, which we trust will be so satisfactory and convincing that you will at an early date pass a bill for the establishment of a branch mint in the city of Chicago. And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that the petition, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of William C. Bayley and 103 others, citizens of Hollidaysburg, Pennsylvania, praying that Congress under proper guarantees should extend the national credit to the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific coast; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented the memorial of S. L. McIlvain and others, residents of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of any act imposing a tax on incomes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Alfred H. Love and 380 others, residents of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that Congress may appoint a commission to urge on all nations the substitution of arbitration for war in the settlement of international difficulties; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the memorial of William S. Russell, president of the Philadelphia Cotton Exchange, and others, indorsing the memorial of the national convention of the United States export trade favoring just compensation by the Government for ocean mail service as a means of restoring our commercial marine; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the memorial of William Grist and others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the memorial of John J. Murphy and others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the memorial of Mary A. Harlan and others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the memorial of Alexander F. Nicholas and others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the memorial of Amelia Pyott and others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and the memorial of Godfrey Goldsmith and others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against any change in the manner of paying pensions; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of Captain William Hubbard and others, commanders of vessels navigating the Chesapeake Bay, praying for the removal of the light-house on Greensbury Point, Annapolis Harbor, Maryland, to Greensbury Point bar in that harbor, and for the erection of a fog-bell thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Perry E. Broccus, late of Mesilla, Dona Ana County, New Mexico, administrator of the estate of Augustin Maurin, late of that county, deceased, paying the passage of a law authorizing the payment of a certain draft issued to R. P. Kellogg, of the Territory of New Mexico, by the United States Government on account of flour furnished to United States troops by him during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HILL presented the petition of Alexander Moffitt, of the District of Columbia, praying compensation for the use and occupancy of his property, and for alleged damages thereto by United States military forces during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KERNAN. I hold in my hand a petition of the members of the Musical Mutual Protection Union of New York, signed by a great many of its members, setting forth that persons who are in the service of the United States, forming part of the bands of the Army, are engaged by hire for private purposes, thus interfering with their rights. They pray the passage of a law forbidding such persons to fill such engagements. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, presented the petition of Dr. J. F. Caldwell, of Lewisburgh, Greenbrier County, West Virginia, praying that he may be protected from competition in putting in practice a discovery by him for putting down iron rails of a road below the bottom of a river; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the memorial of J. Wall Wilson, late a captain in the revenue marine service, stating his claim for restoration, and with it a petition, fortifying his memorial, signed by a considerable number of very well-known men and firms in the city of New York and the city of Brooklyn. Along with the petition is a bill to be referred with the accompanying papers to the Committee on Commerce. I move the reference of these papers to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOOTH presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of the passage of such an act as will result in the restoration of Major and Brevet Colonel Joseph B. Collins to his former position in the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of an increased appropriation for arming and equipping the militia of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Roberts, widow of the late Benjamin S. Roberts, lieutenant-colonel of the Third United States Cavalry, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of Somerville & Davis, of Galveston, Texas, praying to have refunded to them certain moneys alleged to have been wrongfully collected from them by the collector of customs of the port of Boston, Massachusetts, upon certain iron cotton-ties imported by them; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was recommended the bill (S. No. 490) supplementary to an act entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas," approved March 3, 1877, to report a substitute for the same and to recommend that the substitute pass. I wish to give notice that I shall call up the bill to-morrow and ask for its consideration by the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 27) for the relief of Amos B. Ferguson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1073) granting lands to the State of Minnesota in lieu of certain lands heretofore granted to said State, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROVER. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1015) extending the time to construct and complete the Northern Pacific Railroad, to return it to this body and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Railroads. The Committee on Public Lands had decided to entertain this bill, and had fixed a time for hearing discussions on it. But on intimation from the president and the attorney of the Northern Pacific Company that an understanding had been arrived at between parties chiefly interested in the two bills now before the Senate that they should both go to the Committee on Railroads for the purpose of consolidation into a single bill satisfactory to both, this bill is returned for the fulfillment of that amicable understanding.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope that change of reference will be made. The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands at my instance, but it may be referred now to the Committee on Railroads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred, no objection being made.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Samson Goliah, late a private Company A, Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Colored Regiment, praying for the removal of the order of dishonorable discharge against him on the muster-rolls of his regiment and an honorable discharge substituted therefor, to enable him to draw his pay, bounty, &c., submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1096) for the relief of Samson Goliah.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 785) to provide for building a military post for the protection of the citizens of the Black Hills region, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3679) to amend a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms, approved July 3, 1876, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I report back from the Committee on Finance the bill (H. R. No. 1887) to extend the provisions of section 3297 of the Revised Statutes to other institutions of learning, which appears to have been referred to that committee. The Committee on Finance acted upon the bill, but subsequently discovered by the bill that it was really referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, although it evidently should have been referred to the Committee on Finance. The committee unanimously direct me to report it back favorably without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1097) for the relief of J. Wall Wilson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAULSBURY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1098) to transfer Paymaster Robert Burton Rodney from the retired list to the active list of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am requested, and comply with the request, to ask leave without previous notice, to introduce a bill to provide for the settlement of tax-lien certificates erroneously issued by the late authorities of the District of Columbia, about which so much has been heard. I know nothing about the propriety of the measure itself.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1099) to provide for the settlement of tax-lien certificates erroneously issued by the late authorities of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1100) to correct an error in section 4390 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1101) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Roberts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McDONALD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1102) to authorize the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, respectively, to commence and prosecute suits against the United States in the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1103) declaring the true construction of a certain statute therein mentioned; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONOVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1104) granting a pension to Mrs. Agatha O'Brien; which was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. DENNIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3123) extending the privileges of section 2990 to 2997 of the Revised Statutes, inclusive, to the port of Bath, in the State of Maine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call up the subject of the appointment of a special committee to take into consideration the propriety of making some provision for taking the tenth census. I ask that the Chair be authorized to appoint the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution has been agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. The resolution was agreed to, but the Chair was not authorized by it to appoint the select committee under it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, that the Chair appoint the committee. The Chair hears none.

The VICE-PRESIDENT subsequently appointed Messrs. MORRILL, SARGENT, CAMERON of Wisconsin, MATTHEWS, DAVIS of Illinois, KERNAN, and MORGAN the select committee.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution I offered yesterday, fixing a day for proceeding to the consideration of the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday next, at one o'clock, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, and continue such consideration from day to day until the same shall have been gone through with; and bills that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once, and for five minutes only; unless, upon motion, the Senate should at any time otherwise order; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings; and this order shall take precedence of special orders or unfinished business, unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. WHYTE. I remember that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. WADLEIGH] gave notice a few days ago that he would call up to-morrow the bill making sundry changes in the patent laws, and that he should like to be heard upon that subject. If the passage of this resolution will not interfere with him, I shall vote for it; but I should not like to vote for it if he is to be excluded from making his speech to-morrow.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no doubt the Senate by unanimous consent would allow the Senator from New Hampshire to proceed with his speech upon that subject. I certainly should be in favor of that course.

Mr. WHYTE. With that understanding, I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Would it not be competent under the resolution for the Senate at any time to take up other business?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly, by a majority vote of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And a majority of the Senate at any time can permit the Senator to make his speech?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then it would not require unanimous consent for him to proceed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator who introduced this resolution. I see there is a limitation upon debate.

I ask whether that is usual in the discussion of bills on the Calendar? I am aware it is usual on appropriation bills; but has it been customary to limit debate to five minutes in going over the Calendar? I do not think we ought to make any departure from what has been the custom heretofore.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is according to precedent that has been running through several sessions of Congress. It is the only chance by which we can get at unobjected cases on the Calendar. It is only for the purpose of considering the unobjected cases. An objection interposed at any time during the proceedings will carry a bill over.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There are some special orders fixed. I desire to ask the Senator if the resolution is adopted would it not displace the special orders? For instance, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] has a special order for Thursday. The adoption of this resolution, it seems to me, would displace all the special orders.

Mr. ANTHONY. It would displace any special order, as the unfinished business would displace any special order, unless the Senate should otherwise order. It is in the power of the Senate to displace the execution of this resolution at any time.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will agree to amend the resolution by striking out the words "special orders or." This is to be a general order in regard to the business of the Senate, and under this general order measures which have been fixed for consideration at a particular day will go over. There is one particular case which I should like very much to have presented to the Senate, as it is a question of very considerable interest and importance. The bill is before the Senate. It directs the disposition of a large sum of money. Very many Senators on both sides of the Chamber are interested either for or against the measure. If the Senator from Rhode Island will not consent to the amendment that I propose to his resolution, I hope the resolution will be passed with the understanding that it shall not apply to this particular case. I speak of Senate bill No. 910, making appropriation for the compensation to the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. That bill, as I said, is one of very great interest. It has been considered of such interest by the Senate that its consideration was fixed for a particular day. I hope if the resolution is to pass it will be the understanding that that bill shall be taken up on Thursday, as directed by the order of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Such an understanding would defeat the entire purpose of the resolution. The special order would be superseded by the unfinished business at any rate. Whatever unfinished business is pending on Wednesday at the adjournment would come up on Thursday in preference to the special order of the Senator from Tennessee. Unless this resolution is adopted in defiance of measures that have the approbation of particular Senators, it never will have any practical effect at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BUILDING FOR BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. MORRILL. I now call up Senate bill No. 875.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont, pursuant to notice given yesterday, moves that the Senate now consider the bill indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (S. No. 875) to provide a fire-proof building for the use of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the mechanical branches of the Treasury and other Departments is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOWE. I have the permission of the Senator from Vermont, if I have permission of the Senate, to let this matter lie aside informally a few minutes to allow me to submit two or three remarks.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield, Mr. President.

JUDGE W. R. WHITTAKER.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, several weeks ago I submitted some remarks in this place upon a resolution asking the President of the United States for information touching the conduct of Judge Whittaker, of Louisiana. When my remarks were concluded, but before the Senate had acted upon the resolution, an executive session was ordered. I hope now the Senate will be pleased to adopt that resolution and to allow me a word or two in the nature of a personal explanation perhaps. The remarks I then made have been the theme of very considerable comment; I do not say of criticism, but of comment. The sum of those comments, if I have not misunderstood them, is about this: that what I said was true; that other Senators had agreed to follow me in the same or a similar vein of criticism; that I was vituperative and abusive of the President; that there was no use of my saying anything; and that I would have said nothing but for the fact that I was suffering from personal disappointment.

Sir, I admit that what I said was true. Upon that allegation no witnesses need be called. But I had no accomplices. I spoke for myself alone. No one knew what I was to say. No one had agreed with me to say anything. That allegation may as well be dismissed. I hope the speech did not abuse the President. It was little more than a recitation of history. I did extenuate many things of which I spoke. I set down not a thing in malice. Only one remark has been pointed out as abusive. That was a remark I did not make. On that allegation I go to the country. Perhaps it was useless to say anything. Certainly I did not expect to reseat Governor Packard, and I did not wish to unseat President Hayes; but no fact in our politics was better understood nor more widely published than that some members of Congress were not in full accord with the President. In certain quarters particular attention was called to the fact that I was a non-conformist. It seemed as lawful for me to admit the delinquency as for my adversaries to assert it; was it not?

The common suggestion was that we were offended with the President because he would not permit us to control the patronage in the several States we happen to represent. It seemed as lawful to contradict that vulgar libel as to publish it. Was it not? Besides, it was well known that at the last session of Congress no appropriation was made for the pay of the Army. Democrats would consent to no such appropriation unless conditioned that the Army should not be employed to uphold government in Louisiana. Republicans would consent to no such condition. So for nearly six months the Army served without pay. Congress was convened in special session to provide for its pay. Manifestly if democrats insisted upon an unjust condition they were responsible for the great wrong done. If, on the contrary, republicans resisted a just condition, we were responsible for that wrong. When, therefore, the President asserted in his annual message that what democrats insisted upon was only a constitutional duty, it seemed quite as lawful for me to show that it was not a constitutional duty. Was it not? And as a general rule I think it as lawful to speak the truth in this high place as to conceal the truth or to utter what is not true. Is it not?

Only one comment has hurt me. It has been widely proclaimed that for years I have been struggling for a seat upon the bench of the Supreme Court; that I have followed President Hayes with personal solicitations, and am merely resentful because he would not yield to such solicitations. Sir, nothing in my life can justify a suspicion so vulgar, or can justify an aspersion so groundless. And in spite of the passion which seems to rule the hour, I hope it will lift some opprobrium from me, and some from the body in which I have long held a seat, if the Associated Press will to-morrow inform the people of what I now say to the Senate—that I never asked the President to appoint me to any office whatever; that I never alluded to the judgeship in his presence. There are in this body some members whom I think I might claim for friends. There is not one, I hope, whom I could rank as an enemy; but there is not one here who will say I ever appealed to him for aid in promoting any personal aspiration of my own.

The President had abundant evidence long before he selected a judge that I did not approve his course in Louisiana, and he has had abundant evidence since he made that selection that I did not feel the least personal slight at the selection he made. And, so far as I know the President has made but two appointments in the State of Wisconsin that I would not have made myself. He has made but one against which I would have advised. So upon that last count I am confident that the President will direct a nolle proes. to be entered.

I now hope the Senate will agree to the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate whether W. R. Whittaker, who recently presided in the superior criminal court of the parish of Orleans, was formerly employed either in the internal-revenue service or as assistant treasurer at New Orleans; if so, during what period of time; whether in either of said capacities the said Whittaker is a defaulter to the United States, and to what amount, and under what circumstances; whether legal proceedings have been taken against said Whittaker, either civil or criminal, and with what result; whether such proceedings are still pending, or, if discontinued, when they were discontinued, and by whose direction.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I offer the following as a substitute, and I wish to say that in the document referred to in the substitute Mr. Whittaker's name appears, and as there are a great many others, I think it but fair and proper that all should appear as well as Whittaker's. As this document referred to contains Whittaker's name with many others, I think probably the Senator from Wisconsin will accept the amendment I offer; at least I call his attention to it.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

Whereas on the 18th day of February, 1871, the Secretary of the Treasury, in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives adopted December 13, 1870, made a statement (Ex. Doc. 140, third session Forty-first Congress) showing balances due from collectors of internal revenue who were out of office on the 30th day of June, 1870, from which it appears there was due on that day from collectors not in office the sum of $20,700,983.33: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate what amount or portion of this sum has been since collected, and paid into the Treasury; what amount, if any, has been settled by compromise, and the facts touching each compromise made, by whom recommended, and the amount realized; what amount or portion of said sum of $20,700,983.33 remains unpaid, and if any balance is still due, what steps have been taken to enforce payment of the same; also, to report the amounts due by internal-revenue collectors on the 1st day of July, 1875, and how much, if any, of such amounts remain unpaid.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator offer that as a substitute? It is a wholly different inquiry.

Mr. MORRILL. This will evidently give rise to a prolonged discussion; and I have but half of my time left now. I therefore desire to call up the bill which was laid aside informally, to which I hope there will be no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont calls up Senate bill No. 875.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to call up his bill?

Mr. MORRILL. I have but fifteen minutes left, and I desire to have the bill acted on; this can come up afterward.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I gave notice that the resolution which I have offered was intended as a substitute.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia if it would not be equally agreeable to him to have his resolution passed, to which I presume nobody will make objection, without striking out the resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin? The two resolutions have nothing on earth to do with each other. The Senator from Wisconsin inquires whether a nolle prosequi has been entered on a certain indictment against a particular man. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia proposes to inquire not about a nolle prosequi, but about wholly different things touching a number of other men. Now I ask the Senator whether it will not satisfy him to have his resolution adopted without attempting to thwart the Senator from Wisconsin in having his adopted also?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The name of the individual referred to by the resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin is contained in the document I have cited as among defaulters.

Mr. CONKLING. So the Senator said, and I have no doubt of it, but he does not seem to attend to my point. If the Senator will give me his attention a moment, I am sure I shall not get it in vain. The Senator from Wisconsin seeks to inquire whether certain indictments against a particular man were nolle prosequi, and if so when and under what circumstances.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And also whether he was a defaulter. That leads to it.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly, because if he was not a defaulter of course the indictments should have been nolle prosequi, or never should have been found. Therefore his inquiry is after these indictments, and what became of them, against one individual. Now, my friend from West Virginia, in place of inquiring further into them or including them in his inquiry anywhere, proposes to strike out the original resolution altogether and to inquire touching a great number of persons, including, as it is said, this particular person, whether they were defaulters and to what extent they were defaulters.

I am making no hostile suggestion to the resolution of my friend from West Virginia; but I want him to observe that he proposes to obtain the information he calls for, and not only to do it but to stifle entirely a different kind of information called for by the other resolution, so that it is a way of defeating the inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin under guise of obtaining some other information. Now, the Senator from West Virginia does not want to do that. Therefore let this resolution pass, and then let him bring up his resolution and let that pass.

Mr. ALLISON, (to Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia.) Let your resolution pass now. There is no objection to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The object of the resolution was to get full information touching all such cases.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us pass it now.

Mr. CONKLING. Nobody objects to that.

Mr. EATON. I hope my friend from West Virginia will withdraw his proposition as a substitute and let us act on it separately.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection if the two resolutions are to pass; but I do object to calling for information as to a single individual, naming him, when probably there are a hundred or more than a hundred in a similar condition as to whom the information is not called for. The name of Whittaker appears in the document published by the House of Representatives and as it comes from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CONKLING. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him a moment? Will it be agreeable to him if the Senate adopts his resolution first, and then allows the other to be adopted afterward?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no special desire for an arrangement of that kind. I care not whether mine is passed first or last.

Mr. CONKLING. Suppose we pass the Senator's first and then the other resolution can be passed afterward. I inquire whether he has any objection to that? My object is to prevent the stifling of the other inquiry by the particular mode the Senator takes of presenting his resolution. Now if he will ask a vote on his resolution first, I think he can have unanimous consent to adopt it in front of the other, and then let the other be adopted, and let us have all the information.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I concur in most that the Senator from New York has said, but the mover of the resolution has made no objection, and certainly if he has no objection the Senator from New York ought not to object. If the mover of the resolution thinks the proposition offered as a substitute by me will in any way interfere with his resolution and is objectionable to him, let him say so.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not understand that my honorable friend from West Virginia and the Senator from Wisconsin are the private proprietors of information which the Senate calls for. I suppose that we all have a right to know a little something; it may not be much, but the little I can get in the way of information I want. Therefore, whether the Senator from Wisconsin objects or not, I want the information for which this resolution calls. More than one member of the Senate has observed that there is scandal in regard to this and that certainly is not confined to the Senate by any means. If it is unjust, I want to clear it up. If there is ground for the scandal, let us know it.

Mr. EUSTIS. What is the scandal?

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, it is not worth while, I think, to go into particulars about that. But does the Senator ask me because he has not heard or seen allegations anywhere touching these nolle prosequis?

Mr. EUSTIS. But I understood the Senator to state that there has been a great deal of scandal.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not say "a great deal," but I will say now there has been a great deal.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask the Senator for information what is the scandal?

Mr. CONKLING. The allegation is that there is connection in time and in circumstance between the entry of the nolle prosequis on indictments for felony and certain other things with which properly they have nothing to do. That is the allegation. I do not make it. I do not believe it. Belief, to be conscientious, should be of some intelligible proposition supported by adequate evidence. I have seen no adequate evidence to support this allegation, and therefore I do not believe it.

Now the Senator from Wisconsin by his resolution proposes to enable all concerned to know what the truth is in this regard, and I say that because imputations have been made, and it is right and just that we should have that information, and I do not think it belongs to any Senator in particular or any set of Senators, but we have all our aliquot right in knowing what the truth is.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, it is true, as the Senator from New York says—

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to say one word to him? which is simply this: that I should have made precisely the same appeal to him which my friend from New York has made but for the fact that I was embarrassed by the circumstance that I held the floor only by the permission of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] and I did not feel at liberty to trespass a single additional remark. I do hope the Senator will indulge me by allowing this resolution to pass. Certainly his resolution may follow it at any time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly I have no objection to the passage of the resolution, but I want it understood at the same time that the information relating to the whole batch, probably one hundred names, ought to come as well as information in relation to one man; and, with the understanding that both resolutions will be passed whenever they are reached, I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. With the assent of the Senator, the question will be put first on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.]

The resolution was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS OF INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Now the question is on the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] submitted on the 26th of March.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear that reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 18th day of February, 1871, the Secretary of the Treasury, in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted December 13, 1870, made a statement (Executive Document 140, third session, Forty-first Congress) showing balances due from collectors of internal revenue who were out of office on the 30th day of June, 1870, from which it appears there was due on that day from collectors not in office the sum of $20,760,983.33: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate what amount or portion of this sum has been since collected and paid into the Treasury; what amount, if any, has been settled by compromise, and the facts touching each compromise made, by whom recommended, and the amount realized; what amount or portion of said sum of $20,760,983.33 remains unpaid, and if any balance is still due, what steps have been taken to enforce payment of the same. Also to report the amounts due by internal-revenue collectors on the 1st day of July, 1875, and how much, if any, of such amounts remains unpaid.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that a few words be added to this, to which I think the Senator will make no objection:

And also the nature of the items, or indebtedness.

I do not care where the words come in. The purpose is to enable the Secretary to state whether this has been money willfully embezzled, or simply uncollected taxes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know anything about the recitals in the preamble; but the information of course I have not the slightest objection to calling for. I do not wish to vote that facts are so and so without knowing something about them.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I can send the Senator the document from which I took the facts contained in the preamble, and I say to him that they are facts if this document is true, and this document is sent by the Secretary of the Treasury to the House of Representatives and signed by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, that is satisfactory to me. I take it on the Senator's statement.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will send it to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL BOARDS OF EXAMINATION.

Mr. MORRILL. I now call up Senate bill No. 875.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to morning business. I have no doubt the Senate will give time to the Senator from Vermont as so much of his time has been consumed; I trust at any rate it will do so. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be instructed to transmit to the Senate copies of the proceedings of the various boards convened for the examination of Captain Somerville Nicholson and Captain William N. Jeffers for promotion, and the various orders convening said boards, and orders setting aside or approving their proceedings, and any other papers connected with the subject.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

VACANCIES IN THE NAVY.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] on the first of April offered a resolution which was adopted by the Senate requesting of the Secretary of the Navy certain information. That information came April 3, 1878, was ordered to be printed and lie on the table. I move now to take it from the table and refer it to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

RECOMMITMENT OF A BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and, by a readjustment of the grants, without increasing the appropriation, to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad, be recommitted to the Committee on Railroads. I do this with the consent of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

BUILDING FOR BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. MORRILL. I now desire that the bill I called up be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 875) to provide a fire-proof building for the use of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the mechanical branches of the Treasury and other Departments.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the fact that some separate building from the existing Treasury Department building is needed for the purpose of carrying on the engraving and printing done there and that should be done there and for mechanical shops, has long been apparent to Congress. A proposition of this kind was introduced here some three or four years ago and strongly urged then by the Secretary of the Treasury. The bureau has been so well managed for the past year that it has actually saved $600,000 from the appropriation made for its use for the present year, and it is proposed to have a building that shall not only accommodate the Printing and Engraving Bureau but so that the steam-engines and the mechanical shops shall be removed from there, but shall also be a fire-proof building sufficient to contain the vast accumulations of documents that now crowd the corridors of the Treasury building and various rooms. I send to the desk a communication received from Mr. McPherson, the Superintendent of the bureau, which may be read to the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
9th March, 1878.

DEAR SIR: In case a new building be erected for occupancy by the various mechanical branches of the Treasury Department, the following economies can be effected by it:

The various clerical bureaus of the Treasury, now occupying rented buildings outside, can be brought within the present Department building, and the rentals now paid saved, amounting to $7,800 a year.

A careful examination shows that there could be saved in labor in this bureau the following amounts: In the machine division, $33.50 a day, chiefly caused by reduction in the number of engineers, firemen, machinists, and laborers. At present the "power" used in the bureau is scattered; whereas in the new building it could be concentrated with these advantages. The reduction in the expense of helpers in the various divisions of the bureau and of messengers in the office would effect a saving of $3,840 a year. These items represent a reduction of expense of $44,225 a year, estimated for three hundred and thirteen working days in the year.

The saving of rentals would be $7,800, making a total of $52,025, or 5 per cent. interest upon a capital of over $440,000.

This estimate does not include any reductions which would be possible in the other mechanical divisions, whose facilities would be improved by the change; nor does it take into account the conveniences and advantages which the Director of the Mint would derive from the rooms proposed to be devoted to his purposes; nor does it include any percentage to represent the security which would be rendered the valuable files of the Treasury Department, now in danger, but which could be stored in portions of the building.

From all these considerations it is apparent that, as an investment, this building would liberally pay the Government.

Very respectfully, yours,

EDWARD MCPHERSON,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
United States Senate, Washington.

Mr. MORRILL. It has been deemed important by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that this building should be absolutely fire-proof; therefore it will cost more than is proposed in the bill, and I am authorized by the committee to move an amendment increasing the amount. It has also been considered very desirable that this building should not be located, even at the distance of B street and Fifteenth street, so nearly directly in front of the Treasury building as an obstruction of the public grounds. It would be some interference, because the building must be three stories high. It is thought extremely desirable to provide a place outside of those public grounds. On the opposite side of Fifteenth street there is plenty of ground that can be obtained at a low rate. There is also on the opposite side of the public grounds land that perhaps could be obtained even at a cheaper rate. We have made diligent inquiry as to the prices of these various lots, and have ascertained that a whole square may be obtained for a small sum, and it would be rather desirable to occupy a whole square, in order to have access to the building on all sides, and also as a further safety in relation to fire.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the amount the committee really propose, may I ask?

Mr. MORRILL. I propose to amend the bill in lines 18 and 19 so as to make the amount $450,000 and in line 24 $100,000. The object is to give an opportunity for the Government to obtain this land at the lowest bottom price; not to condemn any land, but to give the option to the Government to locate the building on the public grounds, provided other land cannot be obtained at a reasonable price.

Mr. BLAINE. That, I take it, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, is the great objection to the bill as now urged, because the probability is that the building will find its way into the public park. They are getting matters now pretty well cleared off there preparatory to having a beautiful park in front of the State and Treasury Departments and the Executive Mansion; and now put an unsightly brick building there and it will be fifty years before you can get it off. If you put permission in the bill to build it there the great probability is that it will go up on those grounds. The remains of one building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, I think, are still there that we put up during the war, and are now to be removed. I should like very much to vote with the Senator, but I hope he will so frame the bill as to avoid the remote possibility of this structure going up on the public grounds.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt of the propriety of removing the Bureau of Engraving and Printing from the Treasury building. I think, therefore, the provision to that effect is wise and proper. I had some doubt when the matter was before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, as to fixing the location at the point designated, the corner of Fifteenth and B streets, because some apprehension arose in my mind as to the healthful condition of that location, being in nearer proximity than the Treasury building to the river and the marshes of the river. Therefore in committee I made a suggestion that that perhaps would not be the proper point at which to locate a public building in which a number of the employes of the Government are to be engaged; but my idea is that we ought not to authorize the purchase of additional ground for the location of the building. The Government has here in this city large reservations, large public squares, and it seems to me to be entirely unnecessary to purchase private property for the site of this building or of other public buildings while the Government is in possession of so large a proportion of the area of the city. I think that that provision of the bill which authorizes the purchase of other property ought to be so amended as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury and the chairmen of the committees to select some other point upon the public grounds without going to the expense of buying other property, provided there is public ground sufficiently adjacent to the Treasury Department to warrant the erection of the building on it. I think it would be wise and proper to remove this bureau from the Treasury building.

I think, therefore, the provision to erect a building for that purpose is wise and proper, and that it ought to be fire-proof; but I do not exactly believe that it would be right and proper to purchase a site from private parties when the Government is already the owner of so large a proportion of the area of this city.

Mr. BECK. I should like to know the number of buildings that are now occupied in the District of Columbia by the Government, and the rents we are now paying for those buildings, and the new buildings proposed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know the number of buildings that are now proposed to be constructed; neither do I know the amount of rents that are paid, but I understand a very considerable amount of rent is paid by the Government for buildings used by the various Departments in Washington. I think the Government ought to own sufficient buildings to carry on the work of the different Departments of the Government without being put to the necessity of renting, because it is always extravagant for the Government to rent, and we ought to own the public buildings. This bureau, if it is to be kept in existence, ought to be provided with some place for carrying on its business, and it ought not to be in the Treasury building, in my judgment.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, my habit of relying upon the Senator from Vermont constantly in all cases in which he expresses an opinion has prevailed for so many years that I am surprised to see how much doubt this bill gives rise to in my mind. It seems to me a very large and venturesome proposition upon a very slight and superficial basis of inquiry and knowledge. The letter of the Superintendent of Engraving—if that is Mr. McPherson's title—seems to me rather a narrow and rather a thin foundation for such a bill as this. It reminds me of a remark that a very bright man made to me once about the saw-mill business. He said that any man on paper who knew anything about it could demonstrate beyond peradventure that the saw-mill business was the most certain and one of the most profitable that a man ever engaged in; he could not make the figures so as to show a profit of less than 20 or 25 per cent., but that he had owned saw-mills all his life and run them as well as he knew how, and he had never made any money himself out of it and never knew anybody who did.

The estimate on paper of what this building is going to save is very fruitful of information and of something else, as I heard it read. If it would not be disrespectful to Mr. McPherson, I should say there is as much fun as there is information relating to this bill, in the way he ciphers up all this. Everybody who knows a little about it in a common-sense way will understand that the putting up of a separate building is to establish an additional staff of officials and janitors and messengers, to make another member in this family of buildings and departments here which have become so numerous and so large already; and when you undertake to sit down and say so much rent is paid and that is all going to be saved, and that would be a good investment of $440,000 or something at 5 per cent., I think it is to darken counsel by words.

Now it is proposed to devote $550,000 to putting up a building, we know not what, on a site we know not where, but we fear a site which I entirely agree with the Senator who has made the suggestion is utterly inadmissible. I cannot conceive of anything to justify the erection of such a building as is here proposed, in which is to be done the mechanical work of the Treasury Department and which is to be devoted to "the mechanical purposes of other bureaus and branches of said Department, and to like purposes of bureaus of other Departments." A sort of a general sweep and receptacle of all the unclean and uncomfortable purposes of all the Departments is possibly to be put down as an eyesore on the park between the Treasury building and the river. If it is not to be put there, it is to be put anywhere where two most estimable gentlemen who are referred to here choose to put it; one is the Secretary of the Treasury, the best man in the world except the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on the part of the Senate, and they both two of the very best men. But I will not vote, until I am enlightened, to intrust to any two men to go out and prospect and locate a building into which $550,000 is to go, where they please and then to put it up in accordance with plans unborn and undesired which shall not cost on paper more than $1,500. Fifteen hundred dollars pays for a great deal of plan nowadays. I do not know what kind of a plan you cannot get for $1,500; and this plan that nobody knows anything about is to be executed nobody knows where, upon the say-so of these two gentlemen, and that upon the notion that this building is urgently necessary. It has become now urgently necessary; and yet no man has been able to put his foot upon the spot where it ought to stand or to send here a statement of the sort of building required, the dimensions, or anything about it except that it is to be fire-proof and it is to be adapted to the miscellaneous and unrecited uses of all the Departments.

Mr. President, had this bill not come from a committee to which a Senator so careful as the Senator from Vermont belongs, it would seem to me a most extraordinary proposition. I should say that the place proposed should be stated to us; the kind of building in general at least proposed should be stated to us; the particular objects to which it was to be devoted; the relief for which these Departments groan, ought to be stated to us. But, in place of that, we hear that it is to be for all the mechanical purposes of all the bureaus of all the Departments. That is what it is to be. It is definite in nothing except the utter uncertainty, the utter unascertained argument in its favor. It reminds me somewhat of a question said to have been put by a girl to a mantua-maker when she inquired how many yards it would take to make so many flounces how deep; and, for one, although the superintendent of this Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which I believe the Senator from Vermont said had always been of late admirably managed, says conditionally that if the building is to be erected he suggests so and so, and although the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported this bill, I say with great respect to the committee that I hope before it is seriously pressed upon us it will be in a much more mature condition for us to judge about than it is now.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, of course I am always delighted to hear the Senator from New York, and if he could not find a flaw in a bill I do not know of any person who can. So far as this bill is concerned, the proposition has been mooted for years and years to relieve a building so valuable as the Treasury Department from the danger that arises from the use of the various steam-engines and other appliances used in the mechanical operations of the Engraving Bureau for purposes which the building was never designed for.

Then, in relation to the $1,500 that it is proposed shall be paid for plans, I wish to say to the Senator that I already have the plans and the dimensions of the building, which are open to the inspection of the Senator from New York or any other Senator present.

Mr. INGALLS. While the Senator from Vermont is on that subject, I would call his attention to the fact that we have a Supervising Architect of the Treasury, to whom we pay a salary of $5,000.

Mr. MORRILL. And this was prepared by him.

Mr. INGALLS. Why should he be paid $1,500 for it?

Mr. MORRILL. That was inserted at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who thought this building was to be so important and so unique in its purposes that perhaps additional assistance might be advisable.

Mr. INGALLS. The explanation is very satisfactory. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. Especially the "unique." [Laughter.]

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator may prove that it should be $15,000 instead of $1,500! [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. No, the object has been to get the very best building possible in this country for the purpose required. It is required for a printing-office, for an engraving-office, and also for the purpose of storing large amounts of documents that are and have been long in the way in the Treasury Department and which are a source of imminent peril to the whole building.

Now, in relation to the location of this building, it is not to be submitted to two persons only; it is to be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and the chairman of the House and the chairman of the Senate Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds, three persons, one being a Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the other a Member from Georgia.

Then, again, it was not the purpose of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate that this building should be located on the public park, but it was to give a leverage to the Government to procure some other place, to leave some alternative that they might do so provided they could not obtain another place on satisfactory terms. I have made an investigation so that I have ascertained that a whole square can be obtained at a cost of about $85,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that?

Mr. MORRILL. Right opposite. It does not interest me any more than any other Senator whether this bill shall pass. I think the proposition might now be safely amended so as to strike out the provision about the $1,500 for plans, and also it might be amended, because we have ascertained the fact that we can obtain the other grounds for about $85,000, and I think we can for less, but certainly for that sum an entire square.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask my friend from Vermont if there is no ground upon which this building can be placed in a proper position which now belongs to the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. Not sufficiently near the Treasury building.

Mr. EATON. If it was brought on to Judiciary Square, it would be too far, I suppose.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The farther the better for safety.

Mr. EATON. So I think; and why not put it on Judiciary Square, where we have and own the property, and then save the expenditure of $50,000 or $85,000?

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator that there is a square at another point that I think would be more feasible than that, if we were to take some other square.

Mr. BLAINE. Where is that?

Mr. MORRILL. The one where the Rawlins statue is. There seems to be some criticism on this bill, and I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. BECK. It expired some time ago. I desired to say a word about this bill before it goes to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Kentucky, if there be no objection.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say only a few words, and to call the attention of the committee, that they may be able to give us some information when they report the bill back. Until some definite arrangement is made both as to the location and the cost and until something can be done to make it sure that we shall be able to get the building at something like the cost suggested, I certainly shall agree with the Senator from New York in opposing the passage of the bill. We have had a great many public buildings put up, but very few of them have ever been built at anything like the first estimate of their cost. I turned, while the Senator from Vermont was speaking, to the figures as to two buildings that we constructed not long ago, one the post-office at New York (where we three times over enacted in the form of a statute that the building should not in any event exceed $3,000,000, exclusive of $500,000 given for the site, and making it a penal offense unlawfully to violate that proviso) and the other the post-office and subtreasury building at Boston, Massachusetts, where we repeated the prohibition with all sorts of care. And yet on running over the appropriation bills I find that up to this time—and how much more it will cost I do not know—the post-office building at New York has cost us $8,200,000, and, if the site is counted, $8,700,000, with laws prohibiting it going beyond $3,000,000, and the post-office and subtreasury building at Boston up to this time has cost $3,885,000, with limitations fixed in the law that it should never exceed a million and a half; so that it is impossible to be too careful in the original contracts and plans we make.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator, I take it, does not mean that this money has been spent contrary to law, but that Congress after fixing a limit has been teased afterward into making further appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say this. I happened to be in the House at the time much of this was done, and the process was this: the appropriation would be exhausted with the walls half erected, and we either had to abandon the work or finish it, and a necessity was created so that Congress could not help itself half the time. That is the history of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true.

Mr. BECK. And that is the reason why I desire this ground to be selected and plans to be submitted and everything to be done, so that we may, if possible, avoid a repetition of that class of events.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say in addition that there is another great difficulty we have. It will cost not less than $5,000,000 to finish the present State, War, and Navy Departments building, perhaps a fraction over $5,000,000. The cost up to the present time has been about $4,000,000. Then there are propositions to build a new Library here which will cost a large sum of money. We have just agreed to purchase the Freedman's Bank building and the grounds there for $275,000. Suggestions are made to remove the Observatory, for which large expenditures are about to be made. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which my friend from Delaware is a member, should when they report this bill back inform us what now is being expended for public buildings, what is now in contemplation, for it is impossible I take it in the present condition of the country to levy taxes enough to build all the public buildings that are suggested. A bill is now to come in for $7,000,000 for rivers and harbors.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky that this bill takes nothing out of the Treasury only what has been heretofore appropriated. It applies an unexpended balance. So far as the limitation is concerned, it is proposed that this building should be built by contract, the whole entire thing let out by contract.

Mr. BECK. Taking out money not expended is as much using money of the people as any other money, of course.

I rose simply to endeavor to ask the committee to report, when they report back the bill, the number of buildings that are now being erected, the number that are regarded as being indispensable, and to tell us what amount of rents we are paying here, because I believe the Government is paying enormous and extravagant rents. We pay for the Attorney-General's Office—the upper stories of the building we agreed to buy the other day—$15,000 a year, when I suppose no private man would have paid over $5,000 for it. We are paying for a little branch of Riggs's Bank $3,500 for a wing for the Surgeon-General, that I suppose anybody else but the Government could rent for a thousand dollars.

Several SENATORS. What about the Shepherd building?

Mr. BECK. The Shepherd building, where the Pension Office is, is the best building in the city; I do not know whether the rental is too high or not; but who does know just what we are paying? The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to enable us to act advisedly, I hope will, when they report back this bill, give us full information on all these subjects. Whenever we once begin a thing, no matter how much we limit it, they will so arrange it as to make it cost at least double what we originally supposed. They will put it in a condition where it must be continued or abandoned. Works ought to be provided for by contract with responsible sureties, so as to prevent the recurrence of things that have occurred over and over again. This bill does not guard all these things as carefully as I should like to see them guarded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ALLEGED CHANGES IN THE RECORD.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire one moment on a personal matter, if the Senate will pardon me. It is not my habit, and I do not think it is the habit of Senators generally, to notice anything that appears in the newspapers; but I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a statement which I hold in my hand, because it has a bearing which ordinary newspaper statements do not have. In the Boston Journal of last Friday, telegraphed from this city by one of its correspondents, not the one who is very well known in the Senate as clerk to the Printing Committee, but another gentleman who is also, I believe, correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, Mr. Wight, I find the following dispatch:

LIBERTIES WITH THE RECORD.

Congressmen are in the habit of taking liberties with the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. They often omit portions of speeches delivered on the floor, particularly if they find that these passages are objectionable. This was true as to the passage in the Senate a day or two ago between Messrs. EDMUNDS and BLAINE, in which EDMUNDS made some rather pointed reference to the Senator from Maine.

This correspondent had sent a very—I will call it exaggerated—statement of a tremendous affair between the Senator from Vermont and myself, in which there was any amount of hard contest. That he sent to the Chicago Tribune. I do not know but that he sent it East also, though I have not seen it there. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when it came out, differed very widely from the account he gave, and finding that the RECORD did not sustain at all what he had said he telegraphed the Boston Journal that the RECORD had been altered. Of course the great protection in the ultimate analysis, the only protection that a Representative or Senator has, is in the RECORD. You may be misrepresented in various directions, but you have the RECORD to appeal to. I never saw the notes of the remarks referred to here in my life. I am very sure the Senator from Vermont did not see them, but he can speak for himself. I asked the reporter this morning seated at the desk, Mr. Murphy, if anybody had seen them. He said no one at all, so that whatever was said in the body on that occasion went into the RECORD just precisely as it was reported.

This is the way that the public mind is sought to be poisoned; if the RECORD does not sustain the representation that is made of something which never occurred, then the Senators are guilty of suppressing the RECORD! While I believe I never in my life before noticed a newspaper account, I only notice this now because it is of general interest to Senators. It is of interest that at all events there is one publication which correspondents cannot control; and I do not at all mean by this to imply that correspondents generally are in the habit of misrepresenting, but unfortunately some are. Congress has the RECORD that they cannot control, and that is a substantial representation of the truth; and it is in order that the country may see just the bearing of this that I have called attention to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to add to what the Senator from Maine has said that everything that was said in that debate is reported in the RECORD exactly as it took place, without any addition or diminution or change whatever. I have never had any corrections of any kind made in the RECORD, even in grammar, of any thing that I have said, for more than ten years. I never see the notes, and I suppose very few other Senators do, of anything; and we have tried in the Senate to have even corrections of the RECORD stopped, as it has sometimes happened that the RECORD has been corrected or changed to suit particular views, which operated unjustly upon other gentlemen. That has happened once or twice or oftener, and the Senate only a year or two ago—I do not know but at the last session—passed a concurrent resolution, as I understand from my friend on my right [Mr. ANTHONY]—I knew that I introduced it but I had forgotten whether it passed or not—requiring the reports of the proceedings of both Houses to be printed in the RECORD exactly as they occurred, merely allowing the correction of grammatical errors, but not adding anything, or dropping anything, or anything of that sort; but it appears that the House of Representatives has not seen its way clear to agree to it. I hope that somebody presently will introduce a resolution governing our reports, requiring the reporter to send his copy to the printer just as the debates occur, without allowing any corrections, the interpolations or elisions or anything whatever, so that our constituents may know and posterity may know, if it is of any interest to posterity, exactly what has occurred here. That is what I wish to see.

Mr. BLAINE. I am informed since I read this dispatch to the Senate that the same dispatch went to other papers, at all events to the Chicago Tribune. I want to add, in so far as my own connection with the RECORD is concerned, in regard to what little I have had to say in sixteen years of service in both branches of Congress, that I never remember to have altered—I will not say a syllable or a word, because, as the Senator from Vermont has suggested, in looking over you may find yourself guilty of something that is ungrammatical, or the reporter may possibly make you appear so, and you correct it; but I think I can state with perfect accuracy that I never withheld anything I said for revision. I think I never spoke a word in either House that did not appear in the Globe or RECORD the next day, and the only revision I ever gave was to run over the reporter's manuscript hastily to see if I was made to stand properly in point of grammar and statement, but I never altered a word affecting the sense or affecting the relations of what I said to any human being in my life.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask the Senator having charge of the unfinished business to lay it aside temporarily in order that I may call up the bill reported from the Senate Naval Committee in reference to the appointment of cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers. It is somewhat necessary that this bill should pass soon because it has a bearing upon the appropriations for next year and may enable us to cut down—if it does pass both Houses, as I think it will—the appropriations in the naval appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator please repeat the request? I did not hear it fully.

Mr. SARGENT. A bill regulating the appointment of cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers has been favorably reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs and I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily that we may consider that bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to laying aside temporarily the unfinished business, but I hope it may be acted on to-day.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope I may have unanimous consent to call up Senate bill No. 1047.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EATON. Before that is done, I wish to say a word in connection with what the Senators from Maine and Vermont have said.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I wish to refer to the matter now, because I see my friend from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] in his seat, and therefore I rise to a personal explanation.

There is in the RECORD of the 12th what purports to be a report of a running debate, a colloquial debate, between my honorable friend, the senior Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH] and myself. I did say, so far as I remember, just what I am reported as having said. But several statements to which I am by the report supposed to be replying, I did not hear. I know there is a recognized custom in this body by which members are allowed to revise their remarks for the purpose and, as I have supposed, to the extent of mere verbal criticism or to add when such revision or addition does not in any way qualify or affect the remarks of others. I have no idea that the Senator from New Jersey, by this revision of his part of a colloquial debate, intended so to alter his remarks as to affect mine; but I am compelled to say that in several particulars, several distinct particulars, had I heard the remarks attributed to the Senator from New Jersey by the RECORD report, my replies would have been quite different, and, I should hope, more applicable than they are now made to appear.

I ought further to say that a revision of one side of a colloquial debate is quite apt to place the other side in an unpleasant position. In other words, there never should be a revision of a colloquial debate on this floor unless it is submitted to both sides. I am very glad to say, Mr. President, I take great pleasure in saying, that I have no idea that the Senator from New Jersey intended to place me in a false position; but I say this, that anybody who reads the RECORD of the 12th and knows me will know that if I had heard what is attributed to the Senator from New Jersey, my replies would have been entirely different from what they were.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut called my attention in a very friendly manner to what he says and believes to have been some material alteration in that part of the colloquial debate that occurred between himself and myself a few days ago. I attempted to state to the Senator from Connecticut the reason why in revising the report of what I said I had made some additions to the words that the Reporter had taken down as including, as he supposed, all that I spoke. Mr. President, the simple truth about this matter is that the debate was one that I sought to avoid; the subject was one that I disliked to have discussed for reasons that I do not wish to enter upon here. Briefly, a single one will answer: I did not think that it was a subject that could be properly entertained by this body. But it was introduced; it was discussed, and, unfortunately for me, some important sentences which I uttered were not heard by the Reporter, and I can understand why the Reporter did not hear them. It has often happened; the Reporter has said to me upon many occasions, considering the very few times that I speak here, that I have the unfortunate habit of lowering my voice at the conclusion of my sentences. I do not think I have spoken in this body ten minutes without having had that criticism made by reporters, and sometimes by Senators in my neighborhood. I did say the substance of everything that now appears in the RECORD.

I now say to the Senator from Connecticut that I am very sorry that I have put him in any such position as he thinks I have, and if any apology from me is necessary on that account, he certainly has it, although I am bound to say that if the subject had not been introduced the occasion for his remarks would not have occurred and my explanation would not have been called for.

I am quite in agreement with what has been said by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Connecticut, that perhaps the better way would be, notwithstanding all the inelegancies, notwithstanding the inaccuracies, notwithstanding the misapprehensions that may come from the lack of revision and personal criticism of what one may say in this body, to enforce what I understand to be the rigid rule that no alteration of any sort or kind be made. I can say here, and I think most of the Senators on this side of the Chamber will bear me out, that it is the commonest thing to make these alterations, not affecting the sense or the substance of what has been said, and it was only to this extent that I sought to make the alterations that I did make in the notes that the Senator from Connecticut has found some fault with.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave for the Committee on Finance to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDING-OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The Senator from Vermont asks that the Committee on Finance have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and leave is granted.

APPOINTMENTS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the bill before the Senate be reported. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1047) regulating the appointment of cadet midshipmen in the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 6, before the word "midshipman," to insert the word "cadet;" and in line 10, after the word "ten," to strike out the words "and provided further, that" and insert the word "but;" so as to make the bill read:

That section 1513 of the Revised Statutes shall hereafter read as follows: Sec. 1513. There shall be allowed in said academy one cadet midshipman for every Member or Delegate of the House of Representatives, one for the District of Columbia, and ten appointed at large: Provided, however, There shall not be at any time more in said academy appointed at large than ten; but the provisions of this section shall not be construed to apply to cadet midshipmen appointed at large now in said academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 14 to insert:

Section 1523 is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

Sec. 1523. Cadet engineers shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy.

They shall not at any time exceed twenty-five in number; and no persons other than midshipmen shall be eligible for appointment unless they shall first produce satisfactory evidence of mechanical skill and proficiency, and shall have passed an examination as to their mental and physical qualifications. The provisions of this section shall not be construed to apply to cadet engineers now in the Naval Academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following amendment:

Section 1506 is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

Sec. 1506. Any officer of the Navy may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be advanced, not exceeding thirty numbers in rank, for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism; and the rank of officers shall not be changed except in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

That section follows the present one, so far as providing for advancement, &c., but adds the words "and the rank of officers shall not be changed except in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." The object is to do away with a certain discretion which it is claimed exists by which cadet midshipmen and others are changed about on the Register, and even after they have got their established grades in the Navy, have become lieutenants and captains, find themselves, without their knowledge, shifted about, put above others or below others. In one instance a person acting ad interim as Secretary of the Navy took a relative of his and lifted him bodily from one rank into another, and sent in his name here for confirmation. The Senate was not aware of the fact that this was done, and made the confirmation, and that instance of injustice stands to this day, and there are many cases of this kind. Now, we simply provide that this shall not be done without the advice and consent of the Senate. That is the meaning of this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. The general scope of this bill is to make it agree with the action of the Senate in regard to the Military Academy. By the Military Academy bill we cut down the number that should be appointed as cadets at large to ten, as the total who should be at one time in the Academy, and we make the same provision here in reference to the cadet midshipmen. In reference to the cadet engineers, we reduce the number from fifty to twenty-five; that is as to those who shall be appointed hereafter. The trouble with the Navy is that we are getting too many officers, and this stops them in the commencement of the manufacture of them.

Mr. MAXEY. I had the honor of introducing the bill under consideration and the reasons for doing so I will give in a very few words. The section of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of cadets at the United States Military Academy reads thus:

Sec. 1315. The corps of cadets shall consist of one from each congressional district, one from each Territory, one from the District of Columbia, and ten from the United States at large.

That is as much as bears on this point.

The wording of that section, in my judgment, limited the number to ten cadets at large at any one time; and so when the bill came up making appropriations for the academy not long since, the Senator from California very properly, and as I think very wisely, put a proviso in that bill that the law should not be held to authorize more than ten cadets at large to be in the academy at any one time. The clause referring to the Naval Academy, however, differs essentially from that referring to the Military Academy. There are two sections which must be read together:

Sec. 1512. The students at the Naval Academy shall be styled cadet midshipmen.

Hence the amendment inserting the word "cadet" before "midshipmen" in this bill.

Sec. 1513. There shall be allowed at said Academy one cadet midshipman for every Member or Delegate of the House of Representatives, one for the District of Columbia, and ten appointed annually at large.

The effect of that was that every year by operation of law ten were added to the Naval Academy, whereas if this bill now passes it will limit the number to ten at any one time, and will practically cut off in every four years the appointment of thirty midshipmen. Now there is more reason for turning out a large number of cadets at West Point than at the Naval Academy; yet practically the cadets at large at West Point being limited to ten for every four years, there are fewer cadets turned out from the Military Academy than from the Naval Academy although the Army needs more officers than the Navy. The purpose of this bill, therefore, was to limit it down, because it is a well-known fact that the Army and the Navy are both getting top-heavy and we are compelled to do something to stop this. In like manner was the amendment which the Committee on Naval Affairs has added, a very wise one, to reduce the number of cadet engineers from fifty to twenty-five. The whole of it is in the interest of economy and is true friendship to both the Army and the Navy, because unless something is done there will be a blow struck that will be far more severe than this.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SARGENT. The title should be amended. After the words "cadet midshipmen" in the first line of the title I move to insert the words "and cadet engineers," and to strike out the words "at Annapolis," which are superfluous, and insert "and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to, so as to make the title read: "A bill regulating the appointment of cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers in the Naval Academy, and for other purposes."

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 802) establishing post-roads in the several States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDING OF SPECIAL IMPROVEMENT TAXES.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 655) to incorporate the National Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Company.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the Senate to lay aside for a moment the unfinished business and take up and consider Senate bill No. 933.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has an amendment to offer to the railroad bill, and I should be glad to have him present when it is considered. Let it be laid aside informally only.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside informally.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to ask the Chair if I was not recognized when the Chair stopped me for the purpose of laying before the Senate the unfinished business, and if so whether or not I am now entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the Senator from Tennessee will listen to the bill he will consent to its present consideration, as I think it will not take more than a minute.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, if entitled to the floor, I would cheerfully yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is strictly entitled to the floor, as he rose before the Chair announced the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. I am willing to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire for the purpose that he suggests, as it will take only a few moments.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask for the consideration of Senate bill No. 933. There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 933) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund a certain tax erroneously collected, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to refund to any persons who have heretofore been erroneously assessed for special improvement taxes on property not belonging to them, such moneys as they shall be found to have paid as taxes upon such erroneous assessment; and the said commissioners are empowered to correct any assessment so found to have been made, and collect the tax from the rightful owners of the property.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to inquire whether that is a general provision to authorize the commissioners to refund all the taxes which have been erroneously imposed upon property-holders in reference to the improvement of their property? How far does it extend?

Mr. ROLLINS. It only extends to very few cases where the tax upon a particular property has been collected from another party than the owner; that is to say, where property owned by A has been taxed to B, and the tax collected of B, this bill simply authorizes the commissioners to refund the tax to B and collect it of A. But three instances have thus far been called to the attention of the committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. How far does it extend back? Does it extend back one, two, three, or five years, or how far do you propose to correct these errors? I do not know anything about the provision; it may be all right and proper.

Mr. ROLLINS. The only instances to which the attention of the committee has been directed go back but a very few years. It applies so far as we know only to three cases, and those involve a small amount of money, a very few hundred dollars. A bill has already passed refunding the tax upon two small lots on the northeast corner of the Capitol grounds, and this bill will authorize the commissioners to collect the tax of the rightful owners, as it should have been collected originally. It also applies to one other similar case, and these are the only cases to which the attention of the committee has thus far been directed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund certain taxes erroneously collected, and for other purposes.

SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I have the consent of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to call up the bill (S. No. 1021) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands. It is a bill which if passed at all should be passed now.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kansas for the purpose of presenting the bill, and if it takes up no considerable time I am willing that it should be now acted upon.

Mr. WINDOM. I want a little understanding about the business before the Senate. I think it is the railroad bill that is pending.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course if there is objection to my yielding I will submit to the Senate the proposition that I obtained the floor for the purpose of submitting; but so far as I am concerned I am willing to yield to the Senator from Kansas upon his assurance that the matter that he proposes to call to the attention of the Senate will take but a few moments, and that action now is important as a matter of time.

Mr. WINDOM. I am entirely willing that the Senator from Tennessee should yield for that purpose, but I do not wish it understood that the railroad bill, which is before the Senate, is thereby ruled out or postponed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope my colleague will yield for the consideration of this bill. It will take a very little time and it is a matter of interest to our own State.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1021) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands. It makes it lawful for homestead settlers on the public lands whose crops were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1876, who left their land in that year, if no other settlement shall have been made thereon by, or right or interest therein accrued to any other person, to return to their land at any time within three months, and upon the return of such settlers to the land, their absence therefrom is in no wise to affect the original settlements or homestead rights, but they shall be allowed to resume and perfect their settlement as if no such absence had occurred. Proof of the destruction or injury of crops, absence and return of the settlers is to be made in such manner as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have another provision added to the bill. I move to add:

Provided further, That the party so leaving his land has not acquired by pre-emption title to other lands.

I do not know that there is any case of that kind likely to occur, but a man might have left his property and gone off and acquired other property under the pre-emption laws, and now he would come back and take possession of the first property which he had abandoned.

Mr. McMILLAN. I suppose his right under the pre-emption laws would be defeated and he could not prove up his pre-emption claim if he had made a pre-emption claim in the mean time, because that defect would appear when he came to prove up his claim. The purpose of the bill is merely to provide for the cases of settlers who left their farms in 1876 on account of the ravages of grasshoppers, provision having been made for the settlers who left their lands for the same cause in 1874, 1875, and 1877, but none for 1876. The rights of settlers are fully protected so that no title can be acquired without having complied with the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Delaware to offer an amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that it requires five years to acquire title under the pre-emption laws. If they left in 1876 I do not know that they could acquire right to other lands in that time.

Mr. McMILLAN. Such a provision is unnecessary. The rights of settlers are guarded fully by the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1080) authorizing the issue of passports free to colored citizens going to Brazil.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3740) to provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for prior years, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio, Mr. J. H. BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. A. J. SPARKS of Illinois, managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-routes in the several States therein named, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 484) to authorize the construction of a bridge abutment and approach within the Fort Riley military reservation; and

A bill (S. No. 1014) requiring the commissioner for preparing and publishing a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States to revise and perfect the index to the first volume of the same.

WARREN MITCHELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin.) The unfinished business is now before the Senate, unless the Senator from Tennessee who obtained the floor interposes.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 855.

Mr. WINDOM. Is not the railroad bill that was under consideration yesterday the order of business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that the unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it will take but a few moments to finish the railroad bill, and if the Senator from Tennessee will not press his motion for a few moments I should like to have it acted upon.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to have the Senate consent to take up the bill second to the Senator's bill, the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks that the bill to which he refers be taken up immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. What is that bill?

Mr. INGALLS. I inquire what is the title of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. It is a bill for the relief of Warren Mitchell.

Mr. INGALLS. I think a suggestion of the title of the bill will be sufficient to prevent that order being taken by the Senate. I will venture to say to the Senator from Tennessee that the measure is one of such gravity and involves principles of so much importance that I believe his sense of the fitness of things will prevent him from urging the motion in the present condition of the Senate. The bill is one that certainly will give rise to debate. It ought to be discussed. It involves questions of very great importance to the Treasury and to the country.

I hope the Senator, therefore, will, instead of pressing his motion, give notice that on some subsequent day he will call the attention of the Senate to the subject, because there are many now absent who I know desire to be heard upon the subject. I should regret to have a measure of this importance considered and urged at this time upon the attention of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Kansas that I have upon two or three occasions given notice, but have never at any one of the times mentioned been able, because of the unfinished business and the condition of the business of the Senate, to get this bill up for consideration. I have no desire to press it to a vote in the present condition of the Senate. I do desire, however, to have it taken up and when taken up I am perfectly willing that it may go over until to-morrow. At all events, I shall certainly not insist upon a vote to-day; but the Senate being notified of the fact that the bill is under consideration, I take it for granted that every Senator who desires to be heard upon it will be here to-morrow, and to-morrow Senators desiring to be heard may be heard and Senators desiring to vote may be in their places and vote upon the bill; but I would greatly prefer and desire that there be a full Senate when the bill is acted upon.

Mr. INGALLS. The notice that the Senator could give to-day would certainly not be notice to the absent. The greatest attendance is usually during the morning hour. I hope the Senator will give notice to-morrow during the morning hour, when the attendance is largest, that on a day to be named by him he will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of this business. This matter is one that has previously been discussed. As I said, it is one of very great moment. I think that course would be the wiser one to pursue, and I believe it will commend itself in the judgment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I regret my inability to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas. I feel constrained to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill that I have named; I beg to assure the Senator from Kansas at the same time that I shall not ask for a vote while the Senate is so thin as at present, but to let the bill go over so that we may hope to have a fuller Senate to-morrow if the Senate shall see fit to take the bill up and proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to be that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill immediately after the pending bill?

Mr. HARRIS. Immediately after the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. INGALLS. I will venture to do what I seldom do, that is, to raise a point of order that that motion cannot be entertained by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was entertaining it by unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. I will then enter an objection in entire good faith to the bill, with no intention whatever of interfering with its subsequent consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order, the Chair is of the opinion, is well taken.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether his wish to take up the bill now is for the purpose of submitting remarks of his own upon it, or does he wish to take it up in order that the Senate may proceed to final action upon it?

Mr. HARRIS. The latter is my object, to proceed to final action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. McMILLAN. The case referred to by the Senator from Tennessee is known to the Senate to be a very important one. There are two reports in the case, the majority report being adverse to the claim and the minority report being favorable to it, and there are very important principles involved in the case. I have no desire to delay the Senator from Tennessee in considering the bill. I should prefer myself that it should be brought up at a future day, and I would suggest to the Senator from Tennessee whether all he purposes will not be accomplished by giving notice that the case will be brought up on Tuesday next. That would give ample time for Senators who are absent to be present, and would be a notice to Senators that the case would be considered at that time and relieve all embarrassment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee gives notice that he will ask leave to bring up the bill for the relief of Warren Mitchell for consideration on Tuesday next.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to move to postpone the bill until that time?

Mr. McMILLAN. I make the suggestion to the Senator whether he had not better give notice that the bill will be called up on next Tuesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Minnesota to give notice.

Mr. HARRIS. If it suits the views of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Minnesota, I would greatly prefer giving notice that I will call the bill up to-morrow rather than to put it off until Tuesday. But if the Senator from Minnesota knows any reason why it should be postponed, that is, if he knows that the Senate will be fuller on Monday or Tuesday of next week than to-morrow, that reason will control me, and I shall adopt the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no definite information in that respect, but I suppose that that time would insure the presence of some Senators who are absent. I may be mistaken, however, in that regard.

Mr. HARRIS. Then, Mr. President, I give notice now that I shall to-morrow, after the expiration of the morning hour, ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

ENLISTMENTS OF COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to yield to me that I may call up the bill (S. No. 178) to remove all restrictions now existing in regard to enlistments of the colored citizen in any arm of the United States Army, with the understanding that if it leads to discussion I will not press the matter. I am going away to-morrow and I should like very much to have a vote taken upon the measure to-day.

Mr. WINDOM. In view of the statement that the Senator expects to be absent, and that his bill will occupy but a few moments, I will consent that the regular order of business be laid aside informally, if agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I think the Senate will let the bill pass, and vote upon it now.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Rhode Island yesterday spoke to me about having the matter brought to a vote to-day, and then I told him I should interpose no special objection. I thought the bill would come up in the morning hour, however, when the Senate is usually full. The Senator will observe that the seats are, a good many of them, empty just now, and I should not like to have the bill voted upon without a full Senate. I presume the Senator would not himself desire it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. No; but I think a full vote of the Senate can be obtained. Senators are in the Capitol and can as well give a yea-and-nay vote now as at any time. I do not like to press this matter to-day, but I want to go away very much. I think everything has been said about it that will be said.

Mr. BLAINE. Is there anything in the condition of the military service at the present time that renders it desirable to dispose of the bill promptly?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Nothing except that all legislation in reference to the Army should be had at as early a day as possible, because there are measures now being considered in the other House affecting the question.

Mr. BLAINE. I was going to suggest that very point to the Senator, that it is likely some measure much more radical than this will come to us from the other House; and would it not be wise to allow this to go over and be considered in the general Army bill where this subject may come in?

Mr. BURNSIDE. That is the very thing I want to avoid. I am frank to say to the Senator from Maine that I should like to have this bill passed before the Army bill comes from the House. Everything that appertains to the present measure has been discussed, and I think we can arrive at a decision in the Senate and probably settle the matter, and it will be established as the law of the land for all time, and then there will be no legislation in the other House in reference to it. I am free to say to the Senator from Maine that my object in trying to get the bill through is to have final action upon it before legislation is matured in the other House upon the general subject. I have had no consultation with members of the other House, but I have simply watched the papers in reference to measures there. I think we can have as large a yea-and-nay vote now as at any other time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me in the absence of at least one-half the members of the Senate, unless there is some pressing necessity for immediate action on this bill, it ought to go over. Of course, every one feels disposed to accommodate himself to the wishes of the Senator from Rhode Island, but there are not more than half the members of the Senate in their seats this morning.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I beg to suggest to the Senator from Delaware that, although not more than half the Senators may be in their seats, they are in the Capitol; they are in the committee-rooms. The members of the Committee on Finance and the Committee on the Judiciary are in their committee-rooms, those committees sitting during the sessions of the Senate; and upon a yea-and-nay vote they would be notified and could be here in a short time. I do not want any undue haste about this matter, but I think we can take a vote understandingly now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up the bill to which the Senator from Rhode Island refers?

Mr. SAULSBURY. My colleague [Mr. BAYARD] I know took some interest in this matter when it was before the Senate, and he is necessarily absent from the Senate to-day, not being in the city.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If the Senator makes a point upon it, I shall withdraw my request of course.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I cannot say what further interest my colleague would manifest; but, inasmuch as he took some interest in this matter when it was before the Senate heretofore, I should not like to see it acted upon finally in his absence. I do not know that he desires to be heard further upon the subject, and yet I know that he is absent in his own State and is not here, and if he has a desire to say anything further he would be precluded should the bill come to a vote to-day. As there is no special hurry for this measure—for I know of nothing except the desire of the Senator from Rhode Island to leave the city for a few days—we can wait until he returns and then take up the bill and dispose of it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me, I will simply say that there can be no time at which some Senators will not be absent. Without being authorized by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to say anything on the subject, I am quite satisfied that he has said all he proposes to say upon the bill. I think I can fairly say that. There will be some Senators absent always when the bill is called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up the bill to which the Senator from Rhode Island refers? The Chair hears none—

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know about that, Mr. President.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Well, Mr. President, I will withdraw my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to-morrow during the morning hour to vote upon this bill. I see no reason why that should not be done, and that gives ample notice to Senators to be here. Some time in the morning hour to-morrow I shall ask for a vote upon the bill.

RAILROAD IN THE TERRITORIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 655) to incorporate the National Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Company.

Mr. WINDOM. The bill now pending before the Senate is one that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] had charge of yesterday, and he desired me to take charge of it to-day. I believe it has been amended about as fully as is desired by the Senate, except one amendment which the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] has upon his table.

Mr. CONKLING. I send to the desk an amendment about which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] as he indicates have concurred, and I believe there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of the seventeenth section:

Nothing in this act shall be construed or taken to authorize the taking of any land or the building of any part of said road through or upon any lands to which the Indian title shall not have been extinguished or to which any Indian tribe has by treaty or otherwise any exclusive right or privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this amendment?

Mr. WINDOM. I believe there is none. I believe it was the understanding that the road would not run through any Indian territory; but certainly this amendment can do no harm and as it meets the approval of the Senator from Vermont I surely have no objection to it. The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. EATON. I ought to say that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] has taken a very deep interest in this matter and is not now in his seat. I hardly think the bill ought to be passed in his absence.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from Connecticut if the Senator from Indiana took any special interest in the bill except in one amendment which he proposed.

Mr. EATON. I am inclined to think he did generally in regard to the principle of the bill and as to the propriety of Congress passing a measure of this kind.

Mr. WINDOM. Another bill passed yesterday of almost the same character, and the Senator from Indiana made to that an amendment which is already inserted in this bill, and after that he seemed to take no interest in it. Unless the Senator from Connecticut is aware of some special interest, I think he will find that the bill in its present shape satisfies the Senator from Indiana entirely.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not think that the Senator from Indiana has any special interest in this bill. He wanted it perfected so, as he thought, to avoid objections that ought to be made to all bills of this kind, but after that was done I do not think he had any special objection to it.

Mr. BECK. I wish the Senator from Minnesota would be kind enough to tell us how the road is to get from any point on the North Platte River to the mouth of the Big Horn or the Yellowstone without going through Indian reservations. There may be some way that I do not know anything about.

Mr. INGALLS. It can go around them.

Mr. BECK. It would have to go a long way around in order not to pass through a reservation.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will allow me, I will explain that this road is intended to run from some point on the Union Pacific road, either Cheyenne or Pine Bluff, to Deadwood, and thence in a northwesterly direction to the mouth of the Big Horn River, and thence to Helena, Montana Territory. There is no Indian reservation at the present time that they will reach until they get to the Yellowstone River.

Mr. BECK. In the map which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has just laid before us for our information, there is a very large Indian reservation at the mouth and all along the Big Horn south of the Yellowstone. The map may be wrong, but by it I see no way of getting to the Yellowstone at all without going through this Indian reservation.

Mr. WINDOM. The amendment inserted on the motion of the Senator from New York was designed to obviate any difficulties that might arise at the point named by the Senator from Kentucky, so that if the road should necessarily cross the Indian reservation there it would have to wait until the Indian title was extinguished.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

Mr. WINDOM. It seems to me that with the amendments offered by the Senator from New York at the instance of the Senator from Vermont no difficulty can arise in this matter because the road cannot be built until the Indian title is extinguished if there be any. I think that the main line of the road—

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Kentucky is satisfied.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I shall not say another word.

Mr. INGALLS. When this bill was under discussion yesterday I ventured to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the word "timber," as used in the third section of the bill, and desired his opinion whether it was the purpose of the bill to allow the corporations to use the timber from the public domain for the purpose of bridging and tying the road. He informed me that was the purpose. In order that there may be no difficulty, that they may have no trouble hereafter in cutting the necessary timber from the public domain, and that the Secretary of the Interior may not be called upon to send special agents there in order to prevent trespasses upon the timber land of the United States, I move, for the purpose of making it clear and explicit, to insert the words "to bridge and tie said road," after the word "timber," in line 6 of section 3, so as to read:

And the right, power, and authority are hereby granted said company to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road, earth, stone, timber to bridge and tie said road, and other materials necessary for the construction thereof, and to keep the same in repair.

Mr. WINDOM. That amendment was inserted in the bill that passed yesterday, and I have no objection to it in this charter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of this measure whether there is any company proposed to be incorporated, or whether this is a charter to await the action of any such persons as may hereafter want to be incorporated. If it is a mere speculative scheme having no foundation at all, and there are no persons anxious to engage in an enterprise of this kind, I think it wholly unnecessary to pass the bill; but if there is a company proposing to take hold of the charter now to be granted and to build the road, then it is another question. We sometimes are called upon, I think, merely as a speculative enterprise, to pass charters in State Legislatures; I do not know whether that is the case in the Senate of the United States; but to all speculative enterprises I would be greatly opposed. If there are bona fide persons desiring to form themselves into a company, and gentlemen who are able to build this road, and who will take hold of it and put it through, I have no objection to giving them a charter that they may be properly commissioned. I should like to have that information.

Mr. SPENCER. I will state to the Senator from Delaware that a company has already been organized, and a large amount of money, some two or three hundred thousand dollars, has already been raised to prosecute this work in Cheyenne, in Wyoming Territory, and in Deadwood, in Dakota Territory. They have made arrangements for building as far as Fort Laramie this summer, and they will do so, provided this bill is passed.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no personal acquaintance with any of the gentlemen who propose to build the road. I find the names of a number of very respectable gentlemen here as corporators. I know the necessity for the road, and I believe it will be built; but I have no acquaintance whatever with any member of the proposed company.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. WHYTE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to say a single word, as the yeas and nays are ordered upon this bill. Taken in connection with the bill passed by the Senate yesterday, the two lines of railroad proposed will make a connecting link between the Northern Pacific and the Union Pacific Railroads running north and south, or nearly so, through the center of the continent. The recent developments in the Black Hills country are certainly of a character that justify this action on the part of Congress. A very large population has already gone into that country; the mining operations are extensive; the promise for a future yield of gold very great; and it seems to me that the people who have gone into that frontier region for the development of the country and the product of the gold should at least have the advantages of a railroad if somebody will build it without any cost to the Government. There is no grant of land; there is no grant of money; the Government is committed to nothing except simply to permit gentlemen who may be willing to do so to put their money into the building of a railroad to develop that interior region of the continent. That is all there is of this bill. If Senators desire to deny to them that privilege, to shut up that country, to shut out the improvements by railroad from that country, I suppose a vote against these bills will do that; but I think no Senator desires to accomplish that end. Give them the facilities that these two railroads can afford and I think you can expect a very large development of that region, a very large product of gold, and in these days when gold and silver are a little scarce the more we can get the better, I think. Hence I am in favor of giving them all possible facilities for opening those mines and developing the vast riches which I believe lie in the Black Hills region.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I certainly have no objection to a road being built through the country where these two roads are proposed to be built. My fear is that there are no responsible parties in this case who will build the road. I have seen in my own State sometimes charters obtained by parties who did not intend to build roads, but anticipating at some future time some other party of men might desire to build a road, they in advance went to the State Legislature and obtained charters that they might thereafter sell out to persons who might intend to invest their money in the construction of roads and other enterprises and make a special object of it. Now, if I had the proper assurance that the corporators named in this bill intended in good faith to use the franchises which they ask Congress to give them and to build a road through the Black Hills country, where this is proposed to go, I would vote for it very cheerfully.

I am not for excluding any persons who want railroad facilities from the advantages which railroads afford; but I would not knowingly aid any persons in a speculation such as I have supposed might possibly exist here. It is for that reason, I think, we ought to act cautiously, because instead of advancing the interest of that community this charter may hereafter be held up in terrorem against those who would in good faith construct a road there if it were not for the privileges granted by this bill to another corporation. I have not had the proper assurances that this railroad will be built. If there are parties who will build this road, I say let them have these facilities, but I would not grant a charter to any set of men simply to hold it up and prevent others from building roads unless they would agree to give them a bonus for their charter.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from Delaware what assurance he wants; what sort of proof he requires of them?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Well, I have not seen petitions from anybody here on this subject.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Alabama has just stated that a company is organized and that, I think, a million and a half dollars have been raised for this purpose.

Mr. SPENCER. Several hundred thousand dollars have been raised.

Mr. WINDOM. Several hundred thousand dollars have been raised at least for this purpose. I do not think we can have any better evidence of the good faith of the enterprise than that this amount has been raised.

Mr. SPENCER. Three hundred thousand dollars have been raised in Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, and in Deadwood alone.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, the people of my State are very much interested in the Black Hills. It is three hundred miles to travel from the nearest railroad to these hills, and I think that a railroad built in the interest of the people of my State, who own much mining property there, would be a great benefit. I believe that this company is organized in good faith, although I do not know any of the corporators personally. I want to see the bill pass, and I trust it will receive the favor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the passage of the bill, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCREERY, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 39, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Anthony,	Conkling,	Johnston,	Oglesby,
Armstrong,	Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Paddock,
Blaine,	Dennis,	Kellogg,	Plumb,
Booth,	Edmunds,	Lamar,	Rollins,
Bruce,	Eustis,	Matthews,	Sargent,
Burnside,	Gariand,	Maxey,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	McMillan,	Spencer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Herford,	McPherson,	Wadleigh,
Chaffee,	Howe,	Mitchell,	Windom.
Coke,	Ingalls,	Morgan,

NAYS—9.

Bailey,	Harris,	Kernan,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Hill,	McDonald,	Whyte.
Eaton,

ABSENT—28.

Allison,	Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Barnum,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Sharon,
Bayard,	Dorsey,	McCreery,	Teller,
Butler,	Ferry,	Merrimon,	Thurman,
Christiancy,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hamlin,	Patterson,	Wallace,
Conover,	Hoar,	Randolph,	Withers.

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to incorporate the Cheyenne and Black Hills Railroad and Telegraph Company."

Mr. SPENCER. I suggest that the former title is right.

Mr. WINDOM. The title of the bill as it now stands does not specify the point at which the road should stop. I see no objection to the title as it stands in the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I propose that the title remain as it was originally in the bill. I do not see any object in changing it.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not see how you can improve it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that yesterday the title as set forth in line 17 of section 1 of the bill was changed so as to read: "The Cheyenne and Black Hills Railroad and Telegraph Company."

Mr. SPENCER. Then I have no objection to making it correspond with that change.

Mr. WINDOM. As the title of the company was changed in the body of the bill I agree of course that the title of the bill shall be changed to correspond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be changed as suggested.

DAKOTA AND SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. EATON. I yesterday entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 927) to authorize the construction of a railroad from a point at or near Bismarck to the Black Hills was passed. With the permission of the Senate I will withdraw that entry. After the vote that has just been given I do not care to antagonize the other bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion is withdrawn.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was recommended the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad and by a readjustment of the grants without increasing the appropriation to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1015) extending the time to construct and complete the Northern Pacific Railroad, to report it back and recommend that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go on the Calendar until we see what becomes of the other bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL. I also ask leave on the part of the committee to submit a report in connection with the bill in case the committee desire to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be printed, when submitted, under the rules.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-routes in the several States therein named, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

MARTIN CLARK.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 713) for the relief of Martin Clark.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It relieves Martin Clark, late first lieutenant in the Twelfth New York Volunteer Cavalry, from all the penalties and effects of the general orders which dismissed him from the service of the United States, and restores him to all the rights and privileges he would be entitled to had not these orders been issued and enforced.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill:

And is honorably discharged the service as of June 30, 1864.

Mr. WHITE. Is there any report?

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a report, and the report will be read.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think there is any necessity for reading the report. The bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHITE] desires it to be read.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to hear it read. Many of us do not know what the case is.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLUMB on the 26th of March:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the accompanying bill (S. No. 713) for the relief of Martin Clark, have had the same under consideration and respectfully submit the following report:

Martin Clark was mustered into the military service of the United States May 20, 1861, as first sergeant Company G, Twenty-first New York Volunteers, in which position he served until February 17, 1863, when he was mustered as second lieutenant, same regiment.

On the 26th of February, 1863, (while Lieutenant Clark was on leave, spending some days with a friend in Washington,) a letter signed "John H. Burton, Census Office, Interior Department," was received by the Secretary of War, in which Lieutenant Clark was charged with having, "in the course of a bitter tirade against the Government, made the declaration that 'he would as soon live under the government of Jeff. Davis as that of Abe Lincoln,' and also that 'this is the second time within the month that Lieutenant Clark has used the most bitter language against the Government and on the conduct of the war.'"

For this Lieutenant Clark was, four days later, summarily dismissed the service, by Special Orders War Department 93, paragraph 33. This action was without notice to Lieutenant Clark, and entirely ex parte.

The time of the Twenty-first New York being then nearly expired, Lieutenant Clark remained in Washington, and went thence to Buffalo with the regiment. Shortly after, he commenced actively the work of recruiting for the Twelfth New York Cavalry, in which regiment he was, on the 18th day of September, 1863, mustered as second lieutenant, and, on the 20th of November following, as first lieutenant of the same regiment. April 12, 1864, Sergeant John W. Doney, who had then just been put under arrest by Lieutenant Clark for insubordination, wrote to the Secretary of War that First Lieutenant Martin Clark, Twelfth New York Cavalry Volunteers, was the same person who, as second lieutenant Twenty-first New York Volunteers, had been dismissed the service. This letter was forwarded to the commanding officer of Lieutenant Clark's regiment, Colonel John W. Savage, and was returned by him with recommendations highly eulogistic of Clark's bravery and loyalty. One paragraph from the same is as follows:

"Lieutenant Clark is one of my best officers. I have not the slightest doubt of his entire loyalty, patriotism, and respect for the President. He is brave, energetic, prompt, trustworthy, and competent. I have seen him in camp, on the drill-ground, on picket, and under fire, and know that I am not mistaken in his character, and that the service would lose a most valuable officer if he is again dismissed." It appears, however, that Clark's musters, both as second and first lieutenant, were revoked by paragraph 35, Special Orders 179, War Department, May 17, 1864, for the reason that no permission had been granted for his return to the service as a commissioned officer. He was relieved from duty under the order June 30, 1864. Numerous applications have been made to the War Department for the revocation of the order complained of, but without avail, and an appeal is now for the first time made to Congress.

The expressions attributed to Lieutenant Clark, if true, were quite reprehensible, and, if the expression of a deliberate judgment or sentiment, would have justified the summary dismissal which followed their utterance. But the committee do not believe this was the case. Lieutenant Clark at the time was stopping with a friend in Washington; the person who informed on him was a fellow-boarder, and whatever was said was in private conversation and most likely the result of momentary indiscretion. Clark denies, under oath, that he ever uttered any disloyal sentiments, and his loyalty is testified to by his commanding officer and by many persons who knew him well in New York, before and after his enlistment. His successive enlistments and promotions, his active efforts in recruiting, his faithful and conspicuous military service, are wholly inconsistent with any imputation upon his loyalty.

Clark's own statement is to the effect that he was indignant at not being promptly paid, by reason of which his family had come to want, and he had been compelled to go in debt for a uniform made necessary by his recent promotion, and that whatever he said was the result of anger on that account. It is altogether likely that the person reporting the language used exaggerated it by reason of having been sorely offended, or desired to commend himself to his superiors by the exercise of superserviceable zeal; a quality which would have better become some one in the military service of the Government. If the dismissal had been the result of the judgment of a court-martial, after due trial of the accused, the reasons for not interfering to relieve against it would be conclusive; but the unsworn and uncorroborated statement of an informer could hardly be permitted to outweigh the patriotic service rendered by Lieutenant Clark.

The committee have received from Colonel Savage, formerly of the Twelfth New York Cavalry, now judge of one of the circuit courts of Nebraska, a letter, from which the following extract is taken, showing the gallant service rendered by Lieutenant Clark after the issuance of the order revoking his musters in said regiment:

"A few weeks after this communication [letter of Sergeant Doney] was transmitted (Lieutenant Clark being on picket duty at the outpost near New Berne, at a place called Deep Gully) an attack was made upon him and his guard, consisting of some twenty men, by a rebel force of not less than twenty thousand. Lieutenant Clark so skillfully managed his men and retreated with such shrewdness and bravery that he was some two hours in falling back a distance of two miles to a point where such dispositions had been made to receive the enemy that after some four or five hours' fighting they withdrew, crossed the Trent River, and the next day attacked New Berne from the south instead of the west as at first intended. I think that had it not been for the coolness and bravery of Lieutenant Clark on that occasion a serious disaster might have resulted. While he was thus handling his men and exciting the admiration of all who saw him, I received the order dismissing him. No case came under my observation during the war which so strongly enlisted my feelings of sympathy, or which seemed such cruel injustice. I hope that at last justice will be done him."

There is no room for doubt that Lieutenant Clark was thoroughly loyal, and that the order dismissing him was wholly unwarranted. Clark swears that he did not know that the effect of the order dismissing him was to disqualify him from holding office in the military service, and that Secretary Stanton, in reply to his complaint of injustice done, in an interview held immediately after his dismissal, said in substance, "Well, you can enter the service again if you wish."

Even if the subsequent enlistment was with full knowledge that it was in violation of law, the offense was not a very grave one under the circumstances, and was fully atoned for by the gallant service thereafter rendered. The Government needed such soldiers as Lieutenant Clark proved to be, and was glad to get them.

The committee are unhesitatingly of the opinion that the facts of the case fully warrant the passage of a bill relieving Lieutenant Clark from the effects of the order of dismissal and that revoking his musters as second and first lieutenant, granting him an honorable discharge, and providing for the payment of the full amount of pay and emoluments due him by reason of service actually rendered, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, with an amendment providing for the honorable discharge of Lieutenant Clark as of June 30, 1864.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from Kansas has this subject ever been brought to the attention of Congress before?

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir; it has not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the report of the committee I think it is plain enough that this gentleman ought to be relieved, but I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the frame of the bill which states that he "is hereby honorably discharged." Now, whether under our frame of Government Congress can discharge a person from an office that he holds might be open to considerable question. I suppose the point is to relieve him from all the consequences of his dismissal so that he may get his pay, and so on. The particular case is not of sufficient consequence to make any particular point about it, but I should not wish it to go as a precedent, as to any authority of Congress to discharge an officer of the United States from service, for if we have the authority to discharge an officer honorably we have the authority to dishonorably discharge him in the Army now; and I should doubt very much the power of Congress to say that the General of our Army, General Sherman, could by an act of Congress be discharged from the military service, either honorably or dishonorably. I call the attention of my friend from Kansas to that suggestion, so that his bill shall not be made a precedent for that method of legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. A very slight amendment will cover the point which the Senator from Vermont makes, and perhaps well makes, and that is to so amend the bill as to authorize the Secretary of War or the President to discharge as of that date.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will do it.

Mr. PLUMB. That obviates the difficulty?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. PLUMB. The purpose of this bill is, first, that this man shall have pay for the actual time he served and no more, and next, that he shall be honorably discharged from the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas will be reported by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to read:

And the Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to honorably discharge the said Martin Clark the service as of the 30th of June, 1864.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Strike out the words "and directed," so as to read "is authorized to discharge," &c. Of course it is the mere form any way, he being long out of service, it being the volunteer service.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES L. DAVENPORT.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of Charles L. Davenport. It is a bill that will not lead to debate, and it is of some importance to the person named in the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It declares legal the declaratory statement numbered 13659, for the southeast quarter of section 5, township 34 south, range 2 west, in the State of Kansas, of Charles L. Davenport, and that his right to acquire title thereto under the pre-emption laws of the United States, shall in no wise be prejudiced or affected by any former filing or declaratory statement he may have made for another tract of land under the pre-emption laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained. Of course the matter is a very small one, but there may happen to be an adverse claimant. We declare that his title is absolutely legal, and if there is an adverse claimant who has got a better right, then he will come to Congress and ask to have something done for him.

Mr. PLUMB. Perhaps the easiest way to explain this matter would be to have the report read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report accompanying the bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLUMB on the 26th of March:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the accompanying bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of Charles L. Davenport, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully submit the following report:

The facts of this case, in brief, are: in July, 1876, Mr. Charles L. Davenport filed his declaratory statement of intention to pre-empt the northeast quarter of section 10, township 27, range 4 west, in Sedgwick County, Kansas. On account of sickness in his family he was prevented for about two months from making the necessary improvements, and the land was settled upon by another person. Doubting his ability to successfully contest with this person, Mr. Davenport, acting under advice, concluded to have his first filing canceled, and pre-empt another tract of land. He therefore went to the land-office at Wichita, gave his filing-paper to a clerk, telling him what he desired. Shortly after, he filed in the same office his declaratory statement (No. 13659) of intention to pre-empt the southeast quarter of section 5, township 31 south, range 2 west, in Sumner County, Kansas, accompanying the filing by settlement and improvement of the land, on which he has since made lasting and valuable improvements, exhausting thereby all available means.

Recently Mr. Davenport sought to complete his entry, and then, for the first time, ascertained that he could not do so on account of his previous filing. He at once made application to the Commissioner of the General Land Office to have the first filing canceled; but the Commissioner, having no power under the law, of course refused.

Section 2261 of the Revised Statutes, which provides as follows: "Nor where a party has filed his declaration of intention to claim the benefits of such provisions" (pre-emption right) "for one tract of land, shall he file at any future time a second declaration for another tract," was designed to guard against speculation in the public lands. It was aimed at a practice which prevailed of filing upon lands and holding them until they became valuable, and then selling and relinquishing and going on to another tract to repeat the operation, and so on. In this case it is apparent that no such intention existed; that Mr. Davenport was prevented by sickness in his family from fulfilling the conditions of his first entry; that he was ignorant of the law, and was misled by the failure of the clerk at the land office to inform him when he left his filing for cancellation, and by the acceptance of his last filing by the register of the land office, whereby he was induced to improve the land covered by his new filing, and expend thereon all his means.

Inasmuch as Mr. Davenport acted in good faith, had no design of speculating in the public lands, was misled by the action or non-action of the officers of the local land office, and as the restoration of his right to pre-emption entry will wrong neither the Government nor any private individual, the committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill to guard against the possibility of our being obliged to provide land for two persons, when only one is entitled to it, by adding at the end of the section these words:

That this act shall not have the effect to impair any lawful right of any other person, and it shall operate only to convey in the manner hereinbefore provided any title of the United States in the premises.

So as to put him in our shoes. If another man has got a legal right, then we ought to recognize that.

Mr. PLUMB. I have this to say about that: I do not know that there is any intervening right of any kind whatever. There is certainly no intervening equity. Mr. Davenport is now, as he has been for a long time past, living upon this particular piece of land. By virtue of a section of the Revised Statutes, having previously filed upon another piece of land, he could not legally file upon this land. He did not ascertain that fact until he went to the land office to make his final entry. If any person has settled upon that land Mr. Davenport himself living there during this time, having made this valuable improvement upon it, only being prevented from making his final entry by reason of the existence of this technical impediment, for it is purely a technical impediment, I submit that it would be entirely unjust to him to permit the practical trespass of any other person to come in between him and the right to make this entry. The facts as stated in the report show that this man has made his actual bona fide settlement; that he has done all that the law requires him to do; but that, by reason of his having previously filed on another piece of land under the circumstances stated, he is not now permitted to make this entry.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The better way would be to allow the Commissioner to cancel the first application.

Mr. PLUMB. That is the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. No, this bill is a legislative declaration of a legal conclusion; but if he cancels his first application and the Commissioner can allow the second application to date from the time it was made, you will get all you want.

Mr. PLUMB. If there is any better way of accomplishing the result I have no objection to it of course, but I should decidedly object to permitting any person who was practically a trespasser against Mr. Davenport to acquire by reason of this bill any rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Either Mr. Davenport has a lawful right to acquire this land or he has not. If he has the lawful right to acquire it under the circumstances stated, I am perfectly willing that he should have that right provided some other person has not a precedent lawful right to the same land. If some other person—no matter what his motives are—has, under the authority of law, got the start of Mr. Davenport, that is a misfortune that exists between those two men; one or the other of them has got to lose the land; but the question is whether the United States should be obliged to foot the bills of both of them, as the saying is. That is the point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate, and so I proposed this amendment. If any other person has acquired under existing law a lawful right to this land, then I do not see how we can take that lawful right away and give it to Mr. Davenport; but we can give Mr. Davenport whatever we have a rightful authority to give him, and that is to relieve him from any embarrassment growing out of his loss, so that it does not take land away from somebody else who has a right to it. If somebody else has a right to it, I do not think that any hardship in Mr. Davenport's case ought to require or authorize us to take the land away from somebody else who has acquired a right to it and give it to him; and that is the point upon which I offer this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I would suggest to the Senator from Kansas that the better way for him is to have a cancellation by the commissioner of the first application and filing of the other as the date at which it was filed. That avoids all this difficulty.

Mr. PLUMB. The point which the Senator from Illinois makes can be accomplished by a very slight change in this bill and it will answer the purpose just as well. Say

That the declaratory statement numbered 13659 be, and the same is hereby, declared legal.

Or I will strike out the words "declared legal," and say:

That the right of Charles L. Davenport to acquire title to that land under the pre-emption law shall not be prejudiced by reason of his having previously filed.

That amounts to the same thing. I am willing to make that amendment and that will simply remove the prejudice on account of a first filing, and that leaves him and other parties to contest with reference to the priority of their respective rights for this very piece of land which he has now settled on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the bill further.

Mr. CHAFFEE. While the Senator from Kansas is preparing his amendment I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 20.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot lay one bill over another in that way.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The Senator from Kansas has not got his bill correct yet. While he is correcting his bill I move to take up Senate bill No. 20.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Calendar will be taken up to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. PLUMB. I have an amendment which I think will cover the point suggested by the Senator from Vermont and I offer what I now read as a substitute for all after the enacting clause:

That the right of Charles L. Davenport to acquire title to one quarter section of the public land under the pre-emption laws of the United States shall in no wise be prejudiced or affected by any former filing or declaratory statement he had made for another tract of land under such pre-emption laws.

That simply relieves him from the onus which is now on him by reason of having heretofore filed a declaratory statement. That leaves the parties exactly as they are with that prejudice removed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend that amendment by adding to it these words:

But this provision shall not affect any lawful adverse right of any other person.

Mr. PADDOCK. Would it not be well to have the bill recommitted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a question for the Senate to decide on motion.

Mr. PLUMB. I accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is accepted by the Senator from Kansas. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, as amended; which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the right of Charles L. Davenport to acquire title to one quarter section of the public land under the pre-emption laws of the United States shall in no wise be prejudiced or affected by any former filing or declaratory statement; but this provision shall not affect any lawful adverse right of any other person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I should like to have the bill read now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended on motion of Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. WHYTE. I may not have heard very distinctly the reading of the bill as it has been amended, but it strikes me that it is still very imperfect in its character, and I think it ought to go back to the Committee on Public Lands to be perfected before we vote on it finally. It is a very curious beginning of a law that for a party to acquire title to a piece of land certain things shall be done. It strikes me as something odd in legislation, and I therefore move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Maryland does not understand the precise position which this matter is now in. The bill simply relieves Mr. Davenport from the effect of a former filing which he has made and gives him no new right except as to that filing. The law as it now stands prohibits a person from making two filings of different pieces of land. There is some necessity for haste about this bill, because if it does not pass other rights may intervene and then he will be left out entirely with all the money he has expended on the piece of land he has settled on. The bill as it stands certainly will accomplish the object had in view, no matter how imperfect it may be.

Mr. WHYTE. The difficulty with me is that it does not seem to express intelligently the idea.

Mr. PLUMB. Let the Secretary read it again.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw his motion. I think the bill as now amended is intelligible.

Mr. WHYTE. I withdraw the motion. I shall vote against the bill, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to recommit is withdrawn. The question is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope not. It is early in the afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 22.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken resulted—yeas 26, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—26.
Anthony,	Cameron of Pa.,	Garland,	Matthews,
Armstrong,	Cameron of Wis.,	Graver,	McMillan,
Bailey,	Coke,	Hereford,	McPherson,
Beck,	Conover,	Hill,	Morgan,
Blaine,	Davis of Illinois,	Ingalls,	Windom.
Bruce,	Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,
Burnside,	Edmunds,	Kernan,
NAYS—18.
Booth,	Harris,	Oglesby,	Saunders,
Chaffee,	Howe,	Paddock,	Spencer,
Dennis,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,	Whyte.
Eaton,	Maxey,	Rollins,
Eustis,	McCreery,	Sargent,
ABSENT—32.
Allison,	Dorsey,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Barnum,	Ferry,	McDonald,	Sharon,
Bayard,	Gordon,	Merrimon,	Teller,
Butler,	Hamlin,	Mitchell,	Thurman,
Christiancy,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Patterson,	Wadleigh,
Conkling,	Kellogg,	Randolph,	Wallace,
Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Ransom,	Withers.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and sixteen minutes, p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 16, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

J. C. M'BURNEY.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1033, for the relief of J. C. M'Burney, for reference, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

COLORADO CITIZENS GOING TO BRAZIL.

Mr. STENGER. I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill (S. No. 1080) authorizing the issue of passports free to colored citizens going to Brazil, for consideration at this time.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection, if it does not interfere with the morning hour.

Mr. MULBROW. I object, unless it is referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which such questions are usually referred for consideration.

Mr. STENGER. There is an unfair discrimination between white and colored laborers who desire to go to Brazil. Some gentlemen who have a contract for the construction of a railway in Brazil desire to take out some three hundred colored laborers, and they are compelled to pay $5 each, while white laborers are permitted to go free.

Mr. MULBROW. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STENGER. I want both to be upon the same footing, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of State to issue passports, free of charges and fees therefor, to any colored citizens of the United States who may wish to go to Brazil to engage in work upon the Madera and Mamore Railway, and suspends to that extent the provisions of section 4075 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HOOKER. This bill seems to provide merely for laborers taken to Brazil by a particular company. If the bill is proper it seems to me its provisions should be general.

Mr. STENGER. I do not know of any others who desire such legislation. It is necessary it should pass at once, so these colored laborers may be relieved from this discrimination against them.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STENGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION.

Mr. FOSTER. I move, by unanimous consent, the message from the Senate be taken from the Speaker's table and that the House agree to the conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3746) to provide for deficiencies in the appropriation for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

There was no objection; and it was agreed to accordingly.

The SPEAKER appointed, as managers of said conference on the part of the House, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. BLOUNT, and Mr. SPARKS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDEE. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will we have a morning hour after the District business is ended?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has given notice he will test the sense of the House to go into committee for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill. If that is voted down, the morning hour will then begin.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Georgia said to me the other day he would allow us to have a morning hour this morning to consider the Thurman funding bill.

Mr. HENDEE. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is it in order for me to test the sense of the House between the unfinished business and the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then I raise the question of consideration against the unfinished business. My object is to get to the Speaker's table and to reach the Thurman railroad bill.

Mr. HENDEE. We cannot stop for that now. Let us consider the District business.

The SPEAKER. The House always has it in its control to say what business it will consider.

Mr. COX, of New York. It might save some trouble if I now ask unanimous consent to fix some time when the Thurman funding bill can be taken up for action.

The SPEAKER. The way to reach that and all other bills upon the Speaker's table would be to have a morning hour and immediately after the morning hour to move to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. COX, of New York. I give notice that I will do that.

Mr. PRICE. We should understand exactly what unanimous consent means. There are a great number of bills upon the Speaker's table, some of which ought to be referred to committees for consideration.

Mr. COX, of New York. We will consider the bills in their order so as to reach the Thurman funding bill, and some may be referred and some should be disposed of.

Mr. WADDELL. There is one bill upon the Speaker's table in reference to letter carriers which with my consent will not be laid aside, but will be disposed of at this time.

Mr. COX, of New York. We will take a vote on that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Until this is settled I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] has the floor for a question of privilege.

Mr. COX, of New York. I reserve the question of consideration which I have raised.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have never yet troubled this House upon any question of a purely personal character and I would not do so now but for the fact that personally I have been misrepresented during my absence from the city in a way that reaches a public question now uppermost in the minds of the people of this country. I will send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] on Thursday last.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I find, on examining the RECORD this morning, in looking through the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] on the tariff, as published in the RECORD of this morning, April 11, that a letter which was read by the gentleman purporting to come from a manufacturing firm in the State of Michigan, Withington and another, on the subject of the manufacture here and sale abroad of agricultural implements, hay-forks, and things of that kind, and some remarks which I made in regard to that firm and these implements are entirely omitted from the RECORD. A matter that was of sufficient importance to have read at the Clerk's desk as a part of the gentleman's remarks, the entire letter, and upon which the gentleman commented and upon which I commented in the House, is entirely left out of the RECORD of the debates of this House, and the comments too are left out.

That letter, sir, from this firm in Jackson, stated that they were large manufacturers of that class of agricultural implements, and among other things stated that they had a large sale for those implements in foreign countries. It stated also that they could manufacture those implements of steel purchased from abroad—manufacture them in the State of Michigan—and send them to foreign countries to compete there with the manufactures of other countries; and that they did not desire any protection. That was substantially what the letter amounted to. It was used as an argument to this House in favor of the proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means on the tariff bill.

Now, sir, I stated to the House after the reading of that letter that this firm of manufacturers in the State of Michigan carried on their work in the penitentiary of that State; that they performed this work by convict labor in that State, at a price for that labor in the manufacture of these implements less than that at which free labor could be employed anywhere. I do not give my words, but that is the purport of them. I have tried in vain to obtain the record of my remarks as well as the copy of that letter from the manuscript of the reporters.

I also stated, what I considered a very important statement, that under the laws, which I did not read, and to the titles of which I did not refer, but which I now do—sections 3019, 3020, and 3025 of the Revised Statutes—there was a drawback upon the duties paid upon steel which should be manufactured in this country, either wholly of steel or partly of wood, when the articles were re-exported from the country lacking 10 per cent. of the drawback for the use of the Government.

Now, sir, these important statements of the gentlemen, made here in the presence of this House and going to the country as they always do and should do by those reporters who send broadcast the statements made here to influence the public mind, were all suppressed by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Wood) in his printed speech; not a single reference made to it or to my comments thereon.

I am sorry the gentleman is not here, but I say, sir, that that was a violation, a flagrant violation of the rules of the House. I do not know nor do I propose to tell whether by mistake, by accident, or by design that important omission from the RECORD was made. But I speak of it now at the earliest opportunity, and as soon as I can procure from the reporters the manuscript of the letter and of the gentleman's remarks upon it and of my comments upon it, I shall ask the privilege of the House that they be placed in the RECORD.

Mr. WOOD. On my return to the city last night my attention was called to this statement of the gentleman from Michigan made in this House last Thursday. I had left the city on Thursday morning for New York, and have not been acquainted with the proceedings of the House since I have been gone. Personally I would not have deemed this reference to myself of the least public importance—certainly not sufficiently so to warrant me in presuming upon the time of the House. But as it implies, firstly, that I had suppressed a portion of my speech and the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan; secondly, that I had an object in that suppression; and, thirdly, that he was not fairly dealt with by an omission of the RECORD to contain the remarks which he had made on that occasion—I think it necessary to make a brief statement to the House.

Now, I can assure the gentleman from Michigan that I think I am the only sufferer by the omission referred to. The letter which was read, and to which the gentleman has referred, came to me under circumstances and disappeared under circumstances which I shall relate. As early as January last a colleague of the gentleman, with whom I had no personal acquaintance, wrote me a letter inclosing a letter from this firm transacting business at Jackson, in the State of Michigan, stating that so far as they were concerned they required no protection; that they manufactured very largely; that they exported their goods to Europe; and that they were doing very well. The gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. McGOWAN,] the gentleman's colleague, indorsed in his letter to me the respectability of this firm, and gave in addition what appeared to me to be a full indorsement of the position which they had assumed. In preparing myself for the opening speech in the tariff debate, among other papers I came across this. I read it and saw that it was in the line of a discussion which I intended to pursue. But having no acquaintance with the gentleman, through my friend, his colleague, sitting on my left, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] I sought his acquaintance and sought his permission to have read as part of my speech the communication which he had sent to me. He gave it fully.

Therefore, sir, upon that occasion I had that letter read; but when I came to revise my speech the next morning the letter was missing, and everything relating to it in the proceedings of the House was missing also. The explanation that I have been enabled to receive respecting it was that after the Clerk had read the letter from the desk it was handed to the reporters of the RECORD, and has disappeared and has never been seen since, with the additional recollection on the part of the gentleman in front of me that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McGOWAN] came to the Clerk's desk and inquired for the letter before I had concluded my speech; and the presumption is that he felt he had a right to recover that letter, and as he has left the city, I presume he has taken it with him. Therefore if the letter did not appear, I am quite sure that in no way am I responsible for this omission from the RECORD, because I have never seen it since I sent it to the Clerk's desk.

But the gentleman from Michigan complains also that his remarks, which he interruptingly made at the moment of the production of that letter, were also suppressed. I will remind the gentleman his remarks were made at a time and in a way and under circumstances that did not entitle them to go into the RECORD. I did not yield to any gentleman for any remarks at that time in the course of my discussion. The gentleman did make some remarks, and although I should have freely and willingly given him the benefit of those remarks if I had given the letter itself, yet as a mere question of order under the rules the remarks were made under circumstances certainly that did not entitle them to be placed in the RECORD. But I should not have taken advantage of that circumstance. They would have gone with the letter, if the letter and the remarks themselves had ever reached me.

Now, the gentleman stated this firm in Michigan employed other workmen at 32½ cents a day. Well, sir, I will ask the Clerk to read a communication made to myself by the same firm since that debate, that the House may see what they say.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN, April 11, 1878.

DEAR SIR: It has just been brought to my attention that in the debate on the tariff bill on Tuesday you quoted my letter respecting the exportation of forks, and that Mr. CONGER, interrupting, stated that our work was done by convict labor, at 32 cents per day. There are two points to be made in answer to Mr. CONGER:

1. That his statement as to the price paid per day was made utterly at random, and is untrue. We pay 72½ cents per day.

2. If we were the only firm exporting forks, &c., there might be some point to the cry of "convict labor." The facts are, all the large and a good many of the small manufacturers of forks using free labor are exporting these goods, many of them more largely than we. We do not make, I suppose, one-sixth the forks that go out of the country.

Hence that argument falls to the ground.

I regret that you should have cited our concern specifically. It is very annoying to be brought before the public in this way, and to have our affairs—the price we pay for labor, &c., discussed and misstated.

If you answer Mr. CONGER on this point at all, I think the second point here made will be sufficient without going into the question of what we pay for labor.

For your own satisfaction, however, I send you the last State prison report. On page 33 you will find the prices paid for labor. We have two contracts; one 65, one at 72½ cents.

Please send me your speech.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. H. WITHINGTON, Treasurer.

HOB. FERNANDO WOOD,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. WOOD. I also desire to have read a communication from the Walter A. Wood Mowing and Reaping Machine Company, the largest in the world.

The Clerk read as follows:

WALTER A. WOOD MOWING AND REAPING MACHINE COMPANY,
Hoonick Falls, New York, April 11, 1878.

DEAR SIR: We inclose to you a circular letter which we have prepared to send to our brother manufacturers, which is to be accompanied with a memorial to Congress. We read with pleasure your speech on the tariff question and notice that as far as we can judge from the reports in the New York papers that a Michigan firm have sent you a letter of like effect with our own. You will see by reading that the circular letter is intended for manufacturers, but we send it to you to be used. In the mean time we shall take pleasure in sending you the responses of other makers as we receive them.

Yours, respectfully,

WALTER A. WOOD M. & R. M. CO.
Per J. RUSSELL PARSONS, Vice-President.

HOB. FERNANDO WOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WOOD. That communication contains a long circular communication in which it is clearly and plainly stated that they desired no protection whatever, and that they want really a reduction on the duties. Now I send an additional communication from the next largest establishment in the United States engaged in this business, the Tuttle Manufacturing Company of Naugatuck, Connecticut.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAUGATUCK, CONNECTICUT, April 10, 1878.

TO THE COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS,
House of Representatives:

We notice in the report of yesterday's House proceedings that Mr. WOOD, chairman of Ways and Means, informed the House that a manufacturer of hay-forks at Jackson, Michigan, had written him to the effect that they needed no protection, and that their business was able to compete with foreign manufacturers not only in the home markets but also in the foreign markets.

We notice also that Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, is said to have asserted that the work of the Jackson firm was done by convicts who were paid at the rate of thirty-two cents per day.

The inference sought to be drawn by Mr. CONGER's remark is that the Jackson manufacturer could not successfully compete in the foreign markets unless he employed convict labor at thirty-two cents per day.

This inference is wholly unwarranted. The Jackson firm is not the only firm who are exporting forks. Nor are the forks that are exported all made by convict labor. We are exporting largely of all kinds of forks, and to almost every civilized country on the globe, and we use no convict labor. We think that almost every manufacturer of forks in the country, of any repute, is exporting forks, or rather manufacturing them for the export trade, and this whether they are manufacturing by convict labor or not. We think that during the twelve months last past fifty thousand dozen of forks have been exported, and the quantity may be much greater.

These forks are made almost exclusively of American materials. We can think of no single article of foreign growth or production that is used in their manufacture except Turkish emery.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

TUTTLE MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. WOOD. But one other point made by the gentleman from Michigan to which I desire to refer is the Michigan firm that he referred to as being able to export their manufactured articles in consequence of drawback they had received on the raw material. If the gentleman had read the bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, he would have found in the fourth section of that bill a provision giving to all manufacturers of every class and grade the benefit of a drawback upon all raw materials that are dutiable and that enter into the construction of the articles they manufacture. The law, as it now stands, gives to a few classes of manufacturers the right to a drawback upon articles imported which enter into the construction of their manufactures, but this bill as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means gives to the manufacturer of every character and class a drawback on all the component elements that are of foreign production on which is paid a duty, thus conferring on the manufacturers an advantage, which, under the existing law, they do not possess.

It was not my intention to make any argument on this point but simply to set the gentleman correct as to the fact that it was not my intention to suppress anything in the speech which I had the honor to make a short time since.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent of the House to be heard for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from Michigan will proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I can hardly express the gratification I feel that the occasion of suppressing a few remarks made by the gentleman from New York, and a letter which he read and some comments which I made upon that letter, has given rise to the comments throughout the country which I have seen on that transaction, and especially that it has shown the necessity to the gentleman from New York not only to make his explanation on that little incident, but to fortify the position which he assumed in the remarks that were not printed by an accumulation of documents sent to him by different manufacturers in the country endeavoring to sustain the position he has taken against the common, general opinion of the people of the United States.

Now, sir, the matter to which I called attention was a very simple one; it was to a matter which I thought affected the rights and interests of every member upon this floor, and incidentally the interests and rights of the people of this country.

As I understand it they are entitled to have all the proceedings of this House reported by the reporters go into the RECORD for the benefit of the members and for reference by the people of the country if desired. I took occasion on reading the RECORD in which I found the gentleman's speech, and from which the letter, his remarks, and my remarks had been eliminated, at the first opportunity on the proper occasion to call the attention of the House to it. But noticing the absence of the gentleman from New York, I then said that in his absence I would not proceed further, but that when I could procure from the reporters the manuscript copy of the official proceedings I should ask that they might be placed upon the record. That occasion has come and I am gratified that the remarks this morning explanatory, exculpatory, and excusing, not the elimination of those remarks from the RECORD, but excusing the gentleman for having made the remarks, have preceded what I have to say.

I send to the Clerk's desk, as I had proposed to do, the manuscript handed to me by the reporters of the proceedings to which I refer.

The Clerk read as follows:

A member of this House sitting upon the other side, whose permission I asked yesterday to refer to it in my speech, sent to me as early as January last a letter inclosing a letter from a large manufacturing firm in Michigan, which I will ask the Clerk to read, to show how much these industries are disturbed by our tariff legislation.

Mr. CONGER. At this point the letter should have been inserted, but I send to the Clerk's desk the residue of the report and ask that it be read. When I can get that letter I shall also ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York one question: Does he not know that the gentlemen named here have a drawback upon all the steel which they put in their forks and in their hardware; and it is made by convict labor in our State's prison at the rate, I think, of thirty-two cents per day for the "skilled labor?"

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan will no doubt avail himself, as he threatened to do to-day, of every possible opportunity to be heard in order or out of order upon this subject.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman object to the interruption?

Mr. WOOD. I object to all interruptions. The gentleman announced to-day that, in order or out of order, he intended to antagonize this bill. Now I hope he will not be out of order on this occasion.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is proceeding by the courtesy of the House beyond his time.

Mr. WOOD. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. CONGER. Then I call time on the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan cannot do that. The time of the gentleman from New York having been extended by unanimous consent, he is entitled to occupy his additional hour. The Chair will announce the expiration of the hour, and then the gentleman from Michigan can object to any further extension.

Mr. CONGER. I have had the opportunity of saying all I desired to.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, besides the paper that has just been read I have several statements from different sections of the United States from very large manufacturing establishments, not subjected to the courtesies of my friend from Michigan, that are not only quite contented with this bill but are earnestly praying for its passage; and those gentlemen who assume in this House to be par excellence the exclusive friends of the workmen will probably find that the workmen will not appreciate their voluntary service in this direction.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I also send to the Clerk's desk a letter from the Withington & Cooley Manufacturing Company, of Jackson, Michigan, which I ask to have read and inserted in my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF WITHINGTON & COOLEY MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Jackson, Michigan, April 11, 1878.

DEAR SIR: I have just seen that in the debate on the tariff bill Tuesday you stated that the work of our concern was done by convict labor at thirty-two cents per day. So far as the price is concerned that was a random statement, and very wide of the truth. We pay more than twice that sum.

Your statement that we used convict labor is utterly pointless in view of the fact that six times as many forks made by free labor are exported than of those made by convict labor.

If you undertake to comment upon our business before the public, in justice to the argument and in justice to us pray take some pains to acquire the facts.

[Laughter.]

I am annoyed that Mr. WOOD should have made specific mention of us at all. Truly yours,

Hon. O. D. CONGER,
Washington, D. C.

W. H. WITHINGTON, Treasurer.

Mr. CONGER. In justice to Mr. Withington I have sent up his letter to have it put upon the record. He admits all that I desire to state here, that this firm having a monopoly of the business, sent to the Congress of the United States to be read by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means the letter which I believe they asked Mr. McGOWAN to present to the committee, placing before the committee and the people the fact that they can make this class of agricultural implements and export them to foreign countries at a profit; and to-day by a parity of reasoning the rest of the laborers of the United States need no protection for their labor without adding that it was convict labor which they employed.

The main point I made against them (and these gentlemen must have understood it if they read the report) was that they had a drawback on the manufactured material when these implements were made and sold. They did not allude to that, nor does the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] allude to it then or now. Whether they pay thirty-two cents or sixty-two cents or seventy-five cents per day for this prison labor, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] did not say that it was convict labor. I stated that fact to the House; it is admitted that it was convict labor. It is admitted that sixty-two and a half or seventy-five cents a day is paid for skilled labor upon the manufacture of agricultural implements described in that letter, which not only are sold all over the United States but may be exported at so great a profit to foreign countries that these gentlemen need no protection under the law for their manufactures. That is the point.

Now, sir, the convict labor in that State prison is of two kinds: one where the State boards the convict and the other where the contractor boards the convict. These gentlemen do not say whether the State boards their convicts for which they pay sixty-two and a half or seventy-five cents a day. The price of labor used to range from about thirty to forty-five cents a day where the contractor boarded his own men. If the State boarded them, as is probable in this case, (although I cannot state anything about it of my own knowledge,) they pay a higher price. But either way, who will go before the country and claim that, because a manufacturer can use convict labor even at the highest price, seventy-five cents a day for that peculiar skilled labor necessary for the manufacture of these delicately finished articles, therefore no protection is necessary to the laborers of the United States?

But, as I said, the principal point in the whole matter is this; and before I send up to have read the law about drawbacks, I desire to call the attention of the House to the next communication with which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] fortified himself, a communication, if I understood aright, from the Walter A. Wood Mowing-Machine Company; I think in Albany or in Troy; I am told that it is at Hoosick Falls, near Troy. They manufacture mowing-machines, and have sent up here their approval to strengthen and sustain the gentleman from New York in what I must call his unwarranted attack upon the free labor of the United States. Now what are they? They are manufacturers of mowing-machines. How are they protected? They are protected, first, by a patent, so that on the broad face of this whole earth everybody else is forbidden to make that kind of manufacture. They have an absolute monopoly under the law. No other manufacturer in America, in Canada, in England, in France, in Germany, in any civilized nation of the world, can manufacture one of these mowing-machines.

They are the men, with an absolute monopoly by patent in this country and abroad, who come here and tell the free laborers of the United States that there is no need of protection for their labor. What greater protection can be given a particular article than the absolute and sole right of manufacturing it and selling it? I commend the gentleman for having produced this beautiful illustration of his tariff theory.

But they not only have a monopoly secured by patent, but from the necessity of the case there can be no possible competition here or elsewhere. As I said before, in the whole broad world nobody else can make that mowing-machine but themselves. Secured by the laws of the United States and by the Constitution of the United States, by the letters-patent of Her Majesty and of all the other governments, they stand protected from all competition from any possible source.

Ah, if they would rest there the other poor laborers of this country not thus protected might possibly not complain; but the laws of the United States, in addition to all this protection, have thrown around them, in common with others, a protection by allowing them a drawback upon all the steel and iron upon which they have paid duties, and which enters so largely into their manufactures. I ask the Clerk to read sections 3019, 3020, and 3025 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3019. There shall be allowed on all articles wholly manufactured of materials imported, on which duties have been paid when exported, a drawback equal in amount to the duty paid on such materials, and no more, to be ascertained under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Ten per cent. on the amount of all drawbacks so allowed shall, however, be retained for the use of the United States by the collectors paying such drawbacks respectively.

SEC. 3020. Where fire-arms, scales, balances, shovels, spades, axes, hatchets, hammers, plows, cultivators, mowing-machines, and reapers, manufactured with stocks or handles made of wood grown in the United States, are exported for benefit of drawback under the preceding section, such articles shall be entitled to such drawback in all cases when the imported material exceeds one-half of the value of the material used.

SEC. 3025. No return of the duties shall be allowed on the export of any merchandise after it has been removed from the custody and control of the Government, except in the cases provided in sections 3019, 3020, 3022, and 3026.

Mr. CONGER. Now, when I say that no one else can manufacture the articles that are thus protected by patents in this country, I mean they cannot manufacture them freely. These men having the patent may permit, and I am informed they do permit for a royalty paid them, varying from $20 to $50 a machine, the manufacture of the articles by others.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to ask the Chair if on a question of personal explanation any member of this House has the right to go into a general discussion of any question. I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to be making a speech in advocacy of the principle of protection. I desire to know whether or not that is in order upon a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CONGER. If I may say a word upon that point, I think I have not wandered at all from the strict line of reply and the continuation of the remarks which I claimed the right to make when I before arose to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair always, on application of gentlemen to be heard on a question of personal privilege, recognizes them to be heard. But the Chair takes it for granted that members upon such occasions will be brief in their statements and will discuss pointedly the matters of which they complain. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Wood] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and all the other members will at once see that if this discussion or any like discussion is allowed to run on the regular business of the House will be seriously interrupted.

Mr. CONGER. I had said, Mr. Speaker, what I thought it my privilege and my duty to say upon this subject, both in reply to what has been said to-day by the gentleman from New York and also upon the matter of the elimination from the RECORD of remarks which were made on a former day. I shall take some other occasion—I did not intend to-day to do more than make the statement I have made—I shall take some other occasion to comment more particularly upon the points and positions taken by the gentleman from New York. With what I have read, with the law which has been read, with the gentleman's remarks which members have heard, I am perfectly willing to submit to the House the question of the wrong of omitting from the RECORD those remarks of the gentleman from New York and myself, even if the letter itself could not be found. And I desire to raise here distinctly the question, and have it understood by the House and decided by the Chair, whether remarks made in this House can be left out of their place in the RECORD by the reporters, by gentlemen having charge of their remarks when written out, or by any person; for that is the point to which I rose on a former occasion.

Mr. O'NEILL. Without desiring to intrude upon the House, I would like the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wood]—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to a question of personal privilege?

Mr. O'NEILL. I rise to a personal complaint growing out of this question of personal privilege. I shall occupy but one moment.

Mr. HENDEE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. O'NEILL. I want only a moment to ask the gentleman from New York if he will permit me to remind him of another omission in his speech, and I think he will be glad to be reminded of it. I refer to the threat which he made to this House as to following up the tariff bill at the next session of Congress. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Whenever the case arises in which the Chair shall be called upon to decide the point suggested by the gentleman from Michigan whether a member can, without the consent of another member who occupies the floor, thrust in remarks and have them printed in the RECORD, the Chair will be prepared to give his ruling.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not wish to thrust in remarks; but the gentleman from New York made a threat as to what he would do in the future—

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not alluding to anything which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not want the House to forget that threat, for I want to make a speech in reply to that part of the gentleman's remarks, which has been omitted from his printed speech.

The SPEAKER. The Chair made no remarks touching what the gentleman from Pennsylvania had said.

Mr. O'NEILL. I understand that. But I want the gentleman from New York to put in his speech or somewhere in the RECORD the threat he made to this House that at the next session of Congress he would push his free-trade doctrines to a successful issue, even if he should fail now. I present this as a personal complaint of my own, for I wish to reply to that part of the gentleman's speech. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see that everything the gentleman from Pennsylvania says goes into the RECORD.

CIRCUIT COURT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Mr. SOUTHARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4316) to confer special jurisdiction upon the circuit court of the northern district of Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 484) to authorize the construction of a bridge abutment and approach within the Fort Riley military reservation; and

An act (S. No. 1014) requiring the commissioner for preparing and publishing a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States to revise and perfect the index to the first volume of the same.

JOHN M. HICKEY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Civil-Service Reform:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to pay John M. Hickey, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, the sum of $109.94 for services due and unpaid while acting as messenger in the Forty-fifth Congress.

JOHN W. DOUGLASS.

On motion of Mr. THOMPSON, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 55) for the relief of John W. Douglass was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TOPEKA, KANSAS.

On motion of Mr. RYAN, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 180) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office, United States circuit and district courts, and other Government offices at Topeka, Kansas, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, the bill for the formation of a government for the District of Columbia. This bill is being considered in the House as if in Committee of the Whole; and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will take the chair.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a question of privilege. As to this and a number of other important bills I wish to say that I have tried in vain to secure copies of them. I am informed that copies of bills have not been placed on our files for three or four weeks past for want of sticks and cords. It occurs to me that some way ought to be devised by which members may get copies of bills coming up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing about that matter.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I want to bring it to the attention of the Chair, because it is useless for us to attempt to do business here unless we can have copies of the bills coming before us.

PENSION BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. RICE,] chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, desires the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] to yield for a few moments in order that such pension bills as are on the Speaker's table may be taken up and referred. This request is made in view of the fact that this evening and the two succeeding evenings have been assigned for the reporting and consideration of pension bills.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. That is my special reason for the request.

There was no objection, and the following bills were taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

A bill (S. No. 76) granting a pension to Mary Ann McFarland;

A bill (S. No. 221) granting a pension to Mary Kirby Smith Eaton during her widowhood;

A bill (S. No. 287) granting a pension to John C. Hughes, late private in Company N, Marine Regiment United States Volunteers;

A bill (S. No. 535) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Gardner;

A bill (S. No. 547) granting a pension to Caroline M. Egbert;

A bill (S. No. 663) granting a pension to William H. H. Buck;

A bill (S. No. 687) granting a pension to William H. Bagley;

A bill (S. No. 869) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Wilkes, widow of the late Admiral Charles Wilkes, United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 870) granting a pension to Rebecca and Augusta Miller, daughters of Brigadier-General Miller, of the war of 1812;

A bill (S. No. 871) granting a pension to William Emerson;

A bill (S. No. 872) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann M. Steele;

A bill (S. No. 874) granting a pension to Albert Richardson, late of Company A, Twelfth Indiana Volunteers;
 A bill (S. No. 929) granting a pension to Hiram Howard;
 A bill (S. No. 930) granting a pension to Mary B. Marsh; and A bill (S. No. 931) granting a pension to James Shields.

EL PASO TROUBLE.

Mr. MILLS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to this House copies of the majority and minority reports of the commission appointed to investigate the El Paso troubles in Texas, and copies of all evidence taken by said commission, at as early a day as possible.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution (H. R. No. 159) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and to move its reference to the Committee on War Claims as it refers to such matters. There may be a time when we shall desire to refer it to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I ask for its reading.

The SPEAKER. It is a joint resolution proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. KEIFER. In relation to the payment of claims. It may be read if gentlemen desire it.

The SPEAKER. If documents introduced are read it will cut out gentlemen who desire to ask unanimous consent, as the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] has only yielded five minutes for that purpose.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, then, it will be read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I have asked for the reading of that paper, and I insist it be read or be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont yielded for five minutes to allow members to ask unanimous consent for introduction of bills which they did not have the opportunity of doing yesterday, and the reading of this paper which has been objected to will take up a greater part of that five minutes. The joint resolution will be printed in the usual form and gentlemen can get it in the morning in the document-room.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I am as pertinacious, Mr. Speaker, in asking to have that joint resolution read as the gentleman who objects to its being printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of both Houses concurring therein,) That the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part thereof, viz:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. Congress shall have no power to appropriate money for the payment of any claim against the United States, not created in pursuance of or previously authorized by law, international treaty, or award, except in payment of a final judgment rendered thereon by a court or tribunal having competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. Congress shall establish a court of claims to consist of five justices, one of whom shall be chief justice, with such original jurisdiction as may be conferred on it by law, in cases involving claims against the United States, and with such other original jurisdiction as may be provided by law, and Congress may also confer on any other of the courts of the United States, inferior to the Supreme Court, original jurisdiction in like case.

SEC. 3. All legislation other than such as refers exclusively to the appropriation of money in any appropriation act of Congress shall be void, except such as may prescribe the terms or conditions upon which the money thereby appropriated shall be paid or received.

Mr. LUTTRELL. That ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEIFER. It is proposed to refer it there after first being considered by the Committee on War Claims. There are reasons why it should be referred first to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I make that motion to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LUTTRELL's motion was disagreed to; and the joint resolution was then referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF NEW ORLEANS HARBOR.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4317) for the protection and improvement of the harbor at New Orleans; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBSON. I move by unanimous consent that the report of the board of engineers touching the same subject be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MODIFICATION OF PATENT LAWS.

Mr. BALLOU, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the resolution of the House of April 2, "that 5,000 copies of the arguments and statements before the Senate and House Committees on Patents upon the bill to amend the statutes in relation to patents, and for other purposes, (H. R. No. 1612 and S. No. 300,) be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, as follows: 500 copies for the use of the Committee on Patents, House of Representatives, and 4,500 for the House of Representatives," with a substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the arguments and statements before the Senate and House Committees on Patents upon the bill to amend the statutes in relation to patents, and for other purposes, (H. R. No. 1612 and S. No. 300,) be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, to be distributed as follows: 3 copies to each Member and Delegate in said House and the remainder for the use of the Committee on Patents of the House.

The substitute was adopted; and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BALLOU moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION.

Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Mississippi Levees, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4318) to provide for the organization of "the Mississippi River improvement commission," and for the creation, permanent location, and deepening of the channel, and the improvement of the navigation of said Mississippi River and the protection of its alluvial lands; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Mississippi Levees, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Several members called for the regular order.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called, the House resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will take the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HALE.) The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] to strike out the eighth section as amended on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HANNA.] The Clerk will report the section, as amended, which it is proposed to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest accruing on the 3.65 per cent. bonds of the District of Columbia as the same mature, and the amounts so paid shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District, as herein provided: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to commit the Government to the payment of the principal of said bonds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion to strike out the section as amended the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BEEBE. Would a motion to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays be entertained by the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair in regard to that would follow the ruling of the present Speaker of the House and would entertain the motion.

Mr. BEEBE. Then I make the motion that the vote ordering the yeas and nays be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs, will the House order the yeas and nays on the motion to strike out the eighth section as amended?

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were yeas 13; not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to move an amendment to the section before the vote is taken on striking it out.

Mr. HENDEE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Was not the vote taken on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the eighth section as amended, and was not the motion declared to be lost?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It undoubtedly was.

Mr. HENDEE. Then there can be no necessity for voting upon that question again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BEEBE. Then I offer my proposition to amend the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in order.

Mr. BEEBE. I offer the following amendment:

In line 1 of section 8 strike out the word "hereafter" and insert in lieu thereof the words "until otherwise provided by law."

I offer this amendment to meet the objection which was made to this section yesterday. I have consulted with many friends of the bill, and I believe that if this amendment is carried it will materially improve the chances of the passage of the bill. The objection was made yesterday that section 8 as it now stands is forever an irreparable provision, because the rights of the holders of these bonds would intervene and assume the nature of vested rights and prevent the Congress of the United States in the future from ever making any other provision with reference to the payment of the interest on these bonds.

I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the provision as it stands, provided that if in the future it proves unwise there may be retained in the power of the law-making authority of this country the right to amend or change the provision and resort to a new policy in this regard. The insertion of these words will not affect the working of this section at all. Some gentlemen may say that the provision is repealable as it now stands, and there is at least a question as to the power of Congress to repeal this; and if we put these words in, we remove that. Certainly Congress ought to reserve to itself the right to change this policy at any time if in the wisdom of Congress it should hereafter be deemed unwise.

Mr. WILSON. How will the section read if the gentleman's amendment is adopted?

Mr. BEEBE. It will then read:

That until otherwise provided by law the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest accruing on the 3.65 per cent. bonds of the District of Columbia as the same matures, &c.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HENDEE. One word in reply to the gentleman from New York. It is very well known that the question of whether the United States should take care of the interest on these bonds has been discussed fully at all sessions of Congress since the creation of the bonds. All parties, as I understand, admit the fact that the United States has guaranteed as strongly as it can guarantee that this interest shall be paid. Upon one occasion, two years ago I think, the Government defaulted because the Appropriations Committee did not pass a bill with that provision in it for the payment of interest until after the interest matured, so that these bonds were affected in their value more or less from that very fact. One defaultation very much depreciated the value of the bonds.

Now, these bonds are not held, as was said yesterday, by shysters and all sorts of men who deal in them as a matter of speculation. I have the list which shows that they are held all over the country—in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, New York, and in the Western States—owned by thousands of people: guardians, insurance companies, trust companies for the benefit of depositors; and now it seems to me wise that we should settle the question whether the Government will, as the interest matures for each six months, pay that interest.

Now, as I understand this section, it is not so drawn or so constructed that, if Congress hereafter sees fit to change it or repudiate it entirely, it has not that power.

Mr. BEEBE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDEE. Certainly.

Mr. BEEBE. If the power is still reserved to the Government, what objection can the gentleman have then to having it clearly provided in this section?

Mr. HENDEE. This is the objection: that, every Congress when questions come up as to the District of Columbia and what shall be done for the District of Columbia and as to the bonds, they will refer to this section as leaving the matter still in the hands of Congress. The question will never be settled so long as we leave it open. Now I think it is a duty we owe to the holders of these bonds, which are held by all our constituents, women, widows, children, and wards, as the record shows, that we should settle the question and settle it forever, and the interest should be taken care of. I look at it as a matter of business rather than in any other light.

Mr. BEEBE. Does not the gentleman understand that even if the amendment be adopted it will become the affirmative duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the interest just as if we left the section as it now stands?

Mr. HENDEE. Undoubtedly; and I only wish to have the section settled by this act, so that we shall have no future legislation on the subject; and I say further that the Committee for the District of Columbia were unanimous in the wording of this section, so as to simply take care of the interest and carry out faithfully the pledge of the United States Government. I ask for a vote.

The question was taken upon Mr. BEEBE's amendment; and, on a division, there were—ayes 28, noes 68.

Mr. BEEBE. No quorum has voted, and I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As no quorum has voted the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. BEEBE and Mr. HENDEE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 39, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of April, 1878, the board of Metropolitan police and all boards of fire commissioners and boards of school-trustees shall be abolished; and all the powers and duties now exercised by them shall be transferred to the said commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall have authority to employ such officers and agents and to adopt such provisions as may be necessary to carry into execution the powers and duties devolved upon them by this act.

The Committee for the District of Columbia reported the following amendment to be added to the section just read:

Provided, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint nineteen persons, actual residents of said District of Columbia, of whom five at least shall be of the colored race, to constitute the trustees of public schools of said District, who shall serve without compensation and for such terms as said commissioners shall fix. Said trustees shall have the powers and perform the duties in relation to the care and management of the public schools which are now exercised by and vested in the board of trustees of public schools for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment of the committee just read. This bill has been already passed upon in many of its details without, I think, proper consideration, and I want to call the attention of the House to the principle established in some preceding sections that I consider entirely improper and that no democratic House ought to commit itself to. I refer to the property qualification.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that the section last read by the Clerk is the only part of the bill under consideration, and that the matter to which the gentleman from Ohio proposes to address himself is not found in that section.

Mr. McMAHON. I wish to say that the section now under consideration proposes that colored men have a right to be appointed to certain offices, and I propose to show that there is a previous provision inserted requiring a property qualification that would not only exclude colored men but most white men also from holding an office.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask if that provision is to be found in this section.

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I insist upon my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot tell what will be the line of remarks pursued by the gentleman from Ohio if he should go on; and the Chair can only say that if the gentleman from Kentucky raising the point of order insists upon it the gentleman from Ohio will have to confine himself, in anything he may say, to the consideration of this section just read and to the amendment proposed to it by the committee.

Mr. McMAHON. I propose to do so as far as it is possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman does that he will be in order.

Mr. McMAHON. I think that I can make my remarks in order. The committee has just offered an amendment providing that colored persons may under certain circumstances be appointed to certain places. This is a correct principle; but the commissioners who are to be appointed must be possessed of $5,000 in property before they can serve. And every one of the twenty-four councilmen to be elected by the people must be worth at least $3,000. This is all wrong. I do not care what the peculiar situation of this District may be; it is not more peculiar than many parts of our country. But if it was there is no apology for adopting so obnoxious a principle that a man cannot be a commissioner or councilman without being worth $3,000 or $5,000 in money or property. This is a discrimination that ought never to be permitted to creep into our legislation under any pretense or excuse whatever. I shall vote against the whole bill if these provisions are retained; and I hope that our democratic friends will not sanction so undemocratic a proposition. A property qualification is an insult to the laboring classes and is contrary to our notions of a republican form of government.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now ask, under the point of order, whether the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] is discussing the section before the House.

Mr. McMAHON. Well, I am through. [Laughter.] I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CLAFIN. I move further to amend the section by striking out the word "April" and inserting the word "July," so that it will read "that from and after the first day of July, 1878, the board of metropolitan police, &c, shall be abolished."

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being made to section 15, section 16 was read as follows:

SEC. 16. That it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to report to Congress at the next session succeeding their appointment a draft of such additional laws or amendments to existing laws as seem to be needed for the harmonious working of the system hereby adopted, and for the effectual and proper government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDEE. I move to amend the section just read by adding to it these words:

And said commissioners shall annually report their official doings in detail to Congress on or before the first Monday of December.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I move to insert after the section last read that which I send to the Clerk's desk, as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. The commissioners are hereby authorized in their discretion to purchase, or acquire by condemnation, a sufficient quantity of land adjoining or adjacent to the almshouse of the District, and to erect thereon suitable buildings for the accommodation of the paupers resident in the District; and shall provide for the removal of needy and worthy persons thereto, and so provide for the same that it shall not be longer necessary for the poor to beg upon the streets. And the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry this provision into effect.

Mr. FORT. I have but a word to say in support of this amendment. I believe there is hardly a county in the United States but what has a poor-farm or an almshouse to which the poor of that county may be conveyed and where they may be cared for. I believe experience has taught that this is the best way to provide for the poor.

You have but to walk from this Capitol to any part of the city to meet arguments in favor of this amendment. I question whether there is a city in the world, certainly none in the United States, in which you are so often accosted by the beggar as you are in this city, and it is impossible to know whether that beggar is worthy or unworthy. Sometimes the beggar appears in the shape of a little colored boy, sometimes a little white boy; sometimes a little colored girl and sometimes a little white girl; sometimes an old person, and sometimes a person hale and hearty.

It seems to me that the authorities of this city should take care of those who are worthy, and then we may know to whom to give alms. I have nothing special to say in reference to the amendment except that I think there ought to be no possible objection to it. In my judgment it is the cheapest way in which we can care for the needy, to provide a home for them, a farm if you please with suitable buildings upon it, to which they can be conveyed, and where they can be cared for, and if they know that they have to stop begging or to go there, they will be apt if they are needy to go to that place, and if not, they will stop begging upon the streets as they now do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] will not be adopted. In the first place it is inconsistent with the provisions of this bill. One section of this bill requires that no contract involving the expenditure of money shall be made except by the unanimous action of the three commissioners, and then that the contract shall not go into effect until it is submitted to the council and approved by the council which is provided for in a previous section. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois ignores the approval of the council altogether, which constitutes one of the essential features of this bill. For that reason it ought not to be adopted.

Again, there are to-day divers bills pending before the Committee for the District of Columbia asking authority for the commissioners to buy certain property designated in this city for the purpose of public buildings. None of them have met the approval of the committee and, in my judgment, none of them will meet the approval of this House.

This is a bill establishing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. It is in no sense of the term a bill covering matters of special legislation. If the Congress of the United States proposes to authorize the commissioners to purchase property for public buildings it ought to be done in a separate bill, ought not to be incorporated in a bill of such general features, of such general character, as the one now under consideration.

Again, if Congress determines to authorize the commissioners to make certain expenditures of money, unless they are to depart from all precedents hitherto established, there ought to be some maximum fixed of the amount. This amendment does not do that.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman is mistaken; this amendment proposes to appropriate $50,000 out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not catch the figures in the amendment as it was read.

Mr. FORT. The money does not come out of the District at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand that point of the gentleman's amendment; but I do not think from the very statement he makes, which is that it does not come out of the District at all, that it should be incorporated into and made a section of a bill which is general in its character and refers alone to the District of Columbia. His amendment makes an appropriation. If that is to be done, I take it that it ought to be submitted to the Committee on Appropriations for its consideration and recommendation. Therefore from every stand-point from which this amendment can be regarded it seems to me that it would be unwise to incorporate it into this bill.

Mr. FORT. Allow me to ask the gentleman why he incorporates into this bill a provision in relation to the bonded debt of the District, if it is merely a bill to govern the District?

Mr. WRIGHT. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] will move to appropriate $50,000 to provide the means of getting these people upon the public domain I will vote him his $50,000 and duplicate it. I am tired of hearing the idea held out in this country that the only relief that we can give to the poor is to build prisons and poor-houses.

We have in this land an army of paupers numbered by millions. The remedy resorted to by the States seems to be to increase their prisons, to build additional almshouses and other places to dole out food to a famished population.

I do not object of course to an appropriation of money to buy property upon which to erect buildings to take care of the poor. But you must do something else to take care of the poor in this country. You have broad acres. Locate them there. The money you pay to provide them lodgings in almshouses will carry them to your Western lands and help them to a start when they get there.

Mr. FORT. Is the gentleman referring now to able-bodied paupers or to the poor and needy who are unable to work?

Mr. WRIGHT. Your disabled men accumulate upon your hands at the rate of 50 per cent. a month, because they are in a state of starvation.

Mr. FORT. Many of these needy persons in this District are little children, who cannot go West; and if there they could not earn a livelihood.

Mr. WRIGHT. Heaven protect them! So far as this House is concerned there seems little hope.

When I came to this House last October I heard the expectation expressed outside, if not inside this House, that Congress was going to do something to relieve the condition of the starving population of the country. We have been here nearly five months, but we have not yet done the first thing for the relief of the starving poor; and my judgment is that Congress is going to adjourn without an effort to do anything for the relief of the country. Look at the statistics and you will see that over two millions of men are out of employment in this land.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly. I am here to be badgered by anybody that wants to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Is not the gentleman aware that we have a tariff bill pending which is intended to relieve the distress of the country?

Mr. WRIGHT. And what kind of a tariff bill is it? It is pretended that it is to increase the revenues; but I say it will reduce the revenues of the country. Of all times this is the last when you should agitate a change of the tariff. The country is in a state of disquietude and want; your public industries are all paralyzed. To introduce a tariff bill now only adds to the agitation and makes things worse. I suppose we shall go on perhaps for the next two weeks discussing this tariff bill. But the people do not want it. I will venture to say that there is not upon your tables a petition coming from the people of the country asking that there be a change in the revenue laws. I will venture to say that there is not a desk in this Hall that does not contain letters upon letters begging Congress not to interfere with that question. Now, [addressing Mr. DUNNELL,] are you satisfied with my answer?

Mr. DUNNELL. Perfectly.

Mr. WRIGHT. Now, if you will join me—

Mr. REED, (addressing Mr. WRIGHT, who spoke from the republican side of the House.) You carry this part of your audience with you.

Mr. WRIGHT. I came over here in order to get some encouragement. [Laughter.] If you are satisfied with that answer and agree with me, I will join you and the majority of this House in putting an end to the discussion upon that tariff bill mighty quick. [Laughter.] When the attention of Congress is called to the consideration of a change in the tariff laws by petition, then it is our duty to listen to and obey the popular will, but in heaven's name do not disturb the business of the country with an agitation of this kind, when it is in a worse condition than it has been at any period for the last twenty years. Cannot you permit the men who are engaged in the industries of the country to have a voice in the formation of laws which not only affect them, but the whole country? Is it the part of wisdom to keep them in a constant state of alarm? They know not whether to stop or proceed; how to buy or how to sell. Better for the trade and prosperity of the people did Congress never assemble. The body is an element to disturb. It cannot be content to let well enough alone. Trade, manufactures, labor, and all the industries are the mere sport of political adventure. It is stability and a disposition not to change that assures prosperity and gives labor to the unemployed, because our people engaged in the industries know the situation and conform to it. Constant change means constant trouble, and why should Congress desire to volunteer in a matter about which it knows so little?

Mr. FORT. I did not know that this was a free-trade amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, sir, these remarks are in reply to a question put to me on your side of the House. [Laughter.] Now, gentlemen on this side must not indulge the hope, because I have come over here to make a speech, that I have abandoned my colors or changed my political situation. [Laughter.] I shake hands with gentlemen on this side when they join me in opposition to a tariff bill that contains in it no feature which can afford relief. Upon that subject I am with them honestly, fearlessly, and earnestly; and for the reason, as Webster said on one occasion, that no voice has come up from the land or the sea asking for a change or an interference with regard to the revenues of this country by the introduction of a bill to remodel the tariff. There has been no such application. No petition, so far as I understand, has come from the people of this country asking for a change of the tariff. [Cries of "That is so!"]

Mr. DWIGHT. Is not this change proposed by the democratic majority of this House?

Mr. WRIGHT. I have no hand nor part nor lot in it. That I assure the gentleman of. If any gentleman in this House has received a petition asking for interference by Congress with regard to the revenue laws, let him rise in his place and tell me so.

Mr. MONEY. I have.

Mr. WRIGHT. You have!

Mr. KELLEY. I desire as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means to say that I have not heard of any such petition from any citizen of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WRIGHT.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have not spoken to the question yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether it is the District of Columbia bill or the tariff bill that is under discussion.

Mr. WRIGHT. Both. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I make the point of order that one of them is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has yielded his time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WRIGHT,] who will confine his remarks to the pending amendment.

Mr. CONGER. On the point of order I desire to say that this amendment proposes to make an appropriation of $50,000; and in considering it, it becomes every one to know that if the pending tariff bill is insisted upon and passed, we shall have no $50,000 to give for this purpose. [Laughter.]

Mr. WRIGHT. My friend from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] has stated, in corroboration of what I said, that no petition has been sent up from any part of this country asking any interference or intermeddling with the revenue laws. Gentlemen who would agitate the change do so of their own accord. They are acting without authority. It is on their part a plunge in the dark. They do not know what they are attempting to do. I hope there is determination and courage enough in this House to prevent the accomplishment of what they would do. It is no time for experiments.

Now, let me turn around to wise legislators, [turning round to the republican side of the House amid great laughter and applause,] let me turn around to you wise legislators on the other side. [Laughter.] Let me ask you whether you want to embark in a measure, the consequences of which are further to disarrange our business men, and further, throw out of employment the workingmen of our country. Why, sir, half the business men in this nation within the last three years have passed through the bankrupt laws. [Laughter.] Yes, sir, half the business men, the men of capital; and now they have passed a law repealing the bankrupt law for the purpose of preventing the other half from availing themselves of the benefit of it. [Laughter.]

Why, sir, no country can stand this system of legislation. As I have said, it becomes wise men to examine into those subjects upon which the popular masses of the land send up a voice in favor of action. Are we wiser men, because we happen to hold certificates of our election in our pockets, than they who elected us to these seats? I tell you that the constituents in more than three-fourths of the districts represented upon this floor are adverse and opposed to any further agitation upon this question, and especially so at this time. The letters I receive from my district are not merely asking me to oppose all changes in the tariff, but are generally headed with a prayer, "Pray help us in this emergency; pray do not put us in a position of uncertainty and totally destroy our business matters and make them worse than they were in before your body assembled." I assume when a measure has been duly considered by the people of the land and it comes up here for our action then it is our duty to take hold of it and dispose of it like men. But it is not our province to speculate with regard to imaginary difficulties some of us may have in regard to certain measures and make the feeble attempt to alter and change. I say to you, sir, and I say to this House, woe betide the men or the party that unhinges the revenue laws and sets the whole subject afloat again carrying with it, as it must, a more wide-spread ruin. [Applause on the republican side of the House.]

So far as regards my honorable friend from the city of New York [Mr. WOOD] I ascribe to him honesty of purpose and goodness of intention, but I say to him the time has not come, the time is not here, when we are to agitate, particularly if agitation brings death and desolation to the trade and business of the entire country. That not only reduces the wages of labor, but puts an end to the demand for it; that adds to the darkness of the murky cloud above our heads; that puts bread in the mouths of laboring-men beyond the seas but deprives them of it here at home. We must, sir, I repeat it, we must, sir, take care of our own people. It is our first duty, and if we are true to ourselves we will not falter. Let the revenue laws remain as they are; let us permit no change. If there must be change, let it be at some other time—in an hour of greater prosperity, but not now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDEE. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. What amendment is pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.]

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that amendment germane to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late to raise the point of order, as the amendment has been debated.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HENDEE. I move to reconsider the votes by which the several amendments were adopted; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDEE. I now demand the previous question on the bill as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 94, nays 124, not voting 73; as follows:

So the bill was rejected.

During the vote,

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, said: I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. ELLSWORTH. I wish further to announce that my colleague, Mr. BROGDEN, is confined to his bed with illness.

Mr. ROBERTS. I wish to announce that I am paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan. I do not know how he would vote if he were present, but I would vote in the negative.

Mr. TURNER. I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MCGOWAN.

Mr. COVERT. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. MAYHAM, is paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. HUMPHREYS. I am advised that if Mr. MAYHAM were present he would vote "ay." I am not instructed as to how Mr. HUMPHREYS would vote if present. I desire also to announce that my colleague, Mr. VEEDER, is detained at his home by serious illness.

Mr. KNAPP. I am requested to announce the absence of my colleague, Mr. EDEN. If present, he would vote in the negative.

Mr. WILSON. I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CRAO;] but, not regarding this as a political question, I have voted.

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I do not know how he would vote, if present, but I would vote in the negative.

Mr. SAMPSON. My colleague, Mr. BURDICK, is paired with Mr. BENEDICT.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am paired on this bill and all questions involved in it with Mr. EDEN, of Illinois. If he were here, we might vote together, but I deem it most prudent not to vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HENDEE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire to say that I make the motion to reconsider for the purpose of having the bill recommitted, hoping that in that way it may perhaps be perfected so as to be satisfactory to the House. Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HENDEE. I hope the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope it will not be.

The question being taken on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, the Speaker pro tempore announced that in the opinion of the Chair the ayes had it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 22, not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I call for tellers.

Mr. HENDEE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. During the pendency of the motion to lay on the table my motion to reconsider, is it proper or in order for me to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not. There is no motion in order except that of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON,] on which the House is now dividing and on which tellers have been requested.

Mr. CONGER. Does not the motion to recommit take precedence?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is before the House, and has been considered, and the House is now dividing upon it.

Mr. BEEBE. And it is not competent to commit a bill which has been rejected.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, there were ayes 43, more than one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were ordered; and Mr. HENDEE, and Mr. COX, of Ohio, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 106. So the House refused to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HENDEE. I now move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is, Will the House reconsider the vote by which it refused to pass the bill?

Mr. BOUCK. And if that be reconsidered, then a motion to recommit will be in order.

The question being taken on reconsidering the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill, it was declared in the affirmative.

Mr. HENDEE. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to amend by instructions to strike out the property qualification.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. McMAHON. I propose to call the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire to say to the gentleman from Ohio that we are willing to strike out that qualification now if the House will pass the bill.

Mr. McMAHON. On the understanding that that shall be stricken out I shall withdraw the motion.

The question being taken on Mr. HENDEE's motion, it was decided in the affirmative; and the bill was accordingly recommitted to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the post-office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] demands the regular order, his object being to have a morning hour.

Mr. COX, of New York. So as to reach the business on the Speaker's table at the end of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Pending which the gentleman from Georgia moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and he states his object is to resume the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The question being taken on Mr. BLOUNT's motion, there were—ayes 101, noes 70.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLOUNT, and Mr. COX of New York, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 74. So the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to ask unanimous consent of the House, with the assent of the Committee on Appropriations, to fix next Tuesday after the morning hour to go to the Speaker's table in order to dispose of the business thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that he would more certainly reach his object by asking unanimous consent to go to business on the Speaker's table before the morning hour. There might not be a morning hour.

Mr. COX, of New York. Very well, I will say after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WOOD. Excepting appropriation bills and the tariff bill. Otherwise I object.

Mr. BURCHARD. Is not that a privileged motion after the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It is; but the difficulty is that the House is anxious to dispose of the appropriation bills in preference to receiving reports from committees. Therefore the motion to go to the Speaker's table after the morning hour is seldom reached because of the morning hour being vacated by appropriation bills. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday next after the reading of the Journal the House be allowed, on his motion, to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to state that my object is to get at the Thurman funding bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire, in interposing an objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New York, to reach that thing known as a morning hour which is so rare in the business of this House.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from New York does not obstruct the morning hour.

Mr. CARLISLE. Do I understand, if this unanimous consent is given, the morning hour will come after the consideration of the bill or before it?

The SPEAKER. It may come after it or it may come on every intervening day. The Chair does not know.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall object to the proposition if it is not made after the morning hour.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask then that it may be after the morning hour on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York now requests that on Tuesday next after the morning hour the House will proceed, on his motion, to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. PRICE. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York, if his object is to reach the funding bill, to allow that bill to be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COX, of New York. No, sir.

Mr. PRICE. With leave to report at any time.

Mr. COX, of New York. The idea is to pass the bill; both committees have passed upon it, and we want to pass it to-day.

Mr. FRANKLIN. We intend to pass it here without any reference to any committee.

Mr. PRICE. Then I shall have to object to the request of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] because the bill makes material changes in the law and it ought to have consideration before the Committee on the Judiciary, and I believe that committee thinks so to. I am willing that the committee shall have the power to report it back at any time. I do not wish to delay action upon it, but it ought to have consideration before that committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not care to debate the question now, but the bill has already been considered by the committee.

Mr. MORRISON. It has been considered in two Congresses by the committees.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BILL.

Mr. HENDEE. Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia be printed in the shape in which it was ordered to be engrossed to-day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. Was there any objection to my proposition?

Mr. PRICE. I object unless the bill is to be referred to a committee. I am willing that it should be referred with leave that the committee may report it back at any time.

Mr. COX, of New York. My object is to pass the bill at once.

Mr. PRICE. And my object is not to do hasty legislation here without proper consideration.

Mr. HANNA. It seems to me that the bill has been fully considered by the American Senate.

CONTESTED ELECTION—HARALSON VS. SHELLEY.

Mr. FRYE, by unanimous consent, presented certain supervisors' returns in the contested-election case of Haralson vs. Shelley from the fourth district of the State of Alabama; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

CLASSIFICATION OF MAIL MATTER.

Mr. WADDELL. Before the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I ask, by instruction of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3850) providing for the classification of mail matter and the rates of postage thereon, with the amendments proposed by the committee thereto, and that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments, ordered to be printed. The object is to get it upon the Calendar, so that its provisions may be understood and prevent confusion throughout the country.

There was no objection, and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments reported by the committee, ordered to be printed.

DANIEL RODNEY KING.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4313) granting a pension to Daniel Rodney King, late a major in the Thirty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BOARD OF MANAGERS, SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 160) to fill a vacancy in the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DURHAM. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CALKINS. Before the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I desire to ask whether the Senate bill repealing the bankrupt act has been referred?

The SPEAKER. It has not; it is upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up and referred.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that.

Mr. DURHAM. I now insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4246) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session the first clause of the bill had been read for amendment, and it will now be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1879, out of any money in the Treasury arising from the revenues of said Department, in conformity to the act of July 2, 1836, as follows:

Office of the Postmaster-General:

For mail depredations and special agents, $100,000; and not exceeding $7,500 of this amount may be expended for fees to United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of courts, and counsel necessarily employed by special agents of the Post-Office Department, subject to approval by the Attorney-General: Provided, That hereafter the per diem pay of all special agents appointed under section 4017 of the Revised Statutes shall be $3 instead of $5, as therein provided.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment: after the words "one hundred," in line 10, to insert the word "twenty-five;" so that it will read, if amended, "for mail depredations and special agents $125,000."

Section 4017 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

The Postmaster-General may employ two special agents for the Pacific coast, and such number of other special agents as the good of the service and the safety of the mail may require. Such agents shall be entitled to a salary at the rate of not more than $1,600 a year each, and shall each be allowed for traveling and incidental expenses, while actually employed in the service, a sum not exceeding $5 a day.

The Committee on Appropriations find that under that last provision allowing traveling and incidental expenses at the rate of $5 per day, every single special agent is paid that $5 a day whether he was on service or not, and that the railroad companies never made any charges against them, or if they did in any instance, the Department withheld it from them in making their settlements if they saw fit, or if it became necessary to employ a conveyance to go out on any of the star routes, it was paid for, but not out of this fund.

The committee believe this to be a gross perversion of the plain provisions of the law. This law was passed in 1872. The committee thought the best thing they could do at this time was to reduce the per diem from $5 to $3, and they so provide in this bill, making a total reduction of something like $27,000.

In 1876, under this construction of the law, there was expended $138,002; in 1877, $118,676. We have made ample provision for the allowance of $3 a day, if we take into consideration the amount heretofore expended.

In order that the Committee of the Whole may understand to what extent this construction of the statute has been carried, it is only necessary for me to state that these special agents were paid last year in salaries $59,820.84, and the balance of the payments to them, $86,222.56, was for their traveling and other expenses. It is the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Appropriations that the provision thus amended should be adopted.

Mr. HALE. I am called up by a suggestion which I heard from the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. BLOUNT] in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. WADDELL.] I think this bill generally is a good one; its provisions have my assent excepting this one. I do not think that the reduction in the appropriation for this very important service of the Post-Office Department, for depredations and for mail agents, the reduction from $135,000 last year to $100,000 now—

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that I have moved an amendment making the amount $125,000.

Mr. HALE. I did not know that amendment had been offered. I think that is right, and of course I have nothing further to say.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is mistaken when he says that this allowance of $5 a day to these special agents is for every day whether they are in service or not. Upon inquiry at the Post-Office Department I find that that is not the case; that a special agent is allowed per diem expenses only when he is in service. That is my information.

I do not agree with my colleagues upon this question; I think the Department should have what they ask for this purpose. These special agents are the eyes and ears of the Department, and in my judgment it is necessary that this force should be increased rather than diminished. An increase of the force would result in an increase of the revenues and an improvement of the service. I therefore move to amend so as to make the amount $140,000, instead of $125,000 as moved by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist upon that part of this clause reducing the per diem from $5 to $3?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman has moved no amendment to that portion of the clause?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not.

Mr. HALE. I think the gentleman should not insist upon that.

Mr. BLOUNT. I regret very much that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and myself have obtained different information from the same quarter; I think there must be some misunderstanding about it. I went myself to the Postmaster-General and obtained the statement from him. I had it also from the Sixth Auditor and from a number of other officers in the Department, and I never till this moment heard anything to the contrary. The subcommittee had that information that these special agents charged $5 a day for every day throughout the year when they were here in Washington or elsewhere. I apprehend there is but little question about that fact really. No gentleman who has taken the pains to study this matter in relation to these special agents will question it. It is likely that the committee in charge of expenditures in the Post-Office Department will report the same thing to this House.

Mr. HANNA. Out of this $5 a day these agents pay their hotel bills.

Mr. BLOUNT. They may pay their hotel bills; it is likely they do. But the language of the statute is "their traveling and other expenses." Now, the Department always contracts so that not a dollar is used for traveling expenses, and yet they are allowed full per diem for every day throughout the year, in addition to their salary of $1,600 a year. Wherever there is a charge for a buggy or any other conveyance against them it is not deducted out of this fund.

Mr. HANNA. Allow me a question. Does not the gentleman know as well as I do that, if out of the $5 a day or $3 a day they pay their hotel bills, it will take all the $3 a day to pay simply their living expenses?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HANNA] says it will take the $3 a day to pay their hotel bills. Even if that is true, that is ample. But on the contrary they are not engaged every day.

Mr. FOSTER. On that point I desire to say a word. I understand that all these gentlemen are not allowed $1,600 a year, and yet the language of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] would convey that impression. As I am informed neither are they allowed this per diem for expenses for every day in the year. As to the construction of the law complained of by the gentleman from Georgia, I am not sure but his criticism is right; I rather think it is. But it is an old construction, one that has come down for years; perhaps the law has been so construed for twenty or thirty years or more. As I understand, some of these agents get $1,600 a year, some only $1,200 a year.

Mr. WADDELL. A very large majority of them get but $1,200 a year.

Mr. DEERING. That is precisely the point upon which I wish to ask a question.

Mr. BLOUNT. The date of this statute is 1872. So far as that matter is concerned, it is not important to this House whether the practice comes down from 1872 or 1852.

Mr. FOSTER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BLOUNT. Or whether it originated with a republican administration or a democratic administration.

Mr. DEERING. But it is important whether these agents get $1,600 a year or only $1,200 a year.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not important, I say, whence it comes. But here is the language of the law, plainly declaring that the salary shall not exceed $1,600 per annum. The gentleman is correct in saying that these agents do not always receive this much; but I think the plain construction of the law is that their salary shall not exceed this amount.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] to withdraw his formal amendment, that I may renew it.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, I happen to have some knowledge in regard to the administration of these appropriations and the workings of this law in regard to agents. It is not true that all special agents get $1,600. They are graded according to their length of service and their efficiency; and I know personally of a number of cases where they have been promoted step by step from a lower rate of pay up to $1,600, which I understand to be the highest grade of salary paid to these agents.

In the next place no agent is paid the per diem mentioned unless he is actually engaged on special service. An agent may be located at some particular place, his home or his headquarters; and if he receives no order for a special investigation he does only common office duty. But a special order may be sent to him to go away to make an investigation fifty or one hundred miles from home. When that order comes he starts out in execution of it, and he makes a full report of his doings. While on such special duty he is paid the per diem for his expenses; but he is required to furnish vouchers and to make a monthly report, stating day by day where he has been and what he has been doing. His report, which gives a true account of all his proceedings, is compared with his vouchers of his expenses.

It may be that an agent's whole time is occupied on special duty. Some of the agents who are considered to be specially qualified as experts in ferreting out frauds are no doubt occupied in such service all the time, and thus may receive their per diem for every day in the year. But this only happens because it is to the advantage of the Department to avail itself of their services all the time. This I know to be the practice of the Department under the law.

I have no doubt in the world that every dollar paid for efficient special agents—and I believe that the service is now very efficient; it has been carefully weeded out—I believe that every dollar paid in this way saves a good many dollars to the Government and the people. Hence the cutting down of this appropriation is, in my judgment, waste, and not economy. The appropriation should rather be reasonably increased than at all diminished. If gentlemen knew the amount of fraud constantly being committed or attempted all over the country against the Post-Office Department in the way of stealing letters, breaking into offices, stealing stamps, violating the postal laws by publishers and by individuals, they would understand how easy it is for the Government to lose hundreds of thousands of dollars of revenue which this active corps of special agents can save by being kept in their places and properly sustained by the necessary appropriations.

Mr. PAGE obtained the floor.

Mr. WADDELL. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] will excuse me a moment. I understand that debate on this amendment will close in a few moments. I have been instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report an amendment upon which there ought to be an opportunity to say something.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] rise to oppose the amendments?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir; anything so that I can make a five-minute speech.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to reducing the compensation of the special agents from $5 to $3 per day. On the Pacific coast, in the city of San Francisco, the special agent—and there is only one there—receives a salary of $1,600 a year; and he has as his field of duty the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada and the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, and, I think, Utah. He is traveling all the time, and $3 a day would not pay his hotel bills. It is true that when riding upon the railroad he pays no fare, but if he gets off the train at some point and is called upon to go and investigate a defaulting postmaster he is frequently compelled to hire a team, and, as I understand, under the legislation here proposed, he will be required to pay such expenses out of his own pocket. There is no provision under which he can be reimbursed by the Department. At any rate, I know that if the agent is a competent man, capable of occupying the position of special agent on the Pacific coast, having within his jurisdiction all the States and Territories I have named, it would be almost an outrage for this House to ask such a man to perform the service for less than $5 per diem and a salary of $1,600 a year. I do not believe you can get men competent for these positions unless you pay them something commensurate with the duties they have to perform.

It is true, as stated by the gentleman who reported this bill, that some of these agents receive $3 a day for every day in the year; but I know that many of them—certainly this one on the Pacific coast—travel nearly all the time. The business there is such that in fact another agency should be established.

To reduce this salary as contemplated by the bill would, in my judgment, be an act of injustice to the agent in my section of the country. I do not know what the agents in the Atlantic States have to do or whether they travel altogether by rail. But as to this particular agent I know that when he receives orders to go to Oregon to attend to his duties he has to travel two hundred and eighty miles by stage, traveling night and day. When he reaches Oregon there are for long distances no railroads, so that he is obliged to travel either by private conveyance or by stage. Three dollars a day will barely pay his hotel bills when traveling through the country, and in the large cities of California and Nevada it will not pay his hotel bills.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman know that these agents are paid independently of this allowance of $3 per day?

Mr. PAGE. I know that they are paid a salary of $1,600 a year.

Mr. BLOUNT. Paid per diem, and the contractors of the stage routes carry them for nothing.

Mr. PAGE. There is no reservation in the contract under the star service for the carrying of special mail agents. The cars sometimes have refused to recognize the pass of the agent, and then the Department takes from the railroad mail pay that amount. But, sir, it is not so on the stage routes.

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee were informed that contracts are made in that way.

Mr. PAGE. I have been informed by the agent himself that sometimes the railroad refused to recognize his pass, but he is instructed in that case to pay his fare, and of course the Department deducts that from the railroad company's pay for carrying the mails; but it is not so traveling over stage routes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAGE. I wish to increase the amount by moving to strike out "three" and insert "five."

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment now pending.

Mr. WADDELL. I wish to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio withdraw his amendment temporarily?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do.

Mr. WADDELL. I renew it. I am very glad, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Appropriations upon a reconsideration of this matter have thought it necessary to increase the appropriation they first intended to allow to $100,000. The estimate of the Department is for $150,000. The appropriation of last year was $135,000, but the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, of which I have the honor to be chairman, have had this matter under consideration and unanimously instructed me to offer an amendment in the House increasing the appropriation to the full amount of the estimate, that is, to $150,000.

I desire to state, Mr. Chairman, that the Postmaster-General in his annual report calls particular attention to this matter of special agents and to the value and efficiency of the present force. He gives the expenditures for last year at $149,596.68. Again, in a letter of his accompanying that report, he says: "To insure the safety of the mails and to enable the Department to correct irregularities and protect its revenues, a larger force of special agents is required than can now be employed. Of this fact, evidence is brought to my mind every day."

There was a communication sent to the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, [Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama,] a copy of which was furnished to the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations, [Mr. BLOUNT,] and a copy also sent to me, showing the necessity of this increased appropriation and that there should be no reduction of pay in justice to the Department. The Postmaster-General says that these special agents are employed under his own personal direction, and of course he knows the necessity and importance of the service. He has recently imposed additional work upon the force in the way of investigations of bonds of postmasters, adjustment of leases, examination and securing reduction in clerk hire and allowances, which have proven of great value in increasing the efficiency of the service and effecting large saving in the revenues. He has caused notices to be posted in all post-offices asking the public to report direct to the Department all irregularities in the service coming to their notice. This has caused more than fourfold increase in the number of complaints to be investigated by special agents, and is resulting in marked improvement in the service.

A case came to my attention where complaint was made to the Department, and the party making the complaint was referred to one of the special agents who had six hundred cases on hand to investigate. Statements show about fifteen thousand cases referred to thirty-eight agents during the last eight months. It is a work of vital importance to the Department, and the Postmaster-General has most earnestly asked this appropriation should be made up to the amount of the estimate.

Now, as to these salaries and per diems, in this letter to Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, of which I have spoken, the Postmaster-General refers to the question and he announces, as has been stated by the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, that he intends to reduce allowances in his discretion. He has the discretion now, and these special agents do not get as is generally supposed $1,600 a year and per diem. A large majority get but $1,200, and year after year the Postmaster-General has reduced the per diem according to his discretion, and he thought in certain parts of the country it ought not to be $5, but only $3.

Mr. DEERING. The chief of the depredations bureau stated to me a few days since that less than one-fifth of the whole number were receiving $1,600, while the balance only receive $1,200 and less.

Mr. WADDELL. I believe that is the proportion. The special agents make a great saving to the Government in collections made from defaulting postmasters after executions in judgments have been returned nulla bona, and in the adjustments of leases of buildings amounting to more than the expenses of that branch of the service, as has been alleged. The Post-Office Committee have had this carefully under consideration, and they instructed me to ask an increase of the appropriation to $150,000, up to the full estimate of the Department, because they are satisfied the special-agency business cannot be efficiently carried on with less money. I hope the House will agree to that amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from North Carolina says that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has unanimously instructed him to make such and such recommendations to this House in regard to this appropriation after having carefully examined the same. Now, sir, I am not very particular as to the quarter from which those suggestions come. I have simply to say that under the rules of the House if the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have anything to do with the appropriation of money for the Post-Office Department I have yet to learn it. It is certainly not to be found in the rules. This, therefore, comes in here simply as a recommendation, having the same force as a recommendation by any other committee would have.

Mr. WADDELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that a suggestion in regard to the interests of the Post-Office Department and the appropriations for it could not with more propriety come from the committee to whom those matters are intrusted by the House than from any other committee? I was aware that the Committee on Appropriations claimed a great deal, but I did not know they claimed so much as that.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will refer to the rule, instead of getting up a little side controversy, he will find the rule does not give his committee the slightest authority on that subject any more than it gives the Committee on Appropriations the whole scope of legislation in reference to the Post-Office, such as the gentleman has been bringing in here. I do not object, however, to this, but I do insist that this proposition is not to be accepted as a matter of course because it comes from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Again, the gentleman says that the Postmaster-General urgently recommends it. Why, sir, that is the very thing we have been hearing here all the while during the last two years. The Departments have been urgently recommending these things. They have sent in various recommendations and we have not always heeded their urgency.

I admit, sir, that these agents do not get the $1,600 per annum in every instance. I stated that the clause relating to the $1,600 per annum was the clause relating to the salary. It could not exceed that. And when you pass away from that the statute contemplates nothing in the way of salary, but simply provides for paying the expenses of these agents as they pass through the country on business of the Post-Office Department.

The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] the former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, says that he knows that they are paid simply for such days as they are actually in service. Now, sir, I regret very much that I should have to come in conflict with that gentleman and other gentlemen as to facts. But I assure the committee that the Postmaster-General himself told me that what I have stated is true, and that he did not think the construction a legal one; that the question had been agitated time and again in the Department, and that there the agitation would die out. Sir, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I determined that it should not die out unless this House should determine otherwise. It is wrong, wrong in principle. I hope that these $3 per diem will be insisted upon, and this possibly makes the reduction fully up to all the needs of the Department. It is a saving. It takes off some $27,000. We appropriated $135,000 last year and $118,000 the year before.

The revenues of the Department are falling off—falling off largely; something like a million of dollars. Perhaps that is not a thoroughly fair statement. But there is an actual falling off of several hundred thousand dollars through a failure in the receipts of the Department. And if this is true, why should we hesitate at this time and in this condition of the country to do what is fair and right in the premises? I am glad to know, sir, that the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] who were with me in investigating this matter, were perfectly satisfied this was ample and sufficient; and I do hope this committee will adopt the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say a word on the question under discussion and more on the question of these special agencies than any other. The bill as it comes from the committee has reduced the pay of special agents from $5 to $3. But there is nothing in the bill as it comes from the committee, as I understand it, which limits the payment of $3 to actual traveling in the service of the Department. And I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that it is the habit not only of these special agents but of the two superintendents in the Post-Office Department to draw day by day $5 for traveling expenses when they are sitting down at the fireside or attending church at their homes.

Mr. FOSTER. My information is directly the opposite.

Mr. HUNTON. My information is exactly that; and I get it from a gentleman who professes to be, and doubtless is, familiar with the operations of the Post-Office Department, and especially that part of it embraced in the duties of the special agents.

Now, sir, I am informed by the same gentleman, and I desire the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] to it, that a special agent of the Post-Office Department, appointed on his recommendation, was in service some eighteen months probably, was not engaged on duty more than ninety days, got his full pay of $1,800 per annum—

Mr. CLYMER. Sixteen hundred dollars.

Mr. HUNTON. Sixteen hundred dollars per annum and $5 for every day during the time that he held the appointment, and that he was not on duty out of the eighteen months over ninety days.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I have authority for my statement from the superintendent of the railway mail service. He gave it to me within five minutes.

Mr. HUNTON. Who is that?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Vail.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, my information came to me in the manner that I have intimated, and on that intimation I introduced a bill amending the provisions of the Revised Statutes, which is now before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and more than that, when the time arrives, I shall offer an amendment to add to the section the words, "while actually traveling in the service of the Department;" and, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] is right, that will do no harm.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to that; I should favor it.

Mr. HUNTON. And I shall then move an additional proviso that the number of agents shall be limited. I believe there are now forty-three or forty-four of them.

Mr. BLOUNT. Forty-seven of them.

Mr. HUNTON. My information is that one-half of these special agents are more than half their time around the Post-Office Department unemployed or at their homes.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is a great slander.

Mr. HUNTON. That is my information.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that when the gentleman makes a statement of that kind he ought to give us his authority.

Mr. HUNTON. My authority is Colonel John S. Mosby. I believe I have stated the information he gave me correctly.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he in the Department?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, and Mr. HAYES rose.

Mr. HAYES. I think there is a great deal of misunderstanding in regard to this matter.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Who is entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But both the gentlemen are from Illinois.

Mr. HAYES. I want a little light thrown upon this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] who is a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I believe much of the difficulty in the minds of gentlemen is from not understanding fully the class of special agents sought to be appropriated for in this paragraph. Section 4017 of the Revised Statutes provides that the Postmaster-General may employ two special agents for the Pacific coast, and such number of other special agents as the good of the service and the safety of the mails may require, who shall receive not exceeding $1,600 per annum and a sum not exceeding $5 a day for traveling and incidental expenses, while actually employed in the service. The special agents appointed under this section are thirty-eight in number employed upon mail depredations, and directly under the control of Chief Special Agent Daniel B. Parker, with headquarters in the Department at Washington. They are constantly traveling about the country at work in cases of mail depredations, location and leasing of post-offices, and any other matters the Department may have for them to do, and only receive their per diem of $5 when actually at work.

Mr. STENGER. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will hear it.

Mr. STENGER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state to the House just what the other matters are?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I only have five minutes, and if I have time to go into detail after I state other matters, will answer the gentleman's question, and I want to state here that these special agents not only have to certify as to their services to be entitled to their per diem, but have to keep a diary of their work and forward that to the Department. So it can be seen at once whether their certificates are correct. The truth is that nearly all of these special agents are almost constantly at work and hence are generally entitled to their per diem, but it is not true they receive the per diem for each day, service or no service. I have before me a statement of the per diem received by a number of these agents for the months from July, 1877, to March, 1878, inclusive. I find that Mr. Minnis, for instance, was paid in July for twenty days, and in August for twelve days.

Now, a word as to special agents who perform another class of duties and who are not immediately under the control of Mr. Parker and who are not paid out of this appropriation now under consideration. They are eleven in number and are known as assistant superintendents of railway mail service, and I believe do duty a considerable part of the time in the office, and as I am informed generally draw the per diem of $5 for each day whether they travel or not, provided they are engaged in service.

And there is still another class, seven in number, known as money-order agents, and two in number engaged in connection with the free delivery service; all of which, by virtue of section 4020 of the Revised Statutes, are paid out of the appropriation for mail transportation, money-order service, and free delivery service respectively.

So the agents sought to be affected by curtailing the appropriation in this paragraph are those who are almost constantly traveling and doing hard duty under Mr. Parker. If the gentleman from Virginia desires to reach the assistant superintendents, some of whom may be upon duty at Washington, and receive their per diem for each day's service whether they travel or not, let him in his amendment specify that class of agents.

Mr. HUNTON. Allow me to inform the gentleman that I know what class of people I am after.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Certainly, you are after a class of agents who you do not approve of, but I do not want you to blindly strike at a class of agents who are constantly traveling, and who save to the Department tenfold more than the salary you pay them. I am speaking of the thirty-eight agents under Mr. Parker who go to Texas, Arkansas, the Territories, and all over the country, and they cannot pay their expenses for less than $5 a day when traveling.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLYMER. I suppose the committee is unanimous in the agreement that this service is an important one. I do not think any member of the committee would ruthlessly or willingly impair this service by providing an insufficient payment. It is a mere business proposition, and one in regard to which we ought to be able to arrive at a correct conclusion without any great dispute, if the facts are ascertained.

If gentlemen will turn to page 19 of the report accompanying this bill they will find a letter from the Postmaster-General, in which he makes a statement as to the number employed in this service and the compensation which they receive. From that statement it appears that during the last fiscal year there were employed fifty-eight special agents, of whom thirty-two were continuously employed, and the remainder for a longer or shorter period. The aggregate amount of salaries paid them was $59,820.84, and during that time there was paid out for traveling and other expenses $86,222.56.

Now it did appear to the subcommittee having this bill in charge, and who prepared it after a great deal of care and deliberation, that this was an excessive amount. From the facts in their possession it appeared that these gentlemen were paid $5 for every day in the year, whether they were on or off duty. The committee conceived that that amount was excessive, far beyond any expenditures that could justly be made, considering the fact that they traveled free upon all railroads and, as we understood, upon the routes of the star service. The committee therefore concluded that $3 per day would compensate them amply. It was a mere business calculation, with no desire to impair the service.

Now, if during the past fiscal year $86,222 was expended for traveling and other expenses, and that amount is reduced by two-fifths, as we propose by this bill to do, by making the per diem $3 instead of $5, then there would be a saving of $34,444. If the Committee of the Whole will adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the subcommittee, [Mr. BLOUNT,] making this amount $125,000, then, by taking into calculation the $34,000 saved, it will be found that we will be making an appropriation of $159,000 for this service for the ensuing year.

That, we think, will be amply sufficient, in the judgment of every business man, to pay for this service. If this be so, there should be no difference about the matter. We do not want to impair the service.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman arrive at the sum of $86,222 by multiplying the number of days in the year by $5 and by the number of agents?

Mr. CLYMER. I do not understand it so. It is for traveling and for other expenses, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes. What those necessary expenses are I am not able to say, but that amount was actually expended during that period for their traveling and other necessary expenses.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Does it show that each one of these agents was actually paid $5 a day for each day in the year?

Mr. CLYMER. I did not say anything about that. If the figures I have stated to the committee are to be relied upon, (and they come from the Postmaster-General,) then $125,000 will be amply sufficient for this service, because there will be a reduction of expenses of over $34,000 by reducing the per diem from $5 to $3 a day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HALE. If the amendment to the amendment is withdrawn I will renew it.

Mr. CLYMER. I will withdraw it, if I have control of it.

Mr. HALE. I will move the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. WADDELL.] The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] an old and very intelligent member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, has got at the whole heart of this matter about special agents. The special agents under Colonel Parker, to whom he has referred, should not in any way be connected with or be damaged by any prejudice which any gentleman may have to any other class of agents. These special agents, as has been said, are the eyes and the hands of the Post-Office Department. They number thirty-seven or thirty-eight in all, and they have a jurisdiction, or a guardianship, if you may so call it, over the entire extent of the country.

None of the things apply to them that apply to special agents in other Departments to make them offensive. There are no moieties, there are no questions of espionage and espial, which result in increased pay to these agents as in other Departments. They simply have a salary and a per diem allowance to cover their actual expenses, not over $5 a day in all.

Now, I have had occasion, as I presume every member here has had, to see the good work of these special agents. It is not only that they look for depredations and thefts and breakages of the law in the administration of the Post-Office Department, but there are scores of questions that formerly were submitted to members of Congress to pass upon, which were vexatious, annoying, and complicated. The question where a post-office should be located in a particular town or place, if the request be made, will be investigated by a special agent who will report to the Department what the wants of the community require. This is a great deal better than that I should be called upon to do it in my district. Any gentleman will sympathize with that.

In many cases charges are made against a postmaster for lack of attention, for bad habits, for anything disqualifying him for the proper discharge of his duties. The Department upon request will send one of these special agents to investigate; and my experience is that they are a superior body of men, intelligent and honest. They investigate (which can be done without bias) and report to the Department; and in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred the Department sustains their reports. Now, these thirty-seven or thirty-eight agents are required to do this duty for the whole country; they must watch forty thousand post-offices; and anybody who says that a smaller number can do this vast and important service can have no comprehension of the magnitude of the duties devolved upon them. Anybody who says that these men are overpaid in what they are now getting can have no comprehension of the value of the services that they render, and of the arduous and responsible employment to which they are assigned by the Department. It is a service which, I am glad to say from my observation in the country and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, has been as well conducted as any branch of the governmental service.

These special agents are promoted according to their merits. If an agent receiving $1,200 a year proves himself vigilant, shrewd, and honest he is, at the earliest opportunity, advanced to $1,400, and from that to $1,600. I hope my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will not, in anything that he does, seek to impair the efficiency of this valuable branch of the service.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I do not misunderstand at all the class of people to which this provision of law applies. As the language imports, it applies to agents in relation to mail depredations. This statute, as already stated, was passed in 1872. Now, any gentleman who is in the habit of traveling knows very well that $3 a day will go as far now in paying traveling expenses (that is, hotel bills, which is all these agents pay) as $5 a day would in 1872, when this law was passed. The question, therefore, is simply whether $3 a day or $5 a day ought to be allowed for these expenses.

There is no attempt to interfere with the amount of the salary. Although during the last Congress we struck at salaries in all the Departments of the Government, the salary of these gentlemen has never been touched; nor is it my purpose to ask any change in that respect.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] says that the services of these gentlemen are very arduous and very important. We all know that their services are valuable; but that they are very arduous or require any vast amount of intellectual talent, I am not ready to concede. It seems to me that to leave the salary where it is and at the same time to rearrange the per diem is perfectly just.

But it is found as a matter of fact (such is my own information, after repeated and earnest examination) that this per diem is allowed for every day in the year, whether the agent is at church or is engaged in the performance of official duty.

Mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCALES. I ask it for information, and I am favorably inclined to the bill. But just now a question was made as to whether all these agents receive $1,600 salary or whether a part get $1,200. Now I want to ask the gentleman whether it is not within the discretion of the Postmaster-General to allow every one of these agents $1,600?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir; he has that power under the law.

Mr. SCALES. And this allowance of $3 a day is for expenses, and nothing else?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir. The object of the Committee on Appropriations is to hold the Department to the law; to pay these agents the salary to which the law entitles them and as to expenses to pay them a per diem for their actual expenses, and not make this allowance of expenses a virtual increase of salary.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have here an official statement showing that twenty of these thirty-eight agents get only $1,300 a year.

Mr. SCALES. But they may get $1,600.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it is accepted on all hands that under the law the salary of these agents is not to exceed $1,600; but the committee wants to hold the Department down to what we believe is the law. We are tired of these departmental constructions. They are convenient and very pliable. This is not the first one I have known that impressed me with the idea that if the gentleman making it had been outside the Department he might perhaps have entertained different views.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAYES. As there is a great variety of opinion in regard to the question whether these agents are paid for every day in the year or only for the time they are actually employed, I would like to have read section 4017 of the Revised Statutes, which gives the law applicable to this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4017. The Postmaster-General may employ two special agents for the Pacific Coast, and such number of other special agents as the good of the service and the safety of the mail may require. Such agents shall be entitled to a salary at the rate of not more than $1,600 a year each, and shall each be allowed for traveling and incidental expenses, while actually employed in the service, a sum not exceeding $5 a day.

Mr. HAYES. It will be observed that the language of the law is, "while actually employed in the service." Now, if it be true, as charged by gentlemen on the other side, that these men have been paid $5 for every day in the year, whether employed or not, then some head of a Department has been violating the law; and I trust gentlemen on the other side will follow that up and see whether it is true or not. I do not believe it is true. I believe these men are paid only while actually employed in the service and only while actually employed in the service. They are employed by the year and paid $1,600 salary, and they are paid $5 a day for traveling and incidental expenses for every day they are actually in the service.

Now I claim $5 a day is none too much for the incidental expenses of these men. Let any gentleman attempt to travel over the country and pay his expenses at hotels and other incidental expenses which naturally arise, and he will find that $5 a day is not too much in large cities and elsewhere. I hold that $5 a day when a man is employed only a part of the year is none too much. If he were employed all the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year the case would be different, and then we might cut it down to $3 a day, but when they are employed only a portion of the time as special agents I say that $5 a day is none too much, and we ought not to cut it down from $5 to $3.

One more thing I wish to say, and that is in regard to the amendment submitted by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I believe we ought to put into this bill the sum of $150,000—the amount suggested by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads—for the reason that I think that committee understands much better what are the needs of this Department than the Committee on Appropriations. I believe that committee, having investigated the matter thoroughly and being in communication more directly with the heads of bureaus in the Departments, understands more fully what the needs of this Department are than the Committee on Appropriations, and I hold we ought to take their recommendation in preference to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MONEY. I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the sum demanded by the Postmaster-General is $150,000 for these special agents. I think the sum is not at all too much for the reason that there are to-day about ten thousand cases of mail depredations referred to the division of depredations under the charge of this Post-Office Department. One agent has to-day over six hundred cases referred to him and it is impossible Mr. Parker can keep up with the business of that branch of the postal service unless he has additional pay. The sum of $5 per diem for these special agents is not too much, for while they have railroad tickets they have to pay for sleeping-car berths and their bills at hotels and other incidental expenses.

As I understand from the investigation the committee is making into this branch of the service these special agents in that branch draw per diem only for the time in actual service, but there is a class of special agents in the Department who sit at their desks and draw $5 per diem for every day in the year. This is matter of evidence. In the recent investigation into the special agents assigned to the superintendent of the first division of the railway service his case for the last eight years was brought before that committee and made matter of evidence, and in his case it appears that he had drawn for every single day, not excepting Sunday, and for months and months when he testified he was home upon a sick-bed at the rate of $5 per diem. In addition he had drawn over $900 for incidental expenses, which covered the amount he had actually paid out of his pocket. The investigating committee have found the other special agents in the railway mail service have done the same thing without any exception whatever.

I do not allude to the special agents under Mr. Parker's division of depredations. They are agents who sit at their desks and never leave their room at all and draw this $5 per diem. In defense of their conduct they say they have an opinion from the Attorney-General that this $5 per diem is part of their regular salary and they are entitled to draw it. This is a sham. If the salary of these gentlemen is not sufficient, and I hardly believe it is, let us raise it to the proper amount, so they may have reasonable compensation for their intelligence and responsibility in the discharge of their duties, but let us not have a sham in paying them $5 per diem for work done outside of the office, when they never leave their rooms at all.

Mr. BEEBE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BEEBE. The gentleman speaks of a class of special agents who receive $5 a day when they are at their desks. What are they engaged in? Are they engaged on duty at or connected with the Post-Office Department?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly; as railway postal clerks. There are only nine of them.

Mr. BEEBE. What pay do they draw?

Mr. MONEY. Five dollars every day. That has been the custom, and that has been in accordance with the opinion of the Attorney-General, as understood in the Department. I say it is all wrong.

Now in this department of depredations, which under the charge of Colonel Parker I believe is as efficiently administered as any Department of this Government, and is of the vastest utility in promoting the efficiency of the Post-Office Department as well as correcting depredations on the mails, there is needed every cent which has been demanded; for the reason I stated at the beginning of my remarks that there are ten thousand cases that demand every day the urgent attention of these special agents, and which cannot be given until the force is slightly increased. For these reasons I think the sum should be fixed at the amount recommended by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It will promote the efficiency of the service. I may instance one particular matter which has been brought to my particular attention, that of sale of stamps in offices of the fourth class, not for the use of the office, but as mere matter of merchandise. Time and again these postmasters, who are not amenable to any law for this violation of duty, have been brought to account by these mail agents, and have voluntarily refunded what they had been paid.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 933) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund certain taxes erroneously collected, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 1021) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands;

A bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of Charles L. Davenport;

A bill (S. No. 713) for the relief of Martin Clark; and

A bill (S. No. 1047) regulating the appointment of cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers in the Naval Academy, and for other purposes.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt but the Committee on Appropriations desire to give us an effective mail system. I understand that this $3 a day is full compensation in the older States for board and traveling expenses for these agents. Now, how will that work in a Territory such as I have the honor to represent here? The traveling expenses in the Territories are much larger; I may say three or four times larger than they are for the same distance anywhere in a State. Take, for instance, the distance between Portland, Oregon, and Olympia, the capital of my Territory. The distance is about one hundred miles. No man can go from Portland to Olympia, the capital of Washington Territory, without paying $9 in gold coin; and in addition to that there will be one day's board, and the price charged for meals will be $1 each. So, for the expenses of that single day, the agent will be compelled to pay $12.

But it is said that he gets passes upon the railroads. Well, but there are one hundred and five miles of railroad in the Territory. There are some stage lines; but I know it to be true, I know whereof I assert, when I say that these agents are denied in many instances free transportation on these stage lines. And then there are many places where the mails are carried by horses and by other means where it would be utterly impossible for the agent, unless he hired his own conveyance, to defray his ordinary expenses in that Territory or in any of the Territories, so far as my knowledge extends, upon $3 a day. And if these agents are only paid $3 a day the consequence will be just this, that they will not go into the different portions of the Territories to look after the mail depredations or to look after the interests of the Post-Office Department. It is equivalent to prohibiting their going and discharging the duties which it is necessary for them to discharge and which attach to these agents. And hence I am opposed to cutting down the compensation. At least it ought to be $5 for the States of Oregon and Nevada and for the Territories.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I renew the amendment so as to place the amount at $150,000.

Mr. WADDELL. That is the amendment already pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the condition of the question so that the committee may understand it. The amendment pending is to increase the amount to $150,000, the amendment proposing to fix it at $140,000 having been withdrawn.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not want this amendment voted on until the House understands precisely what is in issue on this question.

The gentleman has said that the statute allows $1,600 a year salary to these agents. That is true, provided you give the Department the money to pay them, and provided the Postmaster-General does not fix a less sum. You may appropriate $150,000, and the Department cannot increase the salaries of these agents from what they are now. The statute allows them not exceeding $1,600 a year. Yet I have an official statement here showing that twenty of these clerks get $1,200 a year, ten get $1,400 a year, and the remainder get $1,600 a year each.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no issue between us about this.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I understand that; but I want to call the attention of the House to the facts. Last year an appropriation of $135,000 was made for this purpose, and you propose now by your bill to reduce the amount to $125,000; that is, $10,000 less. If you cut the appropriation down to $125,000 you must have fewer special agents. Now, already, instead of decreasing the number of special agents, the Postmaster-General has decreased the salaries of those employed to $1,200 a year, for the reason there are not enough employed now to do the work of the Department.

Now the Department says it wants $150,000 to pay the men now employed the salaries provided by law, and also to hire a few more at the same salaries to do this work, because it needs them. The Postmaster-General tells us that in eight months fifteen thousand cases were referred to these thirty-eight agents for investigation, and it would take them six months to complete cases now in their hands if not a single other case shall come up in the mean time. The Postmaster-General comes here and makes his report that largely more than the total amount that these agents receive for salary is saved by them to the Department.

Mr. WILSON. I am in favor of the most rigid economy as no doubt every gentleman within the sound of my voice is. I desire to vote the smallest possible sum of money that will secure the efficiency of this service. I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, the report accompanying this bill, and in it I find a letter addressed by D. M. Key, Postmaster-General, to Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, dated March 4, 1878, in which I find this passage:

To insure the safety of the mails, and to enable the Department to correct irregularities and protect its revenues, a larger force of special agents is required than can now be employed. Of this fact new evidence is brought to my attention every day.

Now, if we vote to appropriate the amount of money proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, and the mails cannot be carried and sufficiently protected for that sum, I am perfectly willing to give a larger sum of money.

I had hoped that some gentleman connected with the Committee on Appropriations would have given us some information upon that subject.

It is a mere question of tweedledum and tweedledee as to the amount to be paid for expenses. The great fact is, does the service require that more of these special agents shall be employed? Before I vote upon that question I would like to be informed by some gentleman upon that subject.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to state, before the vote is taken upon this question, that I have very recently given considerable attention to it. I concur in every word that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] has said. I am for the most rigid economy; but a penny-wise policy is often a pound-foolish policy. I am myself satisfied that this service cannot be carried on efficiently short of $150,000, the estimate of the Postmaster-General. I therefore shall vote for that amount.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. WADDELL to the amendment of Mr. BLOUNT, to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$150,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 119, noes 36.

The amendment as amended was then agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to move to amend the paragraph by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WADDELL. I have an amendment which I desire to insert in the paragraph before the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] will be read.

The amendment of Mr. HUNTON was read, to add to the paragraph the words "while actually in the service of the Post-Office Department."

Mr. WADDELL. I have an amendment to come in before that, to which I think there will not be an objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The amendment of Mr. WADDELL was read, to insert in line 15, before the word "provided," the following:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to call upon the Secretary of War for a guard to accompany and protect the mails on any post-route in Texas, Missouri, or in any of the Territories of the United States, whenever and for such a length of time as he may deem necessary; which guard shall be transported on said routes free of charge by the contractor thereon. The Postmaster-General is further authorized to offer a reward of $1,000 for the capture, dead or alive, of each and every person who shall by violence rob or attempt to rob the mail during the transportation thereof, and the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will reserve all points of order upon that amendment until I can hear the explanation of the gentleman.

Mr. WADDELL. My object in offering the amendment, which I admit is severe legislation, is to provide for what appears to be an absolute necessity. Within the last few weeks, in the State of Texas, the United States mail has been robbed while in course of transportation, and the employes of the railroad and of the express companies (I do not know that the mail agents have been injured) have been shot down like dogs. The last robbery occurred the other day within thirteen miles of the town of Dallas, Texas. I have here a dispatch furnished me by the Post-Office Department, which I will read:

DALLAS, TEXAS, April 11, 1878.

To Colonel DAVID P. PARKER,
Washington, D. C.:

Another train robbed last night, within thirteen miles of this place; more aggravated and larger force of robbers engaged in it than in any before; mails and express robbed; train-men shot down like dogs. Governor Hubbard claims that he has no force or means at his command to suppress same. What shall be done?

AMOS P. FOSTER.

I respectfully submit that, in view of this condition of things in the State of Texas, this legislation is absolutely necessary. There are roving bands of robbers, which I understand have been operating in Missouri and in Kansas and along the frontier, who have got down into Texas and have recently committed these outrages.

Mr. WILSON. Strike out the words "dead or alive."

Mr. WADDELL. Oh, no; I believe in killing them. I am willing to give a thousand dollars for a dead one.

Mr. FOSTER. There ought to be an amendment to the amendment, which I hope the gentleman will accept: "provided that the Army is not reduced below 25,000 men." [Laughter.]

Mr. WADDELL. I do not accept that amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order that this is new legislation and involves an appropriation. I would not make that point but for the fact that the very thing my friend refers to is nothing new. We have always had this very thing along the Pacific coast.

Mr. WADDELL. I think the Government should put its foot on it.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Government will attend to it.

Mr. WADDELL. I think the Government should put an end to it with a strong hand. I would resort to any remedy in order to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. WADDELL. I knew it was subject to a point of order; but I understood my friend the other day to make no objection to it when I showed it to him.

Mr. HUNTON. I will now move my amendment, to insert after the words "five dollars," in the eighteenth line, the words "while actually traveling in the service of the Post-Office Department."

Mr. CLYMER. And away from home.

Mr. HUNTON. They must be away from home if they travel. The language of the law now is, in regard to the traveling expenses of these agents, "while actually employed in the service." That language has been construed by the Government to mean while they are in the service of the United States Government; that is, while liable to service, and not while they are traveling in the service of this Government. With a view of meeting that construction which has been placed upon the statute, I desire to move this amendment, so that these agents shall get no per diem unless they are actually traveling in the service of the Government.

Mr. DEERING. Is an amendment to the amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. If germane.

Mr. HUNTON. I want to get at all of them who are charging the per diem for traveling expenses when they are staying at home. I want the per diem allowed only to agents when traveling in the service of the Department. If the gentleman is right in his construction, my amendment does no harm.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment, with one other that I want to offer.

Mr. DEERING. I move as an amendment to the amendment to strike out after the words "Attorney-General," in line 15, the following:

Provided, That hereafter the per diem pay of all special agents appointed under section 4017 of the Revised Statutes shall be $3, instead of $5, as therein provided.

The question being taken on Mr. DEERING's amendment to the amendment, there were—ayes 69, noes 94.

Mr. DEERING called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DEERING and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 74.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I give notice that I shall ask a vote in the House on the amendment just adopted.

Mr. CLYMER. I move further to amend by inserting the following:

Provided, That hereafter the per diem pay of all special agents appointed under section 4617, Revised Statutes, shall only be allowed when they are actually engaged in traveling on the business of the Department.

I will only remind the Committee of the Whole that this does not interfere with the amount of the per diem; it merely provides that these agents shall not be paid per diem except when actually employed on the business of the Department.

Mr. HUNTON. I would like the gentleman to tell me the difference between this amendment and my own.

Mr. CLYMER. The gentleman's proposition was an amendment to the proviso, which has just been stricken out on motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DEERING.]

The amendment of Mr. CLYMER was agreed to.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move to amend by inserting the following, to come in at the end of the paragraph:

And provided further, That $30,000 of this appropriation, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, may be used in paying rewards for apprehension of mail robbers.

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to this amendment, though I think that under the law as it now stands the Department can use the money for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph of the bill, as follows:

For preparation and publication of post-route maps, $25,000; and the Postmaster-General may authorize the publication and sale of said maps to individuals at the cost thereof, the proceeds of said sales to be applied as a further appropriation for said purpose.

Mr. WADDELL. I have to regret again that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have instructed me to report an amendment. I move to amend the amount of this appropriation by striking out $25,000 and inserting $40,000. I regret again that my friend from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] chairman of the subcommittee on Appropriations, did not consult with the Post-Office Committee in regard to some of these matters, whereby I would have been relieved of the painful necessity of troubling him so much. I now yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] who will explain the amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in the main I heartily concur with the Committee on Appropriations in its recommendations touching this bill. In a few cases I believe the amount recommended is too small, and in one instance, which I will point out further on in the bill, I believe the committee recommend an unnecessary appropriation. I indorse the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] to appropriate $45,000, the estimate of the Postmaster-General, for the preparation and publication of post-route maps, instead of $25,000, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. I feel quite sure that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] in charge of the bill will accept the amendment if he will inquire fully as to its necessity.

The importance of the work of the topographer of the Post-Office Department being promptly and well done will be seen by recollecting the extent of our territory in which mail service is performed, especially when it is recollected that the routes upon which service is performed aggregate in length 292,820 miles, and that these routes are constantly being added to by Congress, changed, curtailed, and in some instances discontinued where service is no longer necessary; and that upon these routes there are 37,345 post-offices, which are continually being added to by the establishment of new offices, or changed by the revocation and discontinuance of old ones; all of which has to be kept track of by the topographer and shown upon his maps, and for the proper conduct of the service these maps must be reproduced in sufficient numbers to furnish the Post-Office Department and its principal offices throughout the country copies of the same; and it is a fact that this work is so well done by the topographer that these maps are a necessity for the committees of the House and Senate, and for the other Departments of the Government.

All this requires three editions of these maps annually, there being twenty of them consisting of sixty-five sheets. In addition to these three editions one hundred and fifty copies of these maps have to be altered and kept up by hand from week to week as new routes are added by act of Congress, or old ones changed or discontinued by order of the Postmaster-General. To do all this work with much other that time will not allow me to enumerate, the topographer has twenty-two clerks now in his employment, the salaries of whom aggregate at the rate of $26,400 per annum, and the expenses for material, plates, &c., as shown by the estimates amount to $18,600 per annum, aggregating $45,000. For two years past this appropriation has been cut down to $25,000 and the result is that the work is greatly behind.

For instance, maps of Dakota with parts of Iowa, Minnesota, Montana, Wyoming, and Nebraska have never been published; Kentucky and Tennessee not published in full; Texas, map obsolete; Arkansas and Indian Territory not published; while California and many other Western States and Territories not published. In view of these facts I do hope this appropriation will not be so niggardly as to embarrass the service. The bill provides for sale of maps at cost, but this amounts to nothing, for the force in the topographer's office is not sufficient to make enough maps to supply the Department. In conclusion I desire to call attention to the fact that the Postmaster-General and his second assistant in their reports earnestly recommend the appropriation of $45,000 for this service. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4246) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MIL0 M. ADAMS.

On motion of Mr. MAISH, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Milo M. Adams, no adverse report thereon having been made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives on the 19th ultimo, relative to suits pending against the Kansas Pacific Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting statement of the aggregate pay and allowances of officers and men of the Subsistence Department for the fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MOUTH OF SAINT JOHN'S RIVER, FLORIDA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendation for an appropriation of $5,000 for examination of the mouth of the Saint John's River, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE.

Mr. MULLER. I present the resolutions of the New York Produce Exchange in regard to our export trade and mercantile marine, and move they be referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MULLER. I ask by unanimous consent they be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. The resolutions are as follows:

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE, April 10, 1878.

At a meeting of the board of managers of the New York Produce Exchange, held April 4, 1878, the following resolutions, presented by the delegates from this exchange to the national convention of the United States export trade, held at Washington, February 19 and 20, 1878, were unanimously adopted as the sense of this exchange on the matters therein contained, and copies were ordered to be sent to our Representatives at Washington with the request that they bring the same before Congress and endeavor to obtain favorable action thereon:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this exchange the most effective method for increasing the exports of American products and creating a demand for our manufactures abroad is by the simplification of the tariff with the view of ultimately reducing it to a strictly revenue basis, such reduction being calculated to lessen the cost of production, thereby promoting the exchange of products with foreign countries.

Resolved, That the depressed condition of the American shipping interest is largely due to the existing navigation laws, which forbid the purchase of foreign-built vessels and their registry under the American flag; and that as a prerequisite to the restoration of the United States to the position it once occupied as the rival of the greatest maritime power, it is indispensably necessary that American citizens should be permitted to buy or build ships for the foreign trade in any part of the world and obtain for them American registers.

Resolved, That subsidies or payments by the Government to particular lines of steamships, except such payments as may be necessary for the carrying of the mails, are wrong in principle and injurious in practice, and will only inure to the benefit of a few favored individuals or corporations.

WM. A. COLE, President.

WM. I. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to cause examination to be made of the flats in the Potomac River from the Observatory grounds to the Monument lot, for the purpose of ascertaining the practicability of the erection of a dike along the western shore of said flats, and report to the House as to the feasibility and cost thereof, and what effect such dike would have on the sanitary condition of the city of Washington.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES C. D. WILLIAMS.

Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4320) for the relief of Charles C. D. Williams, late captain of Company G, Nineteenth Illinois Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL STATION AT SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.

Mr. MORGAN (by request of General Myers, of the Signal Service) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4341) to establish and maintain a signal station at Springfield, Greene County, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF JAMES CANNON.

Mr. MORGAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4342) for the relief of the legal representatives of James Cannon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

OBSERVATION STATION AT SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

Mr. ALDRICH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4343) to establish signal weather-observation station at Springfield, Sangamon County, in the State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND RECORDS.

Mr. ALDRICH also, by unanimous consent, presented a resolution, instructing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to inquire into the best means of protecting the public buildings and records; and asked that the resolution be adopted.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire into the best means of protecting the public buildings and records from fire; and that it have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. STRAIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4344) to authorize the Red Wing and Trenton Transit Company to erect a bridge across the east channel or slough of the Mississippi River, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES NOTES.

Mr. CUMMINGS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4345) to prevent the reduction of the volume of United States notes, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

SITE FOR MARINE HOSPITAL, SAINT PAUL.

Mr. STEWART, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4346) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site and erect thereon a building to be used as a marine hospital in the city of Saint Paul, Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COLLATERAL LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MORSE, (by request,) by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4347) to incorporate the Collateral Loan and Trust Company in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4348) to allow commissioned officers who served as enlisted men in the Army of the United States, and were honorably discharged, to count such services with their services as commissioned officers in all that relates in law to longevity and retirement; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TREATY WITH COREA.

Mr. BANNING also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to the King of Corea and arrange a treaty of amity and commerce between the King of Corea and the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PROFESSOR GLOVER'S AMERICAN ENTOMOLOGY.

Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4349) to provide for the continuance of Professor Townsend Glover's illustrated work on American entomology; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

LONGEVITY PAY.

Mr. BRAGG also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4350) regulating the computation of time for allowance of longevity pay to certain officers in the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RACHEL DUNAVANT.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4351) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Rachel Dunavant, of Coffee County, Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PATRICK FLYNN.

Mr. COX, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4352) for the relief of Patrick Flynn, late a private Twenty-first Battery Ohio Volunteer Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAILS.

Mr. WADDELL, (by request,) by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4353) regulating the compensation for the transportation of mails on railroad routes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ADVERTISING OF MAIL-LETTINGS.

On motion of Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3787) regulating the advertising of mail-lettings, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

PAYMENT OF MESSENGER.

Mr. HATCHER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to ——— the sum of $100 per month from the 4th day of December 1877, to the 4th day of April, 1878, for his services as messenger to the Committee of Territorial Delegates; also for his services as messenger to the Committee on Education and Labor from the 13th day of February to the 4th day of April, 1878; and also for his services as messenger to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department from the 13th day of February to the 4th day of April, 1878, all inclusive.

MARGARET S. FAIN.

Mr. BELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4354) to grant a pension to Margaret S. Fain, of Fannin County, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

VIRGINIA MILITARY DISTRICT, OHIO.

Mr. DICKEY. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to construe and define "An act to cede to the State of Ohio the unsold lands in the Virginia military district in said State," approved February 18, 1871, and to have it referred to a select committee, as set forth in a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CONGER. I object to its reference to a select committee. I will not object to its being referred to a standing committee of the House.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. CONGER said: I withdraw my objection to the reference of the bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DICKEY] to a special committee.

Mr. DUNNELL. I renew the objection.

Mr. DICKEY. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not understand that there is anything involved in the bill which a standing committee cannot consider.

Mr. DICKEY. Then let the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 4355) was accordingly received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LOUDEN MULLEN.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4356) for the relief of Loudon Mullen; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN COLORADO AND UTAH.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4357) to provide for the survey of the boundary line between the State of Colorado and the Territory of Utah; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JOEL R. CARTER.

Mr. BICKNELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4358) granting a pension to Joel R. Carter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES OF COLOMBIA.

Mr. MONROE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of certain petitions relating to the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with the United States of Colombia, and that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, that committee having acted upon the subject.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, before the question is put upon that motion, that in his opinion a fair consideration of the resolution under which this evening's session is to be held would be that the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions should have one hour, or so much thereof as they may deem necessary, in which to report bills for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. Afterward the Committee on Invalid Pensions should have an hour, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in which to report bills for the same purpose; the reports from those committees to go to the bottom of the Calendar, and to be taken up in their order as the Private Calendar shall be proceeded with in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. The pension bills now on the Private Calendar to take precedence.

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The first hour of the session to-night, or so much thereof as may be necessary, will be devoted to reports from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions. Then the Committee on Invalid Pensions will report for an hour, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and the bills from those committees will be placed at the end of the Private Calendar as now made up. When the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, the pension bills will be taken up and considered in their order.

The Chair desires to state that he will be absent this evening, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. COVERT, will occupy the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. HOOKER. Does the statement of the Chair in regard to the order of business apply to to-night?

The SPEAKER. It applies to to-night, to-morrow night, and next night, the three nights which by order of the House are to be devoted to the consideration of pension bills. The Chair has been in conference with the chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and he is advised by them that one hour for each committee to-night will enable them to report all that they are now ready to report. After the reports shall have been made from those committees, then they will ask the House to go into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the various votes by which bills have been referred to the committees this afternoon, and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Those bills have been introduced and referred by unanimous consent; but the Chair will put the motion for greater certainty.

The motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. McMAHON was then agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and ten minutes, p. m.) the House took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half-past seven o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. COVERT, as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the session of to-night will be occupied in the first instance and for the first hour of the session, should that length of time be necessary, in the reception of reports from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF PRESIDENT MONROE.

Mr. MACKEY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3852) for the relief of the legal representative of the late James Monroe, lieutenant-colonel Virginia State Line, war of the Revolution, and President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JARVIS JACKSON.

Mr. MACKEY, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2961) for the relief of Jarvis Jackson, of Laurel County, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ROBERT QUINN.

Mr. MACKEY, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4359) granting a pension to Robert Quinn, of Preble County, Ohio, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ABIGAIL S. TILTON.

Mr. MACKEY, from the same committee, reported, with an amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 1970) granting a pension to Abigail S. Tilton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ISAAC WINANS.

Mr. MACKEY, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4360) granting a pension to Isaac Winans, of the Ohio militia in the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MACKEY, from the same committee, reported back adversely the petition of Mrs. Mary J. Sears, for a pension as widow of William J. Sears, a soldier of the war of 1812, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MACKEY, from the same committee, reported back adversely the following bills; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3649) granting a pension to Alexander McClure;

A bill (H. R. No. 1618) restoring to the pension-rolls the name of Edward Booker, of the county of Henry, State of Virginia, a soldier of the war of 1812, whose name was dropped from the rolls under the act of February 4, 1862; and

A bill (H. R. No. 117) authorizing the issue of a pension to Andrew Jackson, (colored,) of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. MACKEY, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 687) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida and the Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

On motion of Mr. MACKEY, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 116) for the relief of Thomas Hunter; and the same was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

MOSES CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. The Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 408) granting a pension to Moses Cunningham, of McMinn County, Tennessee, have directed me to report back the same adversely, on the ground that the case is provided for by general law. I move that the bill be laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN KELTNER.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. The same committee, to whom was referred the petition of sundry citizens of McMinn County, Tennessee, for a pension for John Keltner, a soldier of the war of 1812, who served thirty days, have directed me to report back the same adversely, on the ground that the case is provided for by the recent act of Congress. I move that the petition be laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH A. WHEELER.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York, also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Elizabeth A. Wheeler, of Oneida, Madison County, New York, for a pension; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FRANKLIN PAINE.

Mr. GARDNER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1641) granting a pension to Franklin Paine; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH KURTZ.

Mr. GARDNER also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2602) granting a pension to Elizabeth Kurtz, widow of David Kurtz, a soldier in the war of 1812; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN HOLLAND.

Mr. GARDNER also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of John Holland, of Lewiston, Maine, for a pension; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARTHA WEBB.

Mr. GARDNER also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Mrs. Martha Webb, of Scott County, Mississippi, for arrears of pension due her father, Joel Sprouse, at the date of his death, July 25, 1872, under act of February 14, 1871; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY DESBROW.

Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 41) granting a pension to Mary Desbrow; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM FRANKENBERGER.

Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania, also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1070) granting a pension to William Frankenger; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

EBENEZER FARWELL.

Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania, also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2815) for the relief of Ebenezer Farwell; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MACKEY. Mr. Speaker, several of the members of the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and the War of 1812 are absent. I know they have bills to report; whether they will be present or not I am not certain. I ask by unanimous consent at the conclusion of the time allotted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions to make reports if any desire by this committee they shall have the privilege to do so.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

THOMAS MURPHY.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 1956) for the relief of Thomas Murphy, of Knox County, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS W. HEWITT.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 629) granting a pension to Thomas W. Hewitt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH R. HULL.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 1396) granting a pension to Elizabeth R. Hull; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH WINTERS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1930, a bill (H. R. No. 4361) granting a pension to Elizabeth Winters, widow of Jacob Winters, late private Company E, Twenty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CYNTHIA A. MIZELLE.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4362) granting a pension to Cynthia A. Mizelle, mother of Zedekiah M. Mizelle, late a private, Company C, First North Carolina Regiment Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEVI J. FRIEL.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4363) granting a pension to Levi J. Friel, late private Company K, Seventy-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LYDIA A. MORRIS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bills Nos. 2774 and 1365, a bill (H. R. No. 4364) granting a pension to Lydia A. Morris, widow of John K. Morris, late a private Company A, Fifth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3608) granting a pension to Mrs. Caroline Barnard, legal heir of Colonel Fanning, deceased, United States Army; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. GARDNER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman for what reason he asks the change of reference.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Because it is a bill for a pension arising out of the war of 1812, and the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and the War of 1812 is the committee which has charge of bills of that character.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I wish to inquire of the gentleman if there were not invalided soldiers in that war as well as others.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. There are still some few survivors left.

Mr. GARDNER. The report of the committee upon its face shows that the bill ought not to go to this committee, because it has nothing to do with the heirs of the soldiers of the war of 1812.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. To relieve gentlemen of all trouble, I will remark that these bills were erroneously referred in the first place. They should have been referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, but by error were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion of Mr. RICE, of Ohio, was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back bills of the following titles; and they were severally referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 2102) granting a pension to Elizabeth Lovell;

A bill (H. R. No. 2245) for the relief of Mary B. Kirby; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2035) granting a pension to Susan Adams, widow of Isaac Adams.

AGATHA O'BRIEN.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3166) granting a pension to Agatha O'Brien, widow of John P. J. O'Brien, brevet major United States Army; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM ABENDROTH.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1778) granting a pension to William Abendroth; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ANDREW A. GOODING.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2321) granting a pension to Andrew A. Gooding, of Fentress County, Tennessee; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. CHASE.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 44) granting additional pension to John F. Chase, of Saybrook, Connecticut; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY F. M'KEEVER.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4365) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. McKeever, widow of the late Commodore Isaac McKeever, of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE SMITH.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3609) granting a pension to George Smith, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. LEE.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1908) for the relief of William H. Lee, late private Fifty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF PENSION IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. MACKEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 2639) to increase the pension of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands or both their feet in the service of the country. I ask the present consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order as part of the business assigned for this evening.

Mr. MACKEY. I understood that it was in order to make this report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order, as the Chair understands it, under the assignment of business for this evening's session.

Mr. MACKEY. Then I ask that the bill be placed on the Private Calendar, and that the report be printed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am in favor of this bill and would like to have it passed, but it seems to me that under the order of the House action cannot be taken upon it; we have met to-night simply for the purpose of receiving reports from committees of a private nature.

Mr. MACKEY. I was instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report this bill and I understand that that committee is allowed to report bills to-night and I am confident that I have a right to report the bill, although it may not be subject to consideration.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I submit that only bills of a private nature are to be reported to-night and this bill is of a general character, and evidently does not, therefore, come within the rule.

Mr. MACKEY. The bill provides for an increase of pension to a very small class of pensioners.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Nevertheless it is a public bill. I am in favor of the bill, but I do not think that it comes within the order made for this evening's session.

Mr. MACKEY. Then I withdraw the request to have it considered at this time.

Mr. CLYMER. I suggest to my colleague that he withdraw the report, for if he lets it go upon the Private Calendar it may be buried there when it might be passed in the House at any time.

Mr. MACKEY. Then I ask leave to withdraw the report of the bill.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I hope that the leave will be granted. There was no objection, and the report was withdrawn.

MARY WILKES.

Mr. MACKEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4366) granting a pension to Mary Wilkes, widow of Rear-Admiral Charles Wilkes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OLIVER YAKE.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3103) for the relief of Oliver Yake, of Sanilac County, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS B. McNAMARA.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 848) for the relief of Francis B. McNamara, of Condersport, Potter County, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. THOMPSON.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 530) granting a pension to James W. Thompson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ROBERT BUTLER.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 79) granting a pension to Robert Butler; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. SARAH A. BELL.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2697 a bill (H. R. No. 4367) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah A. Bell, widow of William Bell, late a private in Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ESTHER A. GEORGE.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 328) granting a pension to Mrs. Esther A. George.

Mr. MACKEY. If it is in order I would like to have that bill passed now. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have instructed me to report it back with a favorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. SINICKSON. It has always been customary to pass Senate bills when reported.

Mr. MACKEY. If there be no objection I would like to have the bill passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to taking action on the pending bill as proposed?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. What is the bill?

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. MACKEY. If any gentleman objects to it on the ground that it is not in order, I will ask that it be placed on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I think we had better follow the order prescribed to us by the House.

Mr. CLYMER. The order of the House was that to-night's session should be for the reception of reports of a private nature for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar as upon objection day.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Under the understanding that that was to be the order a great majority of the members of the House have absented themselves, and I do not think we ought to take any advantage of their absence.

Mr. MACKEY. Then I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report be ordered to be printed.

It was so ordered.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MACKEY, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following bills; which were severally laid on the table and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed.

A bill (H. R. No. 146) granting a pension to Eliza Ceville; and

A bill (H. R. No. 96) granting a pension to Henry Hadley, late private Company G, Eighty-sixth New York Volunteer Infantry.

JAMES H. THEW.

Mr. WALSH, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 735) granting a pension to James H. Thew; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELIZA BAYARD ANDERSON.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RAINEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with adverse recommendations, bills of the following titles; and the same were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 1384) granting a pension to Hanna Wehe, of Newport, Kentucky;

The bill (H. R. No. 153) granting a pension to Charles Hewitt; and
The bill (H. R. No. 81) granting a pension to A. M. Atwood.

HANNAH STREETS.

Mr. RAINEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 873) granting a pension to Hannah Streets; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LUNCINDA C. DILLAHENTY.

Mr. STEELE. I understand permission was given to members of the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions who were not present when that committee was called to make reports as soon as the Committee on Invalid Pensions had finished reporting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given for that purpose.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4392) for the relief of Luncinda C. Dillahenty, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. WRIGHT.

Mr. STEELE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 511) granting a pension to George W. Wright, of Brown County, Illinois, a soldier of the war of 1812; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JESSE STALLINGS.

Mr. STEELE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1348) to restore the name of Jesse Stallings, of Butler County, Alabama, to the pension list; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE D. PHILLIPS.

Mr. STEELE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 247) granting a pension to George D. Phillips, a soldier of the war of 1812; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. STEELE also, from the same committee, reported back, with adverse recommendations, bills of the following titles; and the same were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2234) granting a pension to John Guthrie, of Halifax County, Virginia, a soldier of the war of 1812; and
A bill (H. R. No. 3426) for the relief of Willis Jarman, of North Carolina.

MRS. SIDNEY A. HARRISON.

Mr. NORCROSS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4393) granting a pension to Mrs. Sidney A. Harrison; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEROY D. SUTTON.

Mr. NORCROSS also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 320) for the relief of Leroy D. Sutton; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SALLY ROGERS.

Mr. NORCROSS also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the petition of Sally Rogers, widow of Isaac Rogers, a soldier of the war of 1812, for a pension; and moved that the petition be laid on the table, and that the accompanying report be printed.

Mr. PRICE. I want that to go on the Calendar, and I wish the report to show that the petition is reported back because the new law covers it.

Mr. NORCROSS. The report finds the claimant is entitled to relief under the law approved March 9, 1878. We have no objection to its going on the Calendar if it is desired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be printed; and that fact appears on the face of the report.

Mr. PRICE. Very well; the report being printed, I am not anxious that the petition should go on the Calendar.

The motion of Mr. NORCROSS was agreed to; and the petition was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSION BILLS ON PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. MILLS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole have under consideration the Private Calendar for consideration of revolutionary and invalid pension bills as upon objection day, and the Clerk will commence the call where it was left off on the last objection day, and the first bill for consideration is bill H. R. No. 407, at the top of page 13 of the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. There is a bill upon page 12 (H. R. No. 934) for the relief of the heirs of Brigadier-General William Thompson, of the Revolutionary Army.

The CHAIRMAN. That bill has been objected to by five members and therefore has gone over for consideration.

JAMES P. THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 407) granting a pension to James P. Thompson, of McMinnville, Tennessee, reported by Mr. GARDNER from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions adversely.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I object to that bill, as the report is adverse.

HENRY C. WEATHERBY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 706) granting a pension to Henry C. Weatherby, a soldier in the war of 1812, reported by Mr. GARDNER from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions adversely.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I object to that, as it is an adverse report.

CHARLES SLAWSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 99) granting a pension to Charles Slawson, reported by Mr. GARDNER from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Charles Slawson, late a soldier in the war of 1812, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

AGNES FAIRLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 11) granting a pension to Agnes Fairley, widow of David Fairley, reported by Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read.

Mr. CLYMER. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. CLYMER. I object to the bill.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman why he objects?

Mr. CLYMER. The fact that there is a minority report is a sufficient objection.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I submit that one objection will not prevent the bill being laid aside to be reported favorably.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the bill been objected to?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. It has.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that it has not been objected to.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. The Clerk is simply mistaken.

Mr. CLYMER. We are operating under a special order.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. We propose to operate strictly under it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no record of the bill ever having been objected to at all and of course it could not be proceeded with after one objection.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think my colleague on the committee is mistaken and that it was objected to.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I state that I am clearly correct in my recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk states that the bill has not been objected to, and the Chairman must go by the record.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I will simply remark that if I am correct I do not wish that any of my rights shall be put in jeopardy at all because I am certain I am correct.

The CHAIRMAN. If it shall appear that the Clerk is mistaken then of course the gentleman will lose none of his rights.

Mr. CLYMER. In view of the statement of the gentleman, I will not stand here alone to object to the bill but will withdraw my objection unless five others join with me.

Mr. BROWNE. I know I heard the report read here once before.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the laying aside of this bill?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not know whether the bill ought to pass or not.

More than five members rising to object, the bill was passed over.

MARGARET KENAH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3109) granting a pension to Margaret Kenah, widow of Patrick Kenah, late a private Company D, First United States Artillery, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. WALSH, and objected to on the 22d March last.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there objections made to this bill by five members?

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN B. TUCKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 506) granting a pension to John B. Tucker, reported by Mr. RIDDLE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions adversely, and objected to by Mr. BREWER on the 22d of March, last.

The bill being objected to by five members, it was passed over.

MARY MARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 844) granting a pension to Mary Martin, mother by adoption of James R. Martin, late a private in Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and objected to on the 22d of March last.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there five members objecting to this bill?

Mr. HANNA. Is this a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. It is.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CATHARINE BOWERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3072) granting a pension to Catharine Bowers, widow of a soldier of the war of 1812, reported by Mr. MACKEY from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions adversely.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. That is an adverse report and I object to it.

CATHARINE BRENNAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1147) granting a pension to Catharine Brennan, widow of John Brennan, late private of Company B, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, reported by Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HANNA. Is that a unanimous report?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. It is.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ROSE MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 490) granting a pension to Rose Miller, widow of Reason F. Miller, deceased, late a private in Company E, One hundred and twenty-third Illinois Infantry, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RICE, of Ohio.

Mr. HANNA. Is that a unanimous report?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. It is.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM ROYLSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 388) for the relief of William Royston, late private Company D, First Regiment Tennessee Light Artillery, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RICE, of Ohio.

Mr. CLYMER. Is this report unanimous?

Mr. RIDDLE. It is.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

OTHER PENSION BILLS.

Mr. HANNA. I suggest that the Clerk inform us if the reports are unanimous and that may determine whether we call for the reading of the bill and report.

The CHAIRMAN. Where there is no minority report it will be assumed as a fact that the report is unanimous.

Mr. RAINEY. I will say that all the reports of the Committee on Invalid Pensions are unanimous; there are no minority reports.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Except where the bills are for an increase of pension they are unanimous, but where they are for increase of pension they are not always unanimous.

There being no objection, the following bills were laid aside to be reported favorably to the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia S. W. Evans, widow of Henry D. Evans, late first lieutenant of Company B, Thirteenth Missouri Volunteers, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RICE, of Ohio;

A bill (H. R. No. 3564) granting a pension to Mrs. Isabell Dunbar, widow of Daniel Dunbar, late first engineer on steamer Victor No. 2, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RICE, of Ohio; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3565) granting a pension to Dr. P. F. Reuss, late surgeon Seventh New York Volunteers, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RICE, of Ohio.

Mr. CLYMER. We are going on the supposition that the reports in these cases are unanimous.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Certainly; and I will inform the gentleman when such is not the fact.

The following bills were also laid aside without objection, to be reported favorably to the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 1993) for the relief of Henry Rogers, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. MACKEY;

A bill (H. R. No. 3566) granting a pension to Harriet E. Edwards, widow of David S. Edwards, late surgeon in the United States Navy, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. MACKEY;

A bill (H. R. No. 3568) granting a pension to Mary T. Thompson, widow of William Thompson, late second lieutenant Company E, Twelfth New York Volunteers, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. WALSH;

A bill (H. R. No. 3569) granting a pension to Ovid H. Clark, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1815) granting a pension to Florence V. Moore, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RIDDLE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2534) granting an increase of pension to Robert W. Livingston, reported with an amendment from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RIDDLE.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Robert W. Livingston, of Elizabethtown, Essex County, New York, late a captain in the One hundred and eighteenth Regiment of New York Volunteers, at the rate of $36 per month, as provided by chapter 73 of the laws of the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, said increase of pension to date from the 28th day of February, 1877, the date of the passage of the act above named.

The amendment was to strike out the words "said increase of pension to date from the 28th day of February, 1877, the date of the passage of the act above named," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "said increase to date from the passage of this act."

Mr. CLYMER. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill H. R. No. 2534, respectfully report:

This bill is for the purpose of increasing the pension of Robert W. Livingston, late captain in the One hundred and eighteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, from $24 per month to $36 per month, it being alleged that his disabilities came within the provisions of the act of February 28, 1877, which gave a "pension of $36 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg."

The examining surgeon, Dr. W. H. Richardson, says, under the date of October 25, 1877, after describing the wound in the right foot and leg: "For all purposes of earning his living this injury is equivalent to the loss of his foot;" and after describing the wound in the left shoulder and arm the examining surgeon says: "The hand is useless, and for all practical purposes in earning a living the injury to his arm and hand is equivalent to the loss of his hand." All the wounds were received in the battle of Drury's Bluff, in Virginia, May 16, 1864.

The Commissioner of Pensions has rejected the application for the increase upon the ground that the wounds described do not come within the express provisions of the act of February 28, 1877. Your committee are of the opinion that the spirit of that act covers the case of Captain Livingston if the letter does not; and when it is remembered that the act applies to soldiers who, "in line of duty, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally and permanently disabled in both," we think that this case comes within the letter of that act, and we therefore report back the bill favorably with an amendment, and recommend its passage.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I will say that this report is unanimous.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3570) granting an increase of pension to John Murphy, late private Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RICE, of Ohio.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John Murphy, late private Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, would report as follows:

The petitioner is now receiving a pension of $24 per month, but he now applies for an increase to $30 per month, under the act of June 18, 1874, for "blindness of both eyes."

The petitioner was examined by Dr. John E. Carpenter, the examining surgeon, August 15, 1877, when he reported that, in his opinion, there was some useful vision in the right eye, and that the petitioner was receiving all the pension to which he was entitled.

There is abundant non-professional evidence that the petitioner is totally blind, so as to require the constant attendance of another person, and this evidence is fortified by the testimony of Dr. W. V. Marrison, sworn to February 5, 1878, which says: "I have carefully examined John Murphy's eyes, and find that he is totally and hopelessly blind."

Your committee therefore report back the petition with a favorable recommendation and the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HANNA. Does the evidence show that this loss of sight was by reason of injuries received while in service in the Army?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. There is no doubt about that.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1774) granting a pension to Miriam V. King, reported adversely from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. RIDDLE.

Objection being made by Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, the bill was passed over.

The following bills were laid aside without objection, to be reported favorably to the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 3098) granting a pension to Joseph L. Young, late a private Company C, Eleventh Regiment Maine Volunteers, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. POWERS;

A bill (H. R. No. 3571) granting a pension to Zepheniah Crunbrough, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. POWERS;

A bill (H. R. No. 830) granting a pension to Elizabeth Teaganen, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. SINICKSON;

A bill (H. R. No. 1434) granting a pension to John Langland, late a private of Company B, First Michigan Sharpshooters, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. SINICKSON;

A bill (H. R. No. 124) granting a pension to James B. Treadwell, major of the Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. SINICKSON;

A bill (H. R. No. 3572) granting a pension to Andrew J. Morrison, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. SINICKSON;

A bill (H. R. No. 3573) granting a pension to Charles G. Galezio, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. SINICKSON; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3574) granting a pension to Thomas Pulling, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. SINICKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3575) granting an increase of pension to Josephine Da C. Thomas, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. JOYCE.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Let the report be read.

The report was read; after which (upon objection by Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama) the bill was passed over.

The following bills were laid aside without objection, to be reported favorably to the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 3576) granting a pension to Catharine D. Hunt, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 1649) for the relief of I. Clinton De Witt, of Canton, Bradford County, Pennsylvania, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 2711) granting a pension to Thomas Burroughs, late a private in Company G, First Vermont Cavalry Regiment, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 1175) granting a pension to George Silvers, private Company E, Fifty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteers, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 1789) granting a pension to Miles L. Reed, of New Castle, Indiana, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 3080) granting a pension to Warren F. Wood, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 3577) granting a pension to W. H. Gould, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 3578) granting a pension to Julia J. Wheeler, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 1304) granting a pension to Anna M. Clippinger, reported by Mr. RAINEY from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 8) for the relief of Othniel P. Hollis, of the Soldiers' Home, Augusta, Maine, reported by Mr. RAINEY from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 2176) granting an increase of pension to Mattie McTaggart, widow of the late First Lieutenant McTaggart, Seventeenth United States Infantry, reported by Mr. RAINEY from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 941) granting a pension to George Grove, reported by Mr. RAINEY from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 3579) granting a pension to Philip Henry, reported by Mr. RAINEY from the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2769) granting an increase of pension to Catharine H. Gallagher, widow of Captain John Gallagher, late United States Navy, reported by Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 519) granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen B. Foster, widow of Edwin B. Foster, deceased, late first lieutenant of Company G in the Eighteenth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, reported by Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to amend by striking out

"Eighteenth Illinois Infantry" and inserting "Eightieth Illinois Infantry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside without objection, to be reported favorably to the House.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1688) to restore the name of Hamilton Ryne to the pension-rolls, reported by Mr. RIDDLE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An amendment reported by the committee to strike out "from the date of his last payment" and insert "from the rolls" was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside without objection, to be reported favorably to the House.

The following bills were laid aside without objection, to be reported favorably to the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 2741) granting a pension to William H. Deery, Company G, Second Pennsylvania Volunteers, Mexican war, reported by Mr. MACKEY from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 532) granting a pension to John Frey, reported by Mr. JOYCE from the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

A bill (H. R. No. 3740) granting a pension to Elizabeth Reese, widow of John Reese, a deceased soldier, reported by Mr. WALSH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3731) granting a pension to Rebecca T. Scott, widow of Major John B. Scott, late of the United States Army, reported by Mr. WALSH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry bills, with and without amendment, and with a recommendation that they be passed.

PENSION BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported without amendment from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, were then respectively ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1088) to restore the name of Hamilton Ryne to the pension-rolls.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the titles of these bills, wherever necessary, will be amended to conform to the amendments made in the body of the bills.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar were severally passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH D. STONE.

Mr. SINICKSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (S. No. 285) granting a pension to Elizabeth D. Stone; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. MILLS, (at nine o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CLARK, of Missouri: The petition of J. H. Barnes and others, of Cambridge, Missouri, and vicinity, for an appropriation to improve the Missouri River at Cambridge—to the Committee on Commerce.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 17, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The SECRETARY (Mr. GEORGE C. GORHAM) called the Senate to order, in the absence of the Vice-President.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Secretary, I offer the following resolution:
Resolved, That in the absence of the Vice-President Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY, of Michigan, be elected President pro tempore.

The SECRETARY. Senators, you have heard the resolution. [Putting the question.] The resolution is agreed to. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] will please step forward and take the chair. Mr. FERRY thereupon took the chair as President pro tempore.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY, a Senator from Michigan, President pro tempore of the Senate in the absence of the Vice-President; and that he make a similar communication to the President of the United States.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Maria Hart, widow of James Hart, late private One hundred and fifty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Thomas Carbery Brophy, of Boston, and 64 of his neighbors, in favor of a repeal of the resumption act. I wish to say in regard to this petition that it was forwarded to me to be presented some days ago in my absence from the city. It is well known to the people of Massachusetts that my own opinions differ very much from those expressed by these petitioners, and the suspicion was abroad among some of these petitioners that I was going to suppress the petition. I want to say that there is a great variety of opinion in Massachusetts in reference to public affairs, and the right of Massachusetts citizens to present their petitions does not depend upon whether their representatives here coincide with their views, but upon the constitutional prerogative they have. I want to assure them that whoever may be their representatives here their petition will be likely to be presented, whether they happen to agree with the views of their representatives or not; and I desire to assure these citizens that if the Senate will refer this petition to the Committee on Finance, as I have no doubt it will be referred to that committee, it will have all the consideration which the respectability of the signers of this petition and the views which they urge entitle them to, and that they have lost nothing by my absence from the city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of John Wagner and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company may be required to vacate its present depot and the streets and avenues occupied by them, and adopt some other and less objectionable route to the city; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the memorial of John B. D. Cogswell, president of the senate of Massachusetts, and many other members of the senate and house of representatives of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the proposed transfer of the life-saving service from the Treasury to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of Caleb Loud and others, citizens of Loudville, Massachusetts, and the memorial of Theodore Dean and others, citizens of Taunton, Massachusetts, remonstrating against the passage of any act imposing a tax on incomes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. OGLESBY presented the petition of F. W. Wisner and 100 others, citizens of Decatur, Illinois, praying for an increase of appropriation for providing arms and equipments for the militia of the several States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY. I present also a resolution of the Patent Office Bar Association of the District of Columbia, in which it is resolved:

That the Patent Office Bar Association, upon further consideration, withdraw their support to so much of Senate bill 597 and House bill No. 3615 as abolishes the board of examiners-in-chief, and recommend the organization of a court in the Patent Office which shall have final jurisdiction in contested cases appealed from the examiner of interferences, and in appeals in ex parte cases from the decisions of the board of examiners-in-chief, the board of examiners-in-chief to retain their jurisdiction in ex parte cases alone.

They request that this resolution be presented to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Patents; and, as it is in the nature of a memorial, I present it in that sense and move its reference to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the memorial of Maria P. Fitzhugh and Ann C. Carroll, the heirs and legal representatives of Daniel Carroll of Duddington, Washington, District of Columbia, deceased. These ladies set forth a case according to their statement grievous and aggravating touching the consequences which have fallen on them and on their property growing out of improvements made in the city of Washington, and suggest redress by way of legislation. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON presented the memorial of John Campsen & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina, remonstrating against the extension of E. N. Horsford's patent for an acid substitute for cream of tartar for culinary purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, in favor of the passage of a law declaring Port Royal Harbor, in that State, a permanent naval station; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of Asa Johnson, of the city of New York, praying the extension of his patent for an improvement in fastening sheet-metal to roofs; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BRUCE. I present a petition of citizens of Mississippi, praying for the refunding of the tax paid on cotton during the years 1865 to 1868 inclusive, and that it shall be returned to the States in which it was collected. This is a question of considerable importance to the section of country from which I come, and one that should receive the attention of Congress at this session. Whether the money should be returned to the State from which it was collected with a provision that it shall be devoted exclusively to educational purposes or whether it shall be returned immediately to the individuals who paid it, I am not at this time prepared to say; but that it should be returned in some form I am clearly of the opinion. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1355) for the relief of John C. Ray, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3121) for the relief of Numis H. Coverdale, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 537) for the relief of Naval Constructor Theodore D. Wilson, of the Navy, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 507) for the relief of Dr. Edward Evers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 112) to make an additional article of war, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 267) in relation to distilling and rectifying spirits, reported adversely thereon, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2815) to authorize T. & J. W. Gaff & Co. to use a certain building in the city of Aurora, Indiana, for the rectification of distilled spirits, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was recommended the bill (S. No. 184) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior, for entry and sale, all lands in the State of Florida not needed for naval purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 308) for the relief of Joseph N. Lewis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 762) granting a pension to John S. Hall, of West Virginia, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. FERRY, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 805) to repeal all that part of the act approved January 14, 1875, known as the resumption act, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of United States bonds and redeem and cancel the greenback currency, to report it with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the Senate is asked. At some early day I shall seek the attention of the Senate to the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the amendment, will the Senator be kind enough to state?

Mr. FERRY. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Finance report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert:

That from and after the passage of this act United States notes shall be receivable in payment for the 4 per cent. bonds now authorized by law to be issued; and on and after October 1, 1878, said notes shall be receivable for duties on imports; and said notes, in the volume in existence on October 1, 1878, shall not be canceled nor permanently boarded, but shall be reissued, and they may be used for funding and all other lawful purposes whatsoever to an amount not exceeding in the whole the aggregate amount thereof then in circulation and in the Treasury; and the said notes, whether then in the Treasury or thereafter received, under any act of Congress and from whatever source, shall be again paid out, and when again returned to the Treasury they shall not be canceled nor destroyed, but shall be reissued from time to time with like qualities; and all that part of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments" authorizing the retirement of 50 per cent. of United States notes shall cease and become inoperative on and after the said October 1, 1878.

Sec. 2. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act shall be, and hereby are, repealed.

Amend the title by striking out the words "to repeal all that part of the act approved January 14, 1875, known as the resumption act, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of United States bonds and redeem and cancel the greenback currency," and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments,' and for other purposes."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I take it the bill will be printed as proposed to be amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the standing rule.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1105) for the relief of Asa Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1106) to reimburse purchasers at direct-tax sales in Arkansas declared illegal by United States courts in consequence of a defective board of commissioners; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1107) to authorize the appointment of stenographers to the United States circuit and district courts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAWES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1108) to transfer the title of the United States to square 109 to the District of Columbia for the benefit of the public schools thereof; which was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONOVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1109) to provide for the construction of a public building in the city of Tallahassee, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, it was Ordered, That the papers in support of the claim of H. W. Reed be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PATTERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 802) establishing post-roads in the several States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DORSEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4236) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 98) to divide the State of Nebraska into two judicial districts; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TAXATION BY INDIANS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. DORSEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish the Senate with copies of any and all decisions of that Department relative to the right of the Indians to impose taxes in the Indian Territory, and also copies of any and all papers on file in the Department relating to the so-called permit law.

TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. BECK. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish the Senate with the most reliable information he can obtain as to the total consumption within the United States of all manufactured articles to which tariff duties apply, including those imported as well as those produced in this country, with the proportion of each.

I ask the Senate to allow the resolution to pass. There can be no objection to it. We need the information, I think, very much.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution I think ought to call for "information in his possession." We have no power to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to go around and pick up information; it is no part of his duty; and we call upon him by the resolution to obtain information. If the Senator will change it to say "information in his possession," I shall have no objection to it for one. It will accomplish exactly the same result.

Mr. BECK. I meant to do that except for the reason that we can get a great deal of information, so the Bureau of Statistics informed me, from the census reports which really belong to the Interior Department. That is the only reason why I drew the resolution in its present form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should not object at all to that form if we had any right to require the Secretary to go to work to obtain information for Congress. I do not understand that we have.

Mr. BECK. I will change it as suggested. That was the only object I had in putting it in that form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will accomplish the same purpose, I dare say.

Mr. BECK. I think so, except in that particular.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear the resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported as modified.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish the Senate with the information in the possession of his Department as to the total consumption within the United States of all manufactured articles to which tariff duties apply, including those imported as well as those produced in this country, with the proportion of each.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RELATIONS WITH COREA.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to call up for reference the joint resolution which I submitted the other day in reference to relations with Corea. I want it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I should like to occupy a few minutes of the time of the Senate in stating the reasons for the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President—

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask the favor of the Senator from California to allow Senate bill No. 178 to be taken up for a moment in order to see if I can get a vote upon it.

Mr. SARGENT. How much time does the Senator ask?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not know of any one who has anything further to say on the subject, and it would only require a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill. I ask the Senator simply to yield for that purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill will lead to some debate.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I beg the Senator from California to yield.

Mr. SARGENT. If my friend will allow me to proceed, I shall conclude my remarks in fifteen minutes, and there will then be fifteen minutes left of the morning hour. I am informed by Senators around me that the bill will lead to discussion.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. The understanding was very distinct yesterday that the bill should be taken up to-day, in the morning hour. The Chair asked if there was objection to that arrangement and there was none.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator simply desire a call of the roll? Is that all?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will have to be debated a little, Mr. President. There will be time enough. The Senator from California has just had unanimous consent, which we never refuse, to submit some observations to the Senate. I am sure we ought to allow him to proceed.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Very well.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 24) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commissioner to the King of Corea to arrange a treaty of amity and commerce between the United States and the King of Corea, and to appropriate the necessary expenses in making such treaty.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, one of the most interesting events in the history of Pacific civilization was the opening of Japan to the five great western powers by the American treaty of March 31, 1854, the result of the United States expedition under Commodore Perry. On the 6th of January, 1869, the Mikado, or Emperor, emerged from his seclusion, and disregarding the tradition which forbade the "barbarian" to gaze on his face, received in state the foreign ministers residing at Yeddo, and exhibited a desire to maintain friendly relations. From 1858 to 1869 followed American, English, French, and Austrian treaties. As a result a great trade has sprung up, principally valuable to the United States, partly on account of our proximity and partly from the friendly feelings with which we are regarded by Japan. It is a fact that in those waters alone, of all the waters of the world, our tonnage exceeds that of all other nations. It is the only place where we have a fine American trade carried on in American bottoms.

But a still more striking result has been witnessed in this nation of thirty million people suddenly dropping a proud, isolating policy, opening relations with the civilized world, and rapidly adopting the appliances and modes of advanced civilization. Before that period all authorities concurred in depicting the Japanese as an effete, non-progressive race, sunk in superstition, with strange customs and sanguinary laws, but with considerable excellence in the mechanical arts. By the wise action of our predecessors this great people have been brought into friendly relations, have developed into a civilized nation, and vindicated themselves as the possessors of a stalwart manhood and an enlightened, enterprising spirit. The apparent transformation has been wonderful; but the change has been one of development only, not of creation. All the elements of a great people must have been there; they had opportunity and expression when centuries of isolation terminated.

Neighboring to Japan on the mainland is another people, with most of their characteristics, perhaps all, treated of by the encyclopedists as they formerly treated the Japanese, now waiting for us to extend to them a friendly hand as we formerly did to Japan, and promising as noble reward for the service. I ask the attention of the Senate, and of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom I shall have this bill referred, to the promise held out to us by Corea if we know how to avail ourselves of our opportunity as our immediate predecessors did in the case of Japan.

Corea is described by Zell's Encyclopedia Dictionary as a maritime country of Northeastern Asia, consisting of a vast oblong peninsula with an adjoining portion of the continent and a great number of islands. Appleton's Cyclopaedia states that it is bounded on the north by Manchouria, northeast by the Russian Amoor country, east by the Sea of Japan, south by the Strait of Corea, and west by the Yellow Sea and the Chinese province of Liaou-Tong, with an area of ninety thousand square miles. The population is estimated by various authorities from eight millions to twenty millions, and is probably about twelve millions. Its length is, from north to south, about six hundred and sixty miles, and the breadth is about one hundred and fifty miles. Its principal river is navigable for large ships twenty-two miles, and for smaller vessels one hundred and twenty miles above its mouth. The climate in the north is severe, but temperate in the south. The mountains are covered with forests, and pine is common on the coasts. Most of our domestic animals are reared in Corea. The people are superior to the Japanese in strength and stature. Their dress is similar to that of the Chinese, but they do not cut their hair or wear a cue. They have a literature, a monosyllabic language; are generally educated; are fond of reading, music, dancing, and festivities. The government is jealous of intercourse with foreigners, and these are not allowed to land on their coasts, and the accounts of the treatment of shipwrecked persons are conflicting. In 1876 a treaty of amity was made with Japan, the eighth article of which provided that in case of shipwreck of the people of any nation, friendly with Japan, they shall have kind treatment. And, I think, that illustrates the wisdom of our former action in opening intercourse with Japan. They have reached such a stage of intelligence and civilization, or development thereby, that they treat with a nation reputed barbarous, as they were at the time this intercourse was opened, for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of shipwrecked vessels of nations with which they are at amity. Of course that embraces the shipwrecked people of all nations, because Japan is in a state of peace with all the world.

The trade of Corea is with Japan almost wholly. No Chinese are allowed to settle in Corea, or any Koreans to leave their country. The northern frontier is abandoned for several miles to prevent any intercourse with the Tartars. The country is divided into eight provinces; the capital is on the Han or Kiang River, about the center of the kingdom, and the government is despotic and the laws severe. Gold, silver, iron, and salt are said to abound, but mining is restricted by the government to its own requirements. The principal manufactures are silk, cotton, cotton-paper, grass-cloth, rice-paper, arms, and horse-hair caps. European manufactures to a limited extent reach Corea, and only through Japan. The Koreans live in a frugal manner, and articles of daily necessity to the Japanese and Chinese are still unknown among them.

In 1866 a French expedition sought redress for the execution of two Catholic missionaries, but were repelled with loss. These missionaries, contrary to the laws of the country, had penetrated into the interior of Corea, and it is said had succeeded in converting to the Catholic religion the queen mother. The king, fearing cabals in his home and that they might try to dethrone him, had them arrested. One account says they were all slain and another that two of them were slain, the latter being the most probable fact.

Mr. CHAFFEE. What is their religion?

Mr. SARGENT. In religion they are Buddhists, I will say in reply to the question of the Senator from Colorado.

In that same year an American trading-ship, as it pretended to be, the General Sherman, went into one of the rivers of Corea. The captain was an American, and she had a consul's trading register, a register given by a consul to trade. Perhaps she was American-built. Of that I am not certain, but the presumption is that she was. She was manned by Chinese principally, and there were three other foreigners on board of her, one a Frenchman. A difficulty arose with the natives, and the vessel was burned, and they were all killed. Our commander in the Japanese waters sent the United States ship Wachusett, under the command of their captain, now Commodore Shufeldt, to inquire into this affair. He penetrated into one of the rivers and addressed a communication to the King of the country, and I call attention to this correspondence and especially to the reply emanating from the King to show the sentiments which it contains—the sentiments of enlightened statesmanship and humanity which it contains, and that the people from whom such a document can emanate are worthy of our consideration, and that we should seek to extend to them the protection which arises from our recognition as a safeguard against the aggression of Russia or any other power, and also for the purposes of trade.

[Translated from Chinese document a copy of which is attached to this.—N. B. Chinese copy sent with original.]

UNITED STATES STEAMER WACHUSETT, WACHUSETT BAY, NEAR MOUTH OF RIVER TAI-TONG,
January 24, 1867.

To his majesty the King of Corea:

The commander of the American armed vessel Wachusett begs to inform your majesty that he has come to the border of your kingdom not to engage in war nor any unlawful business, but in obedience to the command of the officer commanding the armed vessels of America stationed in these seas who has heard with great pleasure and thankfulness of the kindness of your majesty's officers and people to the shipwrecked crew of an American vessel in the month of June last on the west coast of Corea—

Referring to a previous incident—

how your majesty had them transported to the confines of China from whence they safely reached their friends.

The whole American people cannot but feel thankful and praise your nation for this act of kindness and brotherly love.

The officer commanding the armed vessels of America has since heard with pain and surprise that the people of another American vessel wrecked in the Tai-tong River in the province of Sing-Yang, in the month of September last, were all put to death and the vessel burned, and has ordered me to ask of your majesty if this is true, and, if true, to ask of your majesty what evil these people had done that they should be made to suffer such cruel treatment.

But if any or all of these people are living the officer commanding the armed vessels of America has directed me to ask of your majesty that they may be delivered to me on board of the Wachusett, now lying in the harbor of Tai-Pung, near the Kwets Islands, or at any more convenient port your majesty may select.

This is especially desired that the peace and friendship which has heretofore been uninterrupted for many years may still continue between America and Corea. A speedy answer is requested to this communication, in order that I may depart in peace.

Owing to the danger of being frozen in the river where he was, Captain Shufeldt was compelled to leave for another station, and the answer to this communication arrived after he had left. The King of Corea sent a copy of it then to our American minister at Peking, and Captain Febinger coming into the waters shortly after, he delivered him a copy of it, anxious that the American Government should understand the circumstances under which the General Sherman was burned, and this is the letter:

To Commander SHUFELDT—

That was his grade at that time; he is now a commodore, unless the word "commander" is confused by the king with "captain," he being commander of the vessel.

To Commander SHUFELDT:

The intendant of circuit in the Hwong-Hae district, Corea, and ex-officio inspector of the Imperial board of directors, makes the following reply to the commander of the steamer Wachusett, anchored on our coast off the district of Chang-Tuen, namely: That he has examined your letter of the 18th instant, forwarding a communication which you simply wish to be transmitted to my sovereign, and proposing to await the reply of the minister of the frontier. The local magistrate of the said place was in duty bound to inform you that the road going and returning would be quite long, and to have treated you with kindness and sincerity, so detaining your honored vessel for a reply. Now, however, before the arrival of the reply, the guest from afar has already departed; so doing how grievously have we offended the rules of propriety and violated true friendly feeling. Aside from the fact that this local magistrate has received a demerit mark, I have prepared a dispatch in reply, to be kept in readiness in case your honored vessel should return; and, first, I beg to state in general as regards the circumstances of this affair that the legal regulations of our country with reference to the merchant ships of a foreign country driven here by adverse winds are that, in case the vessel is sound, we are to furnish provisions and whatever is needed while waiting for a wind to depart. In case the vessel is not sound, and there is no means of proceeding by sea, then we are to follow their wish in sending an officer to escort them by land to Peking, which thing has occurred heretofore, not merely once. Such a course we look upon as in accordance with true benevolence. He who is in heaven above regards the people of neighboring nations as he does our own. Your worthy communication, which I have just received, is so exceedingly complimentary as to make me feel quite ashamed.

With reference to the affair which transpired last autumn in the Ping-Tang River, I would state that at that time there was a foreign vessel entered the lower waters of the Ping-Tang River, and the local magistrate of that place, supposing that the vessel was driven hither by distress of weather, and coming in to seek a vessel to tranship to, proceeded to make inquiries into the matter, but the men on board the vessel became greatly enraged at the messenger and refused to make any reply, shutting their eyes and lying down at their ease, clearly intending to offer insult. Our people restrained their anger, and, by the most humble address and earnest entreaty, found out that they were not driven here by storm. There was one man on board the vessel named Tany, calling himself a Frenchman, and another said to be an Englishman. They said a large number of men-of-war was about to come to this place, and if the local magistrate would suffer them to open trade with the people it would secure the dispersion of the soldiers of the two armies. The local magistrate replied that the opening of trade was not a thing that a local magistrate could assume to promise.

The man Tany, however, refused to regard it, becoming more and more unreasonable and violent. The water in the Ping-Tang River is shallow and unfit for running large vessels; but he disregarded this, and every day, riding on the tide, went up a few miles farther. Our people were especially anxious that affairs should not become serious, and so presented them with rice, meats, vegetables, fruit, and fuel. The man Tany replied that they would leave the next day; but when the next day came, instead of leaving, they advanced again, evidently intending to push their way to the provincial city. The adjutant-general went out in a vessel every day and escorted them, in order to guard against a collision between their people and ours. One day he threw out grappling-irons and ropes and captured the vessel of the adjutant-general, seizing him, with his official seal, and confining him on board their vessel. In some cases the trading-vessels they met passing to and fro they rent to pieces with their cannon, carrying off the goods and killing their crew. I do not know to the extent how many far and near; all were exceedingly alarmed and fled in continuous streams. How extreme was the disgrace of the adjutant-general thus to be seized before hostilities had begun! Nevertheless we still resorted only to mild words and earnest entreaty, requesting that the adjutant-general should be given up; but the reply was, "Wait till we enter the city and we will restore him." This man Tany could speak Chinese and was without a match in ferocity and haughtiness and seemed determined to force his way into the provincial city, though we did not know what his intentions were. The whole city, including several ten-thousands of soldiers and people, yielding to their indignant rage, came out in a mass to the river and commenced an attack with all their might, intending to rescue the adjutant-general. Several tens of people were killed by the cannon-balls, when all, becoming infuriated, rushed on in a mass, the force of which was irresistible. Fire was opened on both sides and fire-rafts were used. Finally the powder stored in said vessel exploded, rending it to pieces and sending the black smoke up to the heavens. The vessel was entirely burnt up and the men all killed. We still do not know whether this vessel belonged to your honorable country or not. This man Tany, without cause, pushed his way into the interior of another country and provoked this affair, and examination had to this time failed to discover his object in acting thus.

It appears from your honorable communication that the vessel of our guest is a different nationality from that claimed by Tany. The beginning and end of this affair amounts simply to this. That your honorable country's custom greatly tends to produce propriety in intercourse with others is well known to all the provinces as well as our illustrious neighbor, China.

As to what is said in your honored communication about continuing former relations of friendship without any occasion of mutual injury, I will simply say this affair is but a particle of autumn dust, not worthy to be entertained as a matter of doubt and solicitude. I now respectfully present this reply, asking you to make all necessary allowances, and for this purpose this reply is made.

A necessary reply addressed to the American commander, fifth year of the Emperor Tung Chi, twelfth month, — day.

Mr. President, these communications I have dug out from the recesses of the Navy Department. I am somewhat ashamed to say in the history of our country that this communication received no notice whatever at the hands of our Government, and has never been answered to this day; but after these events, in 1871, five years thereafter, an armed squadron of the United States went to this same dominion of Corea, some alleged for the purpose of inquiring into this affair, others for the purpose of surveying a river, which perhaps is the most decent excuse that can be given for it. This expedition, under the command of the illustrious Admiral Rodgers, now admiral—I do not wish to detract from the well-earned reputation of the admiral at all—went into this river of a country with which we had no treaty stipulations and went to surveying it, or went for the purpose of surveying it. We would not allow any foreign vessel of a nation with which we even might have a treaty to come and survey our James or any other river; but here was a people peculiarly sensitive to these things, dreading aggression on one side from Russia and on the other side from China, maintaining a rugged independence, isolated from all the world by a policy which it thought necessary in order to maintain itself as a nation at all. This expedition went into this river under these circumstances, and proceeding up the forts fired shots across the bow of the leading vessel, loaded shots for aught I know; at any rate, they fired for the purpose of warning the invaders of danger. That appears by the records of the Navy Department. The admiral then caused fire to be opened upon the forts of the Coreans. There were nearly two hundred of the poor creatures slaughtered in their forts by our superior artillery, and nearly one hundred of the rest of them, thinking no quarter was to be granted them, precipitated themselves from the steep bank into the river and were drowned. Our casualties amounted, I think, to three killed; and then the expedition left. What had been gained divine Providence might see, but I must say that it is beyond my comprehension, and I doubt if any Senator can see any good achieved by it at all. We certainly gave them a very different impression of our intentional treatment toward them than was conveyed by the admirable letter of Captain Shufeldt before, or than was deserved by the reply which they made to it, simply explaining the matter in regard to the General Sherman, showing that they were actuated by a spirit of humanity and benevolence, and I might say even of piety, if they are Buddhists, for the sentiments of their letter in that respect are as elevated as are pronounced from any pulpit.

The treaty of Japan with Corea recognizes the independence of Corea, and went into full effect in 1877. By it three ports are opened to the Japanese, and the countries send ambassadors to each other. Another provision of the treaty is that the coasts of Corea dangerous to navigation shall be surveyed by the Japanese. This work has been well performed, and an excellent map, the result of this survey, is now in the State Department in Washington. I might say that is quite a curiosity of work by Japanese, a people recently esteemed as barbarous, but it has all the finish and apparent accuracy of the maps of our Coast Survey. Corea also agreed to an international exposition between herself and Japan, which took place in Corea, very successfully, last October. The influence of Japan upon her neighbor is worthy of high praise.

Here, then, is a new people, numerous, contiguous, industrious, and receptive, ready for our advances, needing our manufactures, promising important trade. Destitute of all modern appliances there would be no utensil or machine that we manufacture that they would not soon learn to need. The establishment of relations of amity between this nation and Corea would secure safety, a kind reception, provisions and supplies to our ships and people in a country now exclusive if not hostile. The opportunity would be given to gain a correct idea of the configuration of the coast of Corea, and the knowledge of safe harbors against the typhoons and hurricanes of those seas, if anything further is needed than the map made by the Japanese which I refer to.

The money expended by the Government in making a treaty with Corea might be considered as an insurance on our shipping, which would be more than returned in a season, and might save ten times as much loss on a single vessel. The trade with Northern China would be increased by the security of navigation in the Yellow Sea. Our whalers in the Sea of Japan would be protected against a dangerous and hostile lee coast. Light-houses would be established on the promontories and islands of Corea as they are now along the coast of Japan. The blessings of modern civilization could be conferred on a brave and industrious people, now oppressed by political ideas inseparable from semi-barbarism; and Christianity might displace Buddhism. America is the nearest to Corea of all the nations having European civilization except Japan; and as the latter looks to us for friendship and assistance so would Corea. The credit coming to the United States for having opened Japan to commerce would be increased by success in Corea. While the shipping interest and trade of the Pacific States would be benefited so would the manufacturers of the East by the opening of a vast market for their goods; and experience has shown that the sale of our wheat and corn in England furnishes the balance of trade that clears the exchange which England makes for us in such eastern countries as Japan and China. The opportunities for opening new mines and other industries, together with the necessity the Coreans will be under of having instructors in mining and civil engineering and for the army and marine and educational institutions, will open careers for many of the well-instructed youths of this country. The Empire of Japan now stands virtually alone on that coast. The addition of Corea to the number of the strong, armed powers in friendship with the United States will increase our influence on that continent, besides strengthening Japan. Such strength is necessary, unless the advance of Russia southward on the eastern coast is to be unchecked. The Russian question is a formidable Asiatic question. That there is danger of the Russians taking Corea is obvious by a glance at the map showing the relation which the Yellow Sea bears to the frozen country of the Amoor; and Russia in possession of Corea is a standing menace to Japan.

It is a duty of Congress to provide means to develop our foreign commerce. The most effectual means is to enable our citizens to take advantage of new markets for our mechanical and agricultural products. Europe is now desperately bent on working out that problem, and if an European discovers a small tribe in Africa which wants cotton goods he is regarded as a benefactor of his race. Here are twelve million of people, our neighbors, who want our products. Let us invite them to be our customers.

Mr. President, I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

ENLISTMENT OF COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask for a vote now on Senate bill No. 178. I move that the bill be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 178) to remove all restrictions now existing in regard to the enlistment of the colored citizen in any arm of the United States Army.

Mr. BLAINE. I made the motion, when this bill was before the Senate some days since, that it be indefinitely postponed. If it is a bill that the Senate do not desire to debate or argue, I have no desire myself to detain it. I only wish it to be understood that, in the general judgment, I think, of both sides of the Senate, it is the end of the colored man in the Army of the United States. I do not think that is a just conclusion to come to and to declare through Congress. I am totally opposed to that conclusion; and believing that this bill means just that, whether so intended by the honorable Senator who reported it or not, believing that it will have precisely that effect, I hope the Congress of the United States will not pass it. The very same Senators who think that the negroes ought not to be segregated and made a separate part of the Army, but that they ought to be intermingled, would not vote one moment to conduct a school that way or any other association in which the two races come together wholly contradictory. Do not let us deceive ourselves. Let us vote on this bill with the understanding that, whereas as a recognition of the services of the colored man in the Army of the Union during the war, we gave him a place and a recognition in the Army, we now declare an end to that, and that he shall not hereafter serve in the Army of the United States nor wear the uniform of the United States soldier. Let us put it in plain terms and vote on a distinct understanding that that is what this act will absolutely accomplish. I am opposed to it, totally opposed to it.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Mr. President, I am much obliged to the Senator from Maine for his remark as to whether I meant to do away with the right of the negro to enter the ranks of the Army as a soldier or not.

Mr. BLAINE. I said before that the Senator did not intend it.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. I understood—

Mr. BLAINE. I know he did not intend it.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. I understood the Senator to say "whether I intended it or not." The RECORD will show that remark.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island intends that or desires that more than I do; but I think the legislation to which he has lent the weight of his name—and his name in military legislation has great weight in this body—will have that effect beyond all doubt. That is what I meant to imply, however I may have expressed it.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Mr. President, I hope never to introduce a bill or make a remark in the Senate that will cover up anything, either my own views or anybody else's views, or to accomplish anything in an underhand way.

Now, if it is the sense of both sides of the Chamber that the passage of this bill will do away with the presence of colored soldiers in the Army, Senators ought to vote against the bill. I shall not question the wisdom of their votes in the slightest degree. I will allow time to determine whether I am right or whether they are right; but that we should have a vote on this bill there can be no question. In my opinion it will not have that effect. I do not desire to conceal it from Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I believe that within two or three years we shall have a sprinkling of colored soldiers throughout the Army if we take away this implication that they have no right to enlist in other regiments than the four now specified. Then colored soldiers will present themselves for enlistment, and in time it will be found that they will be enlisted in all the regiments and be good soldiers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. The Calendar comes up.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. I do not desire to continue the discussion unless something more is said on the subject; but I do desire that a vote may be taken on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to continuing the further consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I do not want it understood that the vote is to be taken without the privileges of discussion.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. I do not ask that. I simply suggested that I was desirous of going away, and inasmuch as I have had charge of this bill and it has been put off a great many times—I believe this is the twelfth time it has been before us—I am anxious to have a vote. Besides, it has been said of me that I am the only member of the Chamber who desires to have the bill acted upon at all, with the exception of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE,] and now I want to know whether that is the fact or not. I certainly do not want to press my views on the Senate and continue to urge a bill which they all desire to ignore; and therefore I did not object to the motion of the Senator from Maine the other day for the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will allow me a moment. I do not interpose to thwart any wish of his. I would not put a straw in the Senator's way in reaching action on the bill. I say to him, however, frankly that I look with great apprehension upon this bill. The more I think of it—and I have thought of it a good deal—the more I doubt about it, not doubting at all the Senator's intention. Although I do not know that I shall feel moved to say anything about it, I should not like to agree that a vote should be taken without an opportunity to say, if any Senator chooses to say, anything further in relation to it. It has been considered in the morning hour always I believe, and that is the circumstance to which the Senator may attribute the interruptions he has encountered. I think such a bill as this ought to be taken up out of the morning hour when for the convenience of the Senate it may go on and be considered with that deliberation due to its importance, and I think it is very important.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask that this bill be made a special order for next Tuesday at one o'clock?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Go ahead with it now.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. I am perfectly willing to go on with it now.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not desire to make objection to the bill pending, but I ask leave to introduce a resolution to be laid on the table for the present:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday, June 10, A. D. 1878, at twelve o'clock noon.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope there will be no objection to that suggestion.

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senate is ready to vote, I shall be glad to have a vote on it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ENLISTMENT OF COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. Now I ask unanimous consent to continue the consideration of Senate bill No. 178.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to ask the Senator to renew his original suggestion, that the bill be fixed for next Tuesday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The subject is up now. It is all in our minds and it is better to go on and finish it now.

Mr. BURNSTIDE. I should be glad to have it finished now.

Mr. ALLISON. If that is the Senator's wish I shall not interpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HARRIS. Yesterday morning I gave notice that I would on this morning at the expiration of the morning hour ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 855) for the relief of Warren Mitchell. I do not wish to object to the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island if it is the pleasure of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill of which he has the management; but I do wish to renew my notice, and I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill I have referred to immediately on the conclusion of the final action of the Senate on this proposition.

Mr. INGALLS. May I inquire what has become of the previous order adopted by the Senate, to proceed with the Calendar at one o'clock to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that by unanimous consent the pending bill was continued. But for that the Calendar would have come up.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I ask that the regular order may be proceeded with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have had unanimous consent to go on with this.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the disposition of the pending question the Chair will call up the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say only a word, not to take up time. I share in the apprehensions expressed by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from New York as to the effect of this bill. I entirely agree that there ought to be no distinction on account of race or color in respect of enlistment into the Army. It ought to depend upon the personal fitness of the soldier who proposes to enlist, of the officer who is to be appointed, and of the officers of the Army who raise regiments and recruit soldiers. I believe that the colored race are just as fit for soldiers as any other race under similar circumstances and in appropriate latitudes; and therefore I do not think it wise to exclude them from the service of the regular Army of the United States.

This bill on the face of it does not do that, it is perfectly plain. It only repeals sections which require the enlistment of colored men into four regiments. That leaves it entirely at large; but I am satisfied from the course of things that it is equivalent to disbanding those regiments as colored regiments, entirely, and to the practical exclusion of the colored man, a citizen of the United States, from enlistment and promotion and appointment in the Army. After a few years, keeping up these organizations, this sentiment, be it good or ill, this prejudice, be it well founded or ill founded, will gradually disappear, as it has disappeared in this body, as we all know, entirely. But the time has not come for it, and therefore it is no reproach to this race, nothing against them, that the statute undertakes to protect them while protection is necessary in doing their share to maintain the honor and credit of the United States in the Army, and thus I think it is much better to leave the law as it stands for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, that the bill be postponed indefinitely, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MAXEY, (when Mr. COCKRELL's name was called,) I will state that the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] who is a member of the Military Committee, is confined to his room by sickness. If present he would vote "yea" on this motion.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 38, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—38.
Allison,	Dennis,	Ingalls,	Morgan,
Armstrong,	Dorsey,	Johnston,	Oglesby,
Bailey,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Patterson,
Beck,	Edmonds,	Kernan,	Randolph,
Blaine,	Eustis,	Lamar,	Rollins,
Chaffee,	Garland,	McCreery,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Gordon,	McDonald,	Wallace,
Conkling,	Harris,	McPherson,	Windom,
Davis of Illinois,	Hereford,	Maxey,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Mitchell,
NAYS—17.
Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Booth,	Conover,	Matthews,	Wadleigh.
Bruce,	Dawes,	Paddock,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Plumb,
Cameron of Pa.,	Howe,	Sargent,
ABSENT—21.
Barsum,	Hamlin,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Bayard,	Hoar,	Ransom,	Whyte,
Butler,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,	Withers.
Christianscy,	Kellogg,	Spencer,
Cockrell,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Grover,	Merrimon,	Thurman,

So the motion was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the order of the Senate, which the Secretary will read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, adopted yesterday:

Resolved, That on Wednesday next, at one o'clock, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, and continue such consideration from day to day until the same shall have been gone through with; and bills that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once, and for five minutes only, unless, upon motion, the Senate should at any time otherwise order; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings; and this order shall take precedence of special orders or unfinished business, unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to give notice that after action on the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee, I shall ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 490, relative to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas, of which I gave notice yesterday when I reported it from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 855) for the relief of Warren Mitchell.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope we shall go on with the Calendar as has been ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, the first case on the Calendar will be called.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not competent for a majority of the Senate to take up any bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is proceeding under a rule which has been adopted setting aside special orders and general orders.

Mr. HARRIS. Then, in the opinion of the Chair, that rule would have to be suspended to consider any particular measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARLAND. I gave notice yesterday before the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island was acted on that I should call up to-day Senate bill No. 490. This is a very important matter which should be acted on, and I am satisfied it will not take ten minutes of the time of the Senate. While I heartily concurred in the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island, I appeal to him to give his consent to the consideration of this bill at the present time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I cannot consent, for one, to lay aside the order of the Senate. If I do for one I must for another. I think the bill of the Senator from Arkansas will be reached in time.

Mr. GARLAND. It is not on the printed Calendar now. It was only reported yesterday, and I gave the notice at that time in order to expedite its passage through the Senate. I know the difficulty under which the Senator from Rhode Island labors; but this is a very peculiar case, demanding present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was under the impression that the Senate was proceeding under a rule, but he finds that it is an order of the Senate and subject to the control of a majority of the Senate. As there was objection and a motion was not made to take up a bill, the first case on the Calendar will be called.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Chair as now ruling that a majority of the Senate can take up a case notwithstanding the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so rules.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I desire to submit the motion that I gave notice yesterday before the adoption of the resolution I would make this morning; that is, that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 855) for the relief of Warren Mitchell.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee if that bill named by him is not on the Calendar?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir; order of business No. 151.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Can it not be reached on the Calendar?

Mr. HARRIS. I believe, under the rule, the bill will not be an unobjected one, and it will lead to debate which would go far beyond the five-minute rule.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate would grant unanimous consent for debate, or would grant it upon motion when the bill came up. I think if we are ever going to take up the Calendar now is the time to do it. If we put aside the Calendar now for the motion of my friend from Tennessee, it will be put aside on the motion of some other Senator, and the order will be entirely nullified. I hope we shall go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

A division was called for.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we might as well make a test of this whether we are going on with the Calendar or are going to give it up. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HILL. I am as much in favor of going on with the Calendar as the Senator from Rhode Island can be; but my understanding was yesterday, when we adopted the order at the instance of the Senator from Rhode Island, that it would not interfere with the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. He reserved the right to make the motion this morning. I think the order does not interfere with the motion. That was the understanding. Therefore I shall vote for his motion, but I do not wish it understood that I am against going on with the Calendar.

Mr. CONKLING. Did the Senator from Georgia hear the chairman of the Committee on Claims give notice that he would move on a week from yesterday to take up this bill?

Mr. HILL. I do not remember that. I only know what occurred yesterday. I understood the Senator from Tennessee to give notice, notwithstanding the order, that he would call up this bill to-day. That is all I know about it.

Mr. CONKLING. I refer also to what took place yesterday. The Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, [Mr. McMILLAN,] gave notice that a week from yesterday, next Tuesday, he would move to take up this very bill. I do not see, then, why I should not vote against this motion for the same reason that the Senator from Georgia assigns for voting for it, and I submit to him and to every other Senator that the Senator from Rhode Island is quite right when he says that the question now is whether we shall go on with the Calendar or lose the opportunity. When this motion has prevailed, if it does, some other Senator rises and moves to take up a particular bill. On what principle is the Senator from Georgia, and am I to vote against that motion? How are we to make fish of one and flesh of another? This is a private bill. Private bills have their merits; but surely there is no merit in a private bill which entitles it to precedence over all the public bills and matters of consequence which stand upon the Calendar. Why should it not take its turn with every other private bill? I should be very glad to vote as an act of courtesy to the Senator from Tennessee; but the difficulty is that there are more than seventy Senators here and more than seventy bills, and when another Senator rises and says "Now I ask to take up a bill," the same courtesy will constrain me to vote with him, and a little more than it does now because here is a division in the committee, here is the only organ of the committee, the chairman, giving notice that it will suit his convenience to take up this bill next week—

Mr. HARRIS. Allow me. The Senator did not quite understand the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Minnesota. He suggested to me to give notice, but did not give notice himself. It was a mere suggestion, and a kindly one, by the chairman of the committee to me to name a day in future, and I think he named next Tuesday.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Tennessee will see that that only strengthens, rather than weakens, my suggestion. It seems now—no doubt he is right—that the Senator from Minnesota, in place of making any suggestion hostile to him, in the interest of the inclination of the Senator, proposed and preferred a more distant day, Tuesday of next week. Thus we see the committee divided in its convenience on the subject. Therefore no stronger point of courtesy is presented here than I can present myself if, after the vote is taken, I rise and ask the Senate to proceed to some other bill, and there are several bills on the Calendar which I should be very glad to have reached.

It seems to me that the Senator from Rhode Island has done an impartial and an expedient thing when he proposes that every bill shall have its opportunity to be considered in its order on the Calendar. That is fair. It is just to every bill, and can do no wrong to any one; and so, although I should be very glad to vote as the Senator from Georgia indicated that he might in the direction of courtesy to the Senator from Tennessee, the difficulty is we cannot do it without overthrowing the deliberate act of the Senate, done only yesterday, which is the customary act at this stage of the session, and has been found by long experience to be conducive to the general convenience and the general advance of the public business.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say that I do not think this case stands on the same footing with others. The Senator from New York says there are more than seventy Senators here and more than seventy bills, and the same privilege could be claimed for each Senator that is now claimed for the Senator from Tennessee. I do not think so. The way I view this matter is simply this: I voted, I think, for the order moved by the Senator from Rhode Island; but before I gave that vote, I understood from the Senator from Tennessee that he would call up this bill to-day, and I should have voted against that order if I had thought it would interfere with his motion. No other Senator that I am aware of, except my friend from Arkansas, gave a similar notice. I think that when a Senator, on voting for the order to take up the Calendar, gave notice that notwithstanding he would call up a certain bill, and the Senate made no objection to it, it was rather an admission that it might be taken up.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will pardon me. Senators did make objection to it most strenuously. Here was the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] who particularly objected; and so did other Senators. Then the Senator from Tennessee said "Very well, I shall take the sense of the Senate upon it;" and at the same time it was mentioned that one of the Senators from New Hampshire [Mr. WADLEIGH] had a bill that he wanted taken up; some other Senator had another bill that he wanted taken up; and then the chairman of the committee suggested that this bill go over for a week, and on that state of facts we adopted this order.

Mr. HILL. Of course my understanding binds no other Senator and each Senator will vote according to his own understanding of the matter. Doubtless several things were said that I did not notice at the time; but I confess for myself that while I voted for the order of the Senator from Rhode Island, I did so intending also to vote for the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. Therefore I feel that there is no inconsistency in my doing so; on the contrary I think it my duty to do so. Of course other Senators who took a different view at the time, giving notice that they would not be bound by it, will do as they please. I admit, no Senator is bound; but still with the view I take of it, voting for the order to take up the Calendar with a distinct understanding on my part that that would not interfere with a vote for the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, who had given notice that he would call up his bill, I feel that it is due to him that I should vote with him. I do not exact it of any other Senator; but that is the view I take of it. So far as concerns the notice to which the Senator from New York has referred, I do not remember the remark of the Senator from Minnesota. I have no doubt he made it as the Senator from Tennessee says. Still I was looking to the Senator from Tennessee as the man who was moving in the matter and was going to move to take up the bill to-day. I intended then to vote with him, and shall vote with him now. All I desire in making these remarks is to give a special reason for voting to take up this case, and I do not wish that cited as a precedent against me when other motions are made and I am in favor of going on with the Calendar.

Mr. ANTHONY. I appeal to Senators, in the interest of the expedition of business and perfect impartiality to all the bills on the Calendar, to stand by the order that has been made. It has been found very convenient indeed, very conducive to the dispatch of business.

Mr. ALLISON. May I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that to-morrow there has been a special order made with regard to a bill for the Southern Methodist Book Concern, so that if we do not take up the Calendar to-day we shall probably not reach it this week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind Senators that this order takes precedence of special orders.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not aware of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 855, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) This question seems to be taking a political turn, dividing the Senate politically, I see. As I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] I shall not vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this is a political question, I wish to state that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHRISTIANCY,] I am not sure that it is one.

Mr. HARRIS. I will observe to the Senator from Vermont that it cannot be considered as a political question by anybody.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We only know a tree by its fruit; and it looks a little political just now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order pending a roll-call.

Mr. INGALLS, (who had voted in the negative.) I was about to say that on political questions I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] and as all the republicans are voting on one side and all the democrats on the other, I suppose this is political; and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. If this is a political question, I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. KIRKWOOD] is paired with some of our democratic friends, I think with the Senator from Tennessee, or perhaps with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to make an inquiry. How can it be possible that a bill providing for payment to a private citizen of money due to him can be regarded as a political question?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] seemed to think this was a political question, and refrained from voting on that ground.

Mr. VOORHEES. My remark applies generally to the question. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds Senators that debate is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The regular order, then.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is the most distant from a political question of anything I have known in this body.

Mr. DAWES. I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM,] but if there is any doubt on it it must be determined by the Senator's colleague, [Mr. EATON,] Will he please indicate whether this is one of the questions on which I am paired with his colleague?

Mr. EATON. Certainly not.

Mr. DAWES. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK. As I cannot see exactly how this is a political question at all and as the Senator from Tennessee for many weeks has been making a struggle to get this bill up while in infirm health and has been giving way to others, myself among the number, as a matter of courtesy to him I shall vote "yea."

Mr. INGALLS. In case of any difference arising, it was agreed between the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] and myself that his colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] should be the umpire. If he thinks this is a political question, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should be sorry to consider this a political question. I do not so regard it.

Mr. INGALLS. I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSTON. I cannot put it on that ground at all.

Mr. CHAFFEE. My colleague [Mr. TELLER] is necessarily detained from the Senate to-day.

Mr. MAXEY. I have not voted. I do not regard this as a political question, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—25.
Armstrong,	Dorsey,	Johnston,	Paddock,

So the motion was not agreed to.

ASBURY DICKINS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first case is the adverse report of the Committee on Claims on the petition of the legatees of Asbury Dickins.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There are quite a number of Senators absent from the Senate to-day who desire to be present when that matter is acted upon, and I therefore, although very reluctantly, enter an objection against its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That case will be passed over, and the next case will be stated.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. ANTHONY. Under this order are not the resolutions first to be considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has not been the practice of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I know it has not been the practice; but it seems to me the order literally reads so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to taking up the resolutions as well as bills, that will be done. The Chair hears no objection, and that course will be pursued. The first resolution on the Calendar will be stated.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L.

PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 691) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas," approved February 19, 1873.

CREDIT OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first resolution on the Calendar is a resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] on the 13th of December last, on the subject of the maintenance of the financial credit of the Government.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for a vote on that resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That it is of the highest importance that the financial credit of the Government be maintained; and in order to do so, the Government itself, in all its departments, should in good faith keep all its contracts and obligations entered into with its own citizens.

Mr. VOORHEES. I submitted some remarks on that resolution on the 15th of January, and I presume every Senator is satisfied of the correctness of the proposition, and I therefore ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. As I do not fully understand the purpose of the resolution, and in order that it may be more carefully examined, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VOORHEES. I prefer a vote upon the resolution. It is hardly worth while to refer it. I certainly shall never get a vote upon it if it goes to that committee of course. I think that is the design of the chairman of the committee. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to refer.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. The motion is debatable, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable for five minutes under the rule.

Mr. BECK. Five minutes will be long enough for me. I am very much opposed to the resolution going to the Committee on Finance. On the 21st day of January I introduced a resolution which, after a good deal of antagonism, went to the Committee on Finance, I believe six weeks ago, for the simple purpose of ascertaining whether it was proper now to continue the present payment of the principal of the national debt or whether we could dispense with the collection of $37,000,000 taxes, we being $220,000,000 ahead now under any construction that can be put upon the sinking fund, with the agreement of three Secretaries of the Treasury that that was the fact. And yet, though the Committee on Ways and Means of the House were then considering the tariff bill, and the 17th of April has come, and it is impossible to determine what taxes ought to be imposed in order to carry on this Government, the Committee on Finance of the Senate have seen fit to withhold that resolution up to this day, without the slightest prospect of its ever being heard from that I can hear of. If that is to be the fate of resolutions sent to that committee, I shall oppose any other resolutions going to them until something can be heard from them upon resolutions as important as the one that was sent to them at their request when offered by me.

Mr. ALLISON. May I remind the Senator from Kentucky that the Committee on Finance this morning made a very important report on a matter which has been a subject of very great consideration in committee, and they will be ready now probably to take up the topic of the Senator from Kentucky, having finished the consideration of one important subject.

Mr. BECK. They have, I believe, since early in November had that matter under consideration; and now after these many months' incubation they have produced one measure, quite important I admit; but I suppose it could have been done in an hour just as well as in five months. However, I believe that there can be no step taken in the way of determining how taxes ought to be levied and the amount of taxes to be levied until we determine whether we are to provide $37,000,000 to pay the principal of the public debt or not. Under all the circumstances, as they have withheld that so long, I think they have enough before them without taking this; this might be in the way of that; and therefore I hope it will not be sent to them, but that, as the Senator from Iowa says, they will have an opportunity now of considering that resolution.

Mr. KERNAN. Will the Secretary read the resolution pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That it is of the highest importance that the financial credit of the Government be maintained; and in order to do so, the Government itself, in all its departments, should in good faith keep all its contracts and obligations entered into with its own citizens.

Mr. KERNAN. I approve of the sentiment of this resolution; it is a mere truism, and therefore shall vote against the reference; but I must say, with all respect to my friend from Indiana, that I do not concur in the reasons he gave for the resolution. We differ as to them.

Mr. DAWES. I am quite willing to vote on the resolution, and I have no desire to have it referred to the Committee on Finance, though for a very different reason from that suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. I do not agree with the Senator from Kentucky in his quotation of the views of former Secretaries of the Treasury about the sinking fund; but I do not care to discuss that matter at this time. I think the Committee on Finance is not open to the criticism of the Senator; but I am in favor of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana. I am one of those who are of the opinion that it is of the highest importance to maintain the faith of the Government, and especially with all its citizens. I am quite in accord with the Senator from Indiana in the idea that it is high time that expression should be made by the Congress of the United States. The legislation of the last few months has led me to the conclusion that there is necessity for it on all hands and the people of the United States will be gratified to know that it is the opinion of the Senate of the United States, as well as of the House of Representatives, if this be put in the form of a concurrent resolution and be unanimously adopted by both branches, that it is of the highest importance to maintain the faith of the Government with all its citizens. When it can be firmly fixed in the minds of the people that the faith of the Government with its citizens in all of its contracts is to remain unchanged, whatever political vicissitudes or other changes may come over the people, the business of this country will revive, prosperity will be restored and invigorated.

I am quite ready to vote for the resolution of the Senator from Indiana; and he will allow me to say that I have been surprised that he has not called it up for action before, and insisted upon it, that the Senate should record itself upon a resolution so catholic and so sound as this is financially. I congratulate the Senator from Indiana upon the sound views on finance and the faith of the Government which he entertains as expressed in the resolution. I shall record my vote for the passage of the resolution and against its reference to any committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely suggested and moved that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Finance because it seemed to be a financial topic. I was not aware that there would be any opposition to its reference but I see that the Senator from Kentucky is opposed to such a reference and for the reason that we have not considered one other proposition presented to the committee. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that the sinking fund is a complicated question, and it depends a good deal upon the legislation in relation to the duties on imports and taxes, with which the House of Representatives has the sole power of dealing in the first instance. As he has observed, the House is now engaged upon the subject of the tariff. If that should be so amended as to increase the revenues of the country so that we could dispense with the use of the sinking fund, it might then possibly be a question of economy, but it would still remain a question of good faith as to whether we can violate a solemn pledge of the country given heretofore that there should be a sinking fund every year appropriated to the extinction of the public debt.

But, Mr. President, upon looking at this resolution, as I see that it does not make any exception of any contracts or compacts on the part of the Government, not even saying that we shall disregard our pledge in relation to the sinking fund, I shall withdraw my motion for reference and not object to its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to refer is withdrawn, and the question recurs upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the resolution does not seek to disregard any obligation of the Government. On the contrary, it was offered for the purpose of enforcing the duty of a strict observance of all our contracts and obligations.

I rise more especially to thank the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] for the support which he gives this great financial measure offered by myself. It is not so often that the Senator from Massachusetts and myself find ourselves in accord upon financial questions that I should allow this opportunity to go by without emphasizing it by my hearty gratitude. The Senator's criticism that I should have called up the resolution sooner can be answered in this way: I hoped and prayed that the seed sown in January might spring up in certain minds and bear fruit. If I had looked upon the Senator from Massachusetts as somewhat barren and rocky soil and a little uncompromising in that regard my pleasurable disappointment is all the greater in finding that my hopes in regard to him have been fulfilled. The Senator will therefore see that I was right in giving some time for the rains to fall and the heats to come in order that the truth might fructify in his mind and bear the ample fruits which he has brought here to-day—the hearty accord between Massachusetts and Indiana—which I hope will not be lost upon other Senators, and that we may have more following the example of the Senator from Massachusetts.

I shall now ask a vote upon the adoption of the resolution, and I ask that the vote be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I hold it to be a matter of the least possible importance whether this resolution goes to the Committee on Finance or not. The resolution contains nothing but brutum fulmen; it is an empty, pointless declaration upon a subject in regard to which there can be I think no difference among Americans. Regarded as a mere declaration of an intention to sustain the public faith, regarded as a mere declaration that it is a duty to sustain it, what is it but a truism which no man will dispute?

I had supposed, Mr. President, and am still of opinion that this mere generalization in regard to the duty of Americans to sustain the public credit and to maintain public contracts, was introduced as a vehicle only for the elaborate and eloquent speech which we heard from the Senator from Indiana at the time he brought it before the Senate. Having served its purpose, I supposed that was the end of it, because there was no one to dispute the general proposition advanced by his resolution. To what end should it be referred? Is it to be the subject of a bill? Are we to have a new repetition of those empty laws of 1869 to strengthen the public credit? Is the public credit to be sustained any more by empty words and vague expressions; or is it to be sustained by wise economies and honest legislation? No statute can be enacted to maintain the public credit. The maintenance of the public credit is best to be sustained by the hearts of the American people and by the votes which are cast here in the interest of true economy and in the strict maintenance of public faith.

It will be in vain to pass such vague, pointless resolutions and then to enact legislation right in their teeth, to make pledges solemnly before the country and then vote for their repeal or their amendment in such wise that they lose all the force for which they were intended. If in sober earnest it is desired to have a vote on the resolution, I apprehend that there will be no vote in opposition; that it contains that which every man's heart would echo readily. When you touch American credit, who is there that dares to say he is not its friend? Who is there who will not willingly say that he is its friend and maintain it?

Hence it strikes me that this resolution is, as I said before, mere brutum fulmen. It sails for point no-point, and it reaches no point. I hold it, therefore, as a matter of the slightest possible importance whether it be sent to the Committee on Finance or whether it is called up for present consideration. I did not believe the honorable Senator from Indiana cared for the passage of the resolution so much as that it might be the vehicle for the careful expression of his own views on this important matter. But if he desires a vote upon it, I apprehend he will find that there will be no opposition whatever to it but the approval of the sentiment, and I hope it will be more than the sentiment contained in the resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, this resolution is on the Calendar; it is business before the Senate; and if the Senator from Delaware knows how to dispose of it except by acting upon it he is that much wiser than I am. Whatever may have been the purpose for which I introduced this resolution, at least it can be said for it that it is a truthful and faithful statement of a duty on the part of the Government, so strong as even to compel the acquiescence of the Senator from Delaware himself.

In regard to the harsh criticism which that Senator sees fit to indulge in, using terms not at all applicable, brutum fulmen, &c., and that the resolution is entirely pointless, I can only say that it has the misfortune to be introduced by me instead of by himself. Had it been introduced by him it would have been full of point; as it was introduced by me, it is pointless!

Passing that by, however, knowing in my simplicity and want of long service in this body no other way to dispose of a matter that is fairly and legitimately and honorably before the Senate except by action, I again ask for the action of the Senate upon the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. I am very sorry that the Senator from Indiana supposed there was in what I said any possibility of disrespect to his motive in introducing this resolution. I said distinctly that which I do not think he will disavow, that he introduced the resolution simply as a vehicle for the expression of his opinions upon the general financial subject before Congress.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will say to the Senator frankly, I did; but at the same time, in offering the resolution, I enunciated what I conceived to be a great truth, which I proceeded to discuss as best I could, and which I consider not at all beneath the dignity of a Senator or the Senator from Delaware to consider and act upon.

Mr. WINDOM. I have only a word to say about this resolution. I regret that the Senator from Vermont has withdrawn his motion to refer it. Of course no one can vote against it. Everybody would say amen to the resolution, doubtless; but the fact that it seems to be considered necessary for the Senate of the United States to proclaim to the world that we intend to be honest hereafter, does not seem to me to be very much to the credit of this country. The man who always boasts of his honesty is always suspected; and the government that finds it necessary to deliberately pass a resolution proclaiming to the nations of the earth that it intends to be honest, it seems to me must feel that there is something in its past record which is dishonest. I do not believe that, so far as this Government is concerned. I think to pass the resolution would be to make an empty boast of our honesty that is beneath the dignity of the Senate of the United States; but yet to vote against it would be construed to declare that you did not indorse the principles contained in the resolution. I shall vote for it, as a matter of course, feeling that it would have been much better had the resolution not been voted upon at all. As the basis of the very able speech (there were some things about it I did not approve of) made by the Senator from Indiana it was well enough; but for a deliberate vote by the Senate of the United States I think it is not expedient.

I wish the Senator from Vermont had tried the question upon the reference to his committee, that we might not be compelled to vote either for or against the resolution. I believe this nation is honest; I believe it intends to be; I believe it has been. I believe there is nothing in its record that requires us to send forth to the world this empty declaration of our intended honesty in the future.

Mr. DAWES. A remark of the Senator from Minnesota makes it necessary for me to say a word more. If I supposed that the resolution was the basis of the very eloquent and able speech of the Senator from Indiana, I certainly would not vote for it. I like the resolution a great deal better than the speech, able and eloquent as it was. I thought the speech would rest on almost anything better than it would rest on the resolution, because the resolution embraces sentiments so directly opposite to and in conflict with what I understand to be the drift and purpose of the speech that I hailed the opportunity of recording my name in support of the resolution in contradistinction from the speech itself. I want it distinctly understood that I do not vote for the resolution as the basis of any such speech, although I admit, as the Senator from Minnesota says, that the speech was of great eloquence, great power, and great ability, and as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] would say, "It was a marvel to see how ably a man could present the wrong side of a case."

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Indiana will not ask for a yeas-and-nays vote. I think the vote will be unanimous on agreeing to the resolution, and we do not want to consume any more time on the subject. I merely add that I should hope the Senate would never send anything to the Committee on Finance for the purpose of having it smothered. It is the purpose of that committee, so far as I know, and of every member, that subjects referred to it shall receive proper attention, and with due diligence.

Mr. VOORHEES. An appeal from the Senator from Vermont is always very forcible to me; his kindness of disposition and manner both always impress me. At the same time, I think that I ought to insist upon a vote by yeas and nays. I do not agree with the Senator from Minnesota that it is not worth while to say that we will act honestly with our own people. In view of the record which we have made in our financial legislation, as I look at it, for some fifteen years past, it would not hurt us any to say that we are going to be honest hereafter, and then live up to it as nearly as we can. Therefore, I ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have the resolution before me now. The yeas and nays being called for, I shall be glad if they are ordered. I think the resolution goes a little further than the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is inclined to believe. Its language is:

It is of the highest importance that the financial credit of the Government be maintained; and, in order to do so, the Government itself, in all its Departments, should in good faith keep all its contracts and obligations entered into with its own citizens.

I want to say to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that there has been laid upon the table of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate accounts certified to by the officers of the Government, approved by the Comptroller, approved by the Auditor, approved by the heads of Departments, and we are pressed every day for relief by men who say that they have in good faith complied with their obligations entered into with the Government, and yet for years the Government has refused to pay them a dollar. I understand this resolution says the Government ought to pay those men.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator tell me what he alludes to?

Mr. BECK. I allude to contracts made by quartermasters, contracts made for Army supplies all over the Southwest, and to certificates given by all the Departments of the Government to men, and yet the absolute refusal by Congress to appropriate a dollar to pay them when the written obligations are here and quartermasters and commissaries and everybody else certify to their truth, and heads of Departments are pleading that the claims ought to be paid. I tell the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that I am afraid the Government is very much in the condition of a man of whom a distinguished Senator told me the other day. Perhaps it ought not to be told, but it illustrates the condition of the Government. A gentleman from a distant State went to New York to buy a bill of goods. The house were anxious to sell, the man was anxious to buy, but in their anxiety to know something about him they telegraphed to their correspondent who happened to live in Kansas City, and he like a prudent man, desiring not to go beyond the ordinary dispatch of ten words, answered back at once in ten words as to what manner of man he was: "Bond good for any amount. Word not worth a —." It was not a continental, but it was an equally expressive word. I am afraid that is the condition of this Government now. With a bond uncommonly good, her word is very bad. This resolution says that the word shall be as good as the bond, and I want to vote for that.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the Senator to say that he thinks this resolution goes further than I am willing to admit. Does the Senator mean to say that he thinks from anything I ever said or did or voted that I would be opposed to the Government fulfilling any such contract as he has described? I do not understand that anything I ever said or did or voted is liable to such a construction. I am just as much of the opinion that it is the duty of the Government to pay any such contract as that, that it has entered into, as it is its duty according to the letter and the spirit to pay the $2,000,000,000 that it borrowed to carry on the war. I do not think the faith of the Government to fulfill its contracts is measured at all by the amount of money involved in the contract. The Senator and myself have served upon committees on appropriations for many years, and there does not occur to me now any occasion on which he and I differed in those committees. The Senator has striven to the best of his ability, and that is saying a great deal, to see to two things in those committees—first, that the Government was never cheated, and second that the Government paid every such claim as that, which he believed to be honestly and fairly due. That I feel great pleasure in according to the Senator in all his service upon the Committee on Appropriations where I have had any knowledge of it. If I have failed to do the same thing, it has not been from lack of disposition, but from lack of that ability which so distinguishes the Senator from Kentucky. No contract of this Government, however small, however implied as well as expressed, have I ever myself shrunk from fulfilling according to its letter and according to its spirit; and that is what I understand to be the meaning of the resolution of the Senator from Indiana. That is why I shall most cheerfully vote for it, and I am the more anxious to vote for it that any impression the last few months of legislation in Congress may have made upon the people in that respect may be effaced by an open and broad declaration of the determination now of this Government to maintain its faith with all its citizens and in respect to all of its obligations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEREFORD, (when the name of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, was called.) I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] has been called away. If he were present he would vote in the affirmative.

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. My colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] is confined to his room by severe sickness. If he were here he would vote in favor of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I ought to say in behalf of my colleague [Mr. KIRKWOOD] that if he were here I am sure he would vote in favor of this resolution.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—42.

CHARGES AGAINST SENATOR BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next resolution on the Calendar will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. BUTLER December 15, 1877:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire forthwith, and report as soon as may be, any threats, promises, or arrangements respecting existing or contemplated accusations or criminal prosecutions against any Senator, or any other corrupt or otherwise unlawful means or influences have been in any manner used or put in operation, directly or indirectly, by M. C. BUTLER, one of the Senators from the State of South Carolina, or by any other Senator or other person, for the purpose of influencing the vote of Senators on the question of discharging said committee from the consideration of said M. C. BUTLER's credentials, or the other question at the late session of the Senate; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to sit during the sittings of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] in his seat. I therefore ask that the resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

ISLAND OF CUBA.

Mr. CONOVER. The next resolution on the Calendar is one offered by myself, requesting the President to communicate to the Senate certain information touching the surrender of Cuban insurgents and the future policy of Spain in the government of the Island of Cuba.

I ask to have it lie over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over, and the next resolution will be reported.

REPEAL OF RESUMPTION ACT.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next resolution on the Calendar is one submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] March 21, 1878, requiring the Committee on Finance to report the bill (H. R. No. 805) to repeal the resumption act, within one week, together with their action thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. That resolution has been complied with.

Mr. HEREFORD. The resolution has been complied with and there need be no further action taken on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator desire?

Mr. ALLISON. Let it lie on the table.

Mr. HEREFORD. It will lie on the table, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made; and the resolution will lie on the table.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR.

The next resolution on the Calendar was one submitted by Mr. VOORHEES, instructing the Committee on Pensions to report a bill making provision for placing the names of the surviving soldiers of the Mexican war on the pension-rolls.

Mr. VOORHEES. That resolution stands on the Calendar subject to the notice that I gave that I should call it up on the 30th instant, if the business before the Senate will allow, as I desire at that time to submit some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table until called up by the Senator from Indiana. This exhausts the resolutions on the Calendar. The first bill on the Calendar will now be taken up.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to give notice that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad and by a readjustment of the grants without increasing the appropriation to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad.

PENSACOLA AND LOUISVILLE RAILROAD.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 259) to revive and extend the provisions of an act approved June 8, 1872, granting the right of way through the public lands of the United States to the Pensacola and Louisville Railroad Company of Alabama.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GORDON. I do not understand thoroughly the numbers of the sections named in this bill, and I do not know where the land lies. I understood the bill to call simply for a right of way, but from the reading of the bill I infer otherwise. If my friend from Florida will give me the information, I should like to know why this land is designated by a donation to the company when the company asks merely for the right of way?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This land was selected under the act of 1872, valueless land, for the purpose of depots and machine-shops. It is nothing but pine land, lying adjoining to the line of the road between Pensacola and Selma, and was originally set apart by the act of 1872. Owing to the difficulties of procuring money since then, the road has not been built. The parties want to go on with the work, and the bill merely re-enacts the provisions of that act, giving the privileges originally conceded. It merely involves the grant of a few acres of land for the purpose of depots, side-stations, and switches.

Mr. GORDON. What is the aggregate amount?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. About five hundred acres altogether.

Mr. GORDON. On the whole line?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. On the whole line.

Mr. GORDON. How much at any one point, if I may inquire?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I could not tell exactly, not having the map here. The map is on file in the Interior Department.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, it is all right.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand from the Senator from Florida that this bill merely extends the time of a former grant?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is all.

Mr. McMILLAN. And it makes no new grant or embraces no subsidy, or anything of that kind?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. None.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is the mere extension of the time for building the road. I presume the company have not been able to fulfill their original obligation, perhaps.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is all.

Mr. McMILLAN. And now they desire to go on. I see no objection to it.

Mr. GORDON. I do not wish to be understood as opposing the passage of the bill. I only want to understand, if I can, something about the location of this land. There is nothing, so far as I can see in the bill, which would indicate that the land is not in a solid body. If it is for depot purposes, it ought to have been scattered along the whole line of the road.

Mr. OGLESBY. The land is as much scattered as the depots are.

Mr. GORDON. I have no objection to offer to the bill. I only wished to understand how the land was located and how much there was of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did the original act grant more than the mere right of way?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is a mere right of way grant, to extend the provisions and privileges of the original act.

Mr. MITCHELL. What were the provisions of relief in the original act?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The original act, the act of 1872 referred to, gave this land described here to the company for station-houses, switches, &c. This bill simply extends the provisions of that act.

Mr. MITCHELL. What amount of land was granted?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Five hundred and eighty acres altogether, all piney-woods land.

Mr. MITCHELL. The time within which the right could be exercised under the law has expired?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The time has expired.

Mr. MITCHELL. And this is simply to extend it?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is simply to extend the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands will be read.

The first amendment was to insert after the word "years," in line 7, the words "from the passage of this act;" so as to read:

That the act entitled "An act granting the right of way through the public lands to the Pensacola and Louisville Railroad Company of Alabama," approved June 8, 1872, be, and is hereby, extended for a period of five years from the passage of this act, with all the rights, powers, and privileges of that act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 8, to insert:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to invalidate the claim of any actual pre-emption or homestead settler accruing between the expiration of the act of June 8, 1872, and the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS GILBEAU.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 365) for the relief of Francis Gilbeau; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $3,701.67, to be paid to Francis Gilbeau upon his lodging with the proper officer of the Quartermaster's Department his receipt in full of his claims against the United States for the rent of houses and all damages to the same in Galveston and San Antonio, Texas, during the years 1865 and 1866.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is there a report with the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the report be read. That will explain the whole case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MORGAN December 1, 1877:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Francis Gilbeau, with the accompanying papers, submit the following report:

This claim is for the rent of certain buildings in San Antonio and Galveston, Texas, in the years 1865 and 1866, amounting to $3,701.67.

The loyalty of the claimant is proven conclusively.

The occupation of the buildings by officers of the United States Government for legitimate and necessary Army purposes is clearly proven, and contracts were entered into by which the claimant was to receive a reasonable rental.

The demand for rent for the buildings in San Antonio was declared reasonable by a board of survey consisting of officers of the Army. The claim was presented to the proper officers of the Treasury, but was rejected on the ground that the location of the building was in a State lately in rebellion, and they were prohibited by law from paying it. It was also presented to the southern claims commission, and was rejected for want of jurisdiction.

It appears from the certificate of Captain Henry S. Clubb, assistant quartermaster and district quartermaster, that the United States Government rented a ten-room building in San Antonio of Mr. Gilbeau, on the 24th day of August, 1865, and returned possession of it to him on the 10th of December, 1865. It also appears that a board of survey, convened June 6, 1866, recommended that a rent be paid for the use of the same by the United States Government.

It appears from the proceedings of a board of survey, composed of Army officers, convened on the 25th of August, 1866, that a rent of $400 per month was not "too much" for the use of the storehouse then rented by Gilbeau to the Government.

An affidavit of A. Fretellière shows that he, as agent of Gilbeau, agreed with Captain Henry S. Clubb, assistant quartermaster, that he (Fretellière) was to receive $400 per month, or $4,000 per annum, for the rent of the above-mentioned store-building.

A letter from General S. K. Mizner shows that a dwelling-house of Gilbeau was occupied for military purposes by officers of the United States Army on the 12th of October, 1865, with a "perfect understanding that a proper rent should be paid" by the United States Government.

A certificate from General S. P. Heintzelman shows that the dwelling of Gilbeau was used as headquarters by General Shaw, and afterward by himself in like manner, and that Gilbeau was to receive $150 per month rent for the same, and that the building was thus occupied from the 9th day of May, 1866, to the 31st day of August of the same year.

An affidavit of A. Fretellière, agent of Gilbeau, shows that the dwelling was occupied on the 12th day of October, 1865, and from that time until the 1st day of September, 1866; that $100 per month was the rent agreed upon from October 12, 1865, to January 1, 1866, and from that day he was to receive $150 per month.

An affidavit of James P. Nash, agent for Gilbeau, shows that the building known as Gilbeau's building, situated on lot No. 10, block No. 680, in Galveston, was occupied for Army purposes by Captain Atwood, assistant quartermaster, on the 19th day of June, 1865, and continued to be occupied until the 28th day of August, 1865, and it was agreed that he was to be paid punctually by the Government. He states further that he never received any rent from the Government for the use of the building, and that the rent charged the Government was but little more than half the sum he received from it immediately after the vacation of the same by the Government.

The affidavits of Messrs. William M. Varnell and James A. McKee show that Gilbeau was loyal to the United States Government during the war and that he was compelled to leave his home in San Antonio because of his loyalty.

Your committee are of opinion that the claim of Francis Gilbeau should be paid, and report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before the vote is taken on the passage of the bill I should be glad if the Senator from Texas would give us his views about the propriety of the bill; that is, as to whether the rent here charged is proper, if he knows personally about it. I should much prefer to rely upon the personal knowledge of the Senator from Texas than upon the estimate of Army officers, if the Senator has any personal knowledge of the matter.

Mr. MAXEY. I very carefully examined the report of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in this case, which I believe to be entirely correct. I put myself to the trouble to make inquiry not only in regard to the Galveston property but the San Antonio property; and I am entirely satisfied that the rent is reasonable and proper.

The bill was passed.

PRESENT TO CAPTAIN JONATHAN YOUNG.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. No. 8) authorizing Captain Jonathan Young, of the United States Navy, to accept a betel-nut box and a silver medal from the Emperor of Siam.

Mr. SARGENT. That and the class of measures on the Calendar similar to it I object to for reasons which I gave very much at length some time since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Being objected to, the joint resolution goes over.

INLAND WATER-ROUTE SURVEY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 263) to provide for a survey of an inland water-route and canal from the Mississippi River to the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CONOVER] has charge of that bill, which he reported from the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard. I would prefer not to have the bill considered in his absence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over, and the next bill will be reported.

RESERVED LANDS IN FLORIDA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 254) to retrocede to the State of Florida jurisdiction over lands reserved for a dock-yard, in the county of Escambia, in said State; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It retrocedes to the State of Florida all exclusive jurisdiction now vested in the Government of the United States over land acquired for dock-yards in the State of Florida, and annuls any deed or deeds of cession from the State of Florida, or any officer of that State, vesting exclusive jurisdiction in the Government of the United States over any of the territory of the State; but nothing contained in the bill is to be construed to take away or impair the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States over all land lying within the walls of the Pensacola navy-yard now occupied and used for naval purposes.

Mr. SARGENT. The bill ought to pass. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on Naval Affairs. It relates simply to ceding jurisdiction over a tract entirely outside of the Pensacola navy-yard, on which two villages have grown up. The people are very much embarrassed, not only on the question of voting, but on questions of taxation, &c., by this nominal jurisdiction.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBIA RIVER SALMON FISHERIES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 492) for the protection of the salmon fisheries of the Columbia River.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so referred, there being no objection.

EXTRA PAY TO SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 376) for the payment to the officers and soldiers of the Mexican war of the three months' extra pay provided for by the act of July 19, 1848.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very important bill. I see that the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] who has charge of it, is not in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

PROPOSED NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) authorizing the appointment of a commission of scientists to investigate and report upon the establishment and location of an additional national observatory.

Mr. SARGENT. Is that reported from a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. SARGENT. I move its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDUCK,] who is not now in his seat, to say when he introduced this resolution that he desired to submit some remarks upon it.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well. I withdraw the motion to refer, and will let it go back on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over.

WILLIAM B. WHITING.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 647) granting a pension to William B. Whiting.

Mr. SARGENT. That I shall have to object to, in the absence of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

LAURENCE C. P. HASKINS.

Mr. ALLISON. And also the next bill on the Calendar, the bill (S. No. 413) to increase the pension of Laurence C. P. Haskins, which was reported from the Committee on Pensions by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill also goes over.

LOW GROUNDS IN WASHINGTON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 542) to provide for the conveyance of the low grounds in the city of Washington, under the provisions of the act of Congress, chapter 96, approved May 7, 1822.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] who reported the bill, is absent.

Mr. MORRILL. I must object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

THOMAS A. WESTON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 148) to confirm the term, for the period of seventeen years from the date of its original grant, of the patent of Thomas A. Weston; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares the patent for improvement in pulleys, No. 67470, granted to Thomas A. Weston, August 6, 1867, for the term of seventeen years from that date, and reissued, No. 4971, July 9, 1872, to be in full force and effect for the term of seventeen years from the date of its original grant, namely, August 6, 1867, according to the terms expressed in the original grant.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no one shall be held liable for any infringement of the patent during the period from the date of its lapse to the passage of this act, or for the use or sale hereafter of any specific devices embracing the patented invention, made within that period.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before the bill is passed, I should be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Patents would explain it. I do not understand it and I should like to have it explained so that I may vote intelligently upon the bill.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, this bill differs from any other in regard to the extension of a patent that has ever been before the Senate. The facts are briefly these: In 1859 Thomas A. Weston, the inventor, filed his caveat at the Patent Office for an invention of differential pulley-blocks. That entitled him to a notice in case any other application for a patent claiming the same invention was filed within two years. In 1860 John J. Doyle filed an application for the same invention. No notice was given to Weston, and a patent was issued to Doyle. Sometime after that Weston filed an application for his patent under his caveat , and it was denied because the patent had before been issued to Doyle, without notice to him. Proceedings in interference were had three several times, and in 1867 the Commissioner of Patents decided that the patent was unjustly issued to Doyle and was really the property of Weston. In the mean time, Weston had taken out a patent in England. Under the law, when his English patent expired the life of his American patent would terminate. By the mistake at the Patent Office, he was deprived of six years and a half enjoyment of his patent.

That is not denied at the Patent Office now, and the only object of the bill is to give him the six and a half years of which he was deprived by the mistake of the Patent Office. It was shown to the committee that the invention was a very useful one and that the inventor has realized only about $2,000. For that $2,000 he has devoted sixteen years of his life. I think the bill guards the rights of all persons who innocently infringed on the patent during the time that it was suspended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT HARKER RESERVATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 26) to donate a portion of the military reservation at Fort Harker to the State of Kansas, for the establishment of an educational or charitable institution, and to open the remainder of said reservation to settlement; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized to transfer to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior, for disposition for cash, according to existing laws relating to the public lands, after appraisal, to the highest bidder, and at not less than the appraised value, nor at less than $1.25 per acre, so much of the United States military reservation known as the military reservation of Fort Harker, in the State of Kansas, as the same was heretofore established by the proper authority of the Government, excepting any portion of said reservation as may have been granted to any settler under the act of Congress making donations of the public lands in Kansas to actual settlers. This act embraces and applies to sections 35 and 36, township numbered 16 north, range numbered 8 west of the sixth principal meridian, and embracing a portion of Fort Harker military reservation, and such building pertaining to said reservation as may be within said sections, or either of them.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the report in that case be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY on the 5th of February:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 26) to donate a portion of the military reservation of Fort Harker, Kansas, to the State of Kansas, respectfully report:

That the evidence is clear that said reservation is no longer needed for military purposes; in view whereof the committee recommend that said lands, named in said bill to be turned over to the State of Kansas, be placed in the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior, for disposition, for cash, according to existing laws relating to the public lands, after appraisal, to the highest bidder, at not less than the appraised value nor less than $1.25 per acre. (See act March 3, 1877, chapter 129, volume 19, page 406.)

The committee report the accompanying bill as a substitute, and recommend its passage.

Mr. MAXEY. I will give in a few words the theory upon which the majority of the committee acted. The precedent, as we understood it, in regard to reservations made by Congress should be followed by the committee. By reference to volume 19 of the United States Statutes at Large, page 406, the act approved March 3, 1877, in respect to the Dalles reservation, in Oregon, we found that the plan of the disposition of the property was precisely such as the committee recommend here. Having examined that precedent and remembering, as a number of the committee did, that the whole matter was under investigation in the Senate at that time and that the precedent in the Fort Dalles case was the deliberate result of consultation in open Senate, we thought it wise to follow that precedent. Therefore, the committee recommended the amendment as a substitute for the bill and instructed me to report it accordingly.

Mr. PLUMB. On behalf of the minority, in fact on my own behalf, being the only member of the committee who concurred in the views I presented, I submit an amendment. I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out all after the word "that," being the first word of the substitute reported, and insert:

The Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to transfer to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior, for disposition under the homestead laws of the United States, the military reservation of Fort Harker, in the State of Kansas, as set apart and declared by the President, November 3, 1866: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to have the effect to impair any rights of any person in or to any portion of said lands acquired under any of the laws of the United States; nor shall it be construed to impair any right that the State of Kansas may have acquired under any prior act of Congress to section 36 of said reservation for school purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. This land lies on both sides of the Kansas Pacific Railway, in the County of Ellsworth, in the State of Kansas. By the act of admission of the State into the Union the State of Kansas was granted sections 16 and 36 in every township for educational purposes. One of those sections in this reservation, section 36, is a section to which this grant applies. Consequently the State would have the legal right to that section. In addition to that, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, by the act of 1862 and subsequently by that or 1864, had a grant of the lands along the line of the road in alternate sections of odd numbers, within certain limits, embracing probably within their limits all the odd-numbered sections within this reservation, the reservation having been established subsequently.

The amendment which I propose differs from the bill of the majority of the committee in preserving first whatever legal rights may have attached prior to this time, either upon the part of individuals or others or upon the part of the State of Kansas, and second, it requires that this land shall be opened to homestead settlement instead of being sold at public sale or otherwise as the Secretary of War might direct.

The Senator from Texas has referred to the precedent which governed the committee. I am willing to admit that the precedent is correctly stated, and that perhaps it ought to have bound the committee; but I hold that that does not bind the Senate, because the precedent established by the Senate has been otherwise. In 1877, on the 3d of March, Congress passed a law providing for the reconveyance to the Government of certain lands which before that time had been granted to a railroad in the State of Kansas, these lands being located on the eastern border of the State and much more valuable than the lands within this reservation. In section 3 of that act it was provided that—

All of said lands so withdrawn and undisposed of shall be restored to market, by proclamation of the President of the United States, and opened to settlement and purchase under the homestead laws of the United States only.

By another act passed at the same session, certain lands which had been granted to the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company were declared forfeited, and those lands were brought into market for disposal under the homestead laws only. Therefore the precedent, if there be a precedent at all which the Senate might be called on to follow, is in favor of the disposition of all public lands which are suitable for agricultural purposes, only on condition of settlement and not for speculation. The land embraced within the Fort Harker military reservation is land which is worth probably in the market about two dollars or two dollars and a half an acre, judging by the price at which railroad lands are being sold around it. It is one of the frontier counties of Kansas; it is in a section of country which six years ago was absolutely without settlement, a section of country which ten years ago was believed to be entirely beyond the pale of successful settlement; a section of country which was supposed to be practically a desert. There is probably, according to the statements of parties living in that locality, which statements are in the possession now I think of the Senator from Texas—I believe I gave them to him—one hundred thousand acres of Government land within the limits of the same county in which this reservation is situated, which can be taken by homestead and pre-emption entry. There would seem, therefore, to be no reason why this land should be treated any differently from the manner in which the Government is treating already the lands which it owns within that same locality.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. MAXEY. The committee would have been very much gratified if they could conscientiously have complied with the request of the Senator from Kansas. Certainly the bill was commended as reported by the committee because they believed it to be right. The Senator from Kansas very properly and magnanimously concedes that we have followed the precedents. The State of Kansas, like all the Western and Northwestern States, received the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each township for educational purposes. This was a reservation for military purposes for the benefit of the United States. When, therefore, it becomes necessary to sell this land, we thought the proceeds ought to go into the Treasury of the United States, and we have followed the precedent in a case precisely like it, discussed in open Senate, resisted by the then Senator from Oregon, Mr. Kelly, who took the same position that the Senator from Kansas now does. Popular as the then Senator from Oregon was, the Senate were compelled to decide the question against him and the act was passed to which I referred as a precedent upon which the bill as reported from the committee is based. I believe that the action of the committee was wise and that the substitute reported by the committee should be adopted.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I have not had the opportunity of examining this bill or the amendments that have been offered to it until within the last few minutes; but I am very strongly convinced that the proposition submitted by my colleague ought to prevail. If, as the Senator from Texas has stated, it has been customary heretofore when lands are no longer required for military purposes, to sell them for cash to the highest bidder, and to place the money in the Treasury of the United States, it is a custom that in my judgment would be More honor'd in the breach than the observance.

There is no necessity for such action, and it ought now to be abandoned. When this land is withdrawn from the market it is not, as the Senator from Texas states, withdrawn for the purpose of benefiting the Treasury, but merely for the purpose of enabling it to be occupied for military purposes so long as the Government may need it for such objects; and when it is no longer needed for the military arm it reverts and becomes like any other portion of the public domain. This land, therefore, if it is no longer needed by the Government, should be treated exactly the same as if it had never been withdrawn, and should be disposed of, not for cash, but in accordance with the public land laws of the United States.

I would suggest, however, to my colleague that the proviso in his substitute is probably superfluous and had better be abandoned. If this land is made subject to disposition under the public land laws of the United States, then this statute of course could not under any circumstances operate to the injustice of any person who had acquired rights or to the rights of the State of Kansas to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections for school purposes. I do not myself see clearly, if this is a military reservation, how there could be any private rights existing in the land under and by virtue of any law.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state to my colleague that there is a patent issued to a quarter section of the land, on which a man has been living for many years.

Mr. INGALLS. If that is the case, this act could not affect his title; and therefore the proviso is unnecessary.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that it will be noticed the rights of every one are specially reserved in the bill reported from the committee:

Excepting any portion of said reservation as may have been granted to any settler under the act of Congress making donations of the public lands in Kansas to actual settlers.

Mr. INGALLS. That is entirely unnecessary, because the Senator from Texas must be aware that if a settler is on that land under a patent legally issued this legislation would not interfere with him.

Mr. MAXEY. The Military Committee went into that and provided that if the settler had acquired an equitable right, that right, whatever it might be, should be reserved.

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. That is a very different thing from a legal title. We did that as a matter of justice.

Mr. INGALLS. That is just; but I understand in this case there is an actual outstanding legal title recognized by the Government of the United States.

Mr. MAXEY. There is a title, but I do not know whether it is legal or not.

Mr. INGALLS. Therefore the only act that should be passed, in my judgment, is simply one turning this reservation over to the Secretary of the Interior to be disposed of in accordance with the public land laws of the United States. I hope that the suggestions of my colleague will prevail and that the Senator from Texas will not insist on departing from the usual method for the disposition of public lands. He certainly is mistaken in supposing that there is any peculiar quality about this land different from any other portion of the public domain. It has only been temporarily withdrawn for a specific purpose, and of course when that use is no longer necessary it must revert to the Government and should be disposed of as other public lands of the United States. I hope, therefore, that the substitute reported from the committee will not be agreed to, but that the amendment offered by my colleague will be adopted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. How much land is there in this reservation?

Mr. INGALLS. Ten thousand acres, I understand.

Mr. MAXEY. My experience in nearly thirty years' practice as a lawyer has taught me that it is always dangerous to depart from precedents, and they never should be departed from unless there is some manifest reason for the departure. I have already stated that the bill which was reported follows the precedent adopted by Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. MAXEY. Let me first read a clause from the former act. This is the act approved March 3, 1877, chapter 129, volume 19, of the Statutes at Large:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized to transfer to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior, for disposition for cash, according to existing laws relating to the public lands, after appraisement, to the highest bidder, and at not less than the appraised value, nor at less than $1.25 per acre, so much of the United States military reservation known as the Fort Dalles military reservation.

Such was the precedent. Now, to show whether the committee has departed from that, I will read the amendment of the committee:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized to transfer to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior, for disposition for cash, according to existing laws relating to the public lands, after appraisement, to the highest bidder, and at not less than the appraised value, nor at less than $1.25 per acre, so much of the United States military reservation known as the military reservation of Fort Harker.

Almost verbatim, changing names. If the committee has been misled in this report, then the Senate and the Congress of the United States misled the committee by setting a bad precedent. I believe the precedent to be wise; I believe the committee was right in following it; and I therefore insist that the amendment of the committee be adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments on this matter, though I have spoken once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Texas pleads one precedent, and, as I admitted when I was on my feet before, that was a precedent which might well govern the committee; but it is not a precedent which ought to govern the Senate, and it is not a precedent of the Senate. The Senator takes up the case of the Fort Dalles reservation and makes that a precedent on which he seeks to predicate this action. The fact is the Fort Dalles reservation was a tract of land of about four hundred acres adjoining a town of about four thousand inhabitants. It would therefore have exceptional value, and it might be said to have value beyond the value that it had for agricultural purposes. Consequently there is no comparison between the two cases as a matter of fact.

At the same session of Congress, however, Congress did in the State of Kansas in two cases open lands to homestead settlement only, which were greatly more valuable than these lands under consideration, worth more than twice as much per acre, and as I think in pursuance of a wise policy of consecrating the public domain to settlement only, and not permitting it to be the object of speculation.

The State in which I live and which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor has a very deep interest in the keeping up of this precedent; that is to say, the precedent of the disposition of lands to settlers only. That State has been, I venture to say, more cursed with land speculation or speculation inaugurated and carried on under the auspices of the General Government than any other State in the Union. In the beginning, many years before it was even organized as a Territory, fifteen or twenty tribes of Indians were located there and given large reservations, all of which were subsequently sold to speculators and hardly an acre to settlers. In 1858, shortly after the surveys in the Territory had been completed, before there had been any opportunity for settlers to come in and avail themselves of the pre-emption laws then prevailing, the then President of the United States offered the great body of the lands in Kansas to sale at public auction, and, they not being sold, as of course they never are, they immediately became subject to private entry, and more than one-half of the portion of the State now inhabited was then plastered all over with land warrants. For that very reason the population that to-day is going into the State at the rate of two thousand people a day has to go west of a point two hundred and fifty miles from the eastern border of the State in order to obtain Government land. Eight hundred thousand people in the limits of that State to-day ought to be compressed within the first one hundred and fifty miles from the eastern border and would have been so compressed if it had not been for this system of speculation indulged in by the General Government whereby the lands, instead of being given to settlers, were taken up by men who held land warrants and agricultural-college scrip and men who were able to buy them at $1.25 per acre, take them out from sale, and keep them for speculative purposes.

This only affects a matter of ten thousand acres of land; but it would become under the effect of the amendment which I have offered the homes of a hundred and twenty-five or a hundred and fifty families. If it is sold at public sale it will go into the hands of two or three different persons, and will remain there an eye-sore to the people of that locality for years and a reproach and a reflection on the Government of the United States, which has withheld it from those people all over that section of country who want these lands and are going there for the purpose of getting them.

There is no reason, as my colleague has well said, why this particular tract of land should be made an exception to all the other public lands of the United States. The Government at the time this tract was withdrawn in 1866 for military purposes was establishing posts upon that frontier for its protection. This was simply temporarily withdrawn; and as soon as the Government was through with it the Secretary of War recommended that it should be restored, and Congress by its tardiness has not yet acted on that recommendation; but the land which the Government owned in that locality is just as good as this land is, and being within railroad limits no settler can get more than eighty acres. I hope the Senator from Texas does not begrudge the people who are going into that section of country the poor privilege of taking eighty acres of land on condition of settlement.

That is the issue presented by these two amendments, the amendment of the committee and the amendment which I have offered. The single and sole and only question is whether this land shall be devoted to speculation or whether it shall be devoted to settlement. It has been practically the policy of the Government ever since the act of 1841 to give the public land only to settlers. There has been introduced a policy to some extent of aiding railroads by grants of land, which has been pernicious in its effect, and I venture to say that in twenty years from now we shall look back to that system of granting lands to railroads as the most pernicious of all the legislation that has ever been enacted by Congress. So far as I am concerned, never while I hold a seat on this floor will I vote away one single acre of public land valuable only for agricultural purposes to be given to anybody, except on condition that it shall be settled.

As I said, this is comparatively a small tract of land, and every single tract of land that you withdraw from settlement, every single tract of land that you thus devote to speculation simply compels the people who are going into that country, who want to go there, whose interest it is to go there, and whom this Government is interested in having go there, to go much further out on the confines of the border, out upon what was regarded and is now for some purposes you might say a desert, the extreme frontier. It is their privilege, it is their right, it is in conformity with the precedents established by Congress, and which have been departed from only in the case I have named, to keep these lands for that purpose; and the fact that the Government used a portion or all of this land for military purposes for four or five years is no reason at all why it should now say, having so used them itself and having thus kept them from settlement, it will proceed to sell them to speculators rather than to settlers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I should like to have the amendment to the amendment reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of the amendment of the committee and to insert:

The Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to transfer to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior, for disposition under the homestead laws of the United States, the military reservation of Fort Harker, in the State of Kansas, as set apart and declared by the President, November 3, 1866: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to have the effect to impair any rights of any person in or to any portion of said lands acquired under any of the laws of the United States; nor shall it be construed to impair any right that the State of Kansas may have acquired under any prior act of Congress to section 36 of said reservation for school purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. On the suggestion of my colleague, I will withdraw the proviso. It probably, as he says, has no legal effect; but at the same time I thought it was wise to make a legislative recognition of the fact that there might be rights there which it was not expected to impair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws the proviso. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. MORRILL. We have a great many military reservations which have become exceedingly valuable. Now, the question is whether they ought to be sold by the Government for the most that they will bring, or whether they shall be put into the market for a dollar and a quarter an acre.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that this goes further than that—opens this land to homestead settlers exclusively. The amendment would not permit any portion of it to be sold for any price whatever.

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir. The design of the amendment is that this shall go to settlers and to settlers only.

Mr. MORRILL. Then it would open the door to a scramble. The first person who reached it would obtain eighty acres or one hundred and sixty acres, or whatever the amount may be, worth a great deal more than any other eighty acres or one hundred and sixty acres in the whole nation perhaps.

Mr. PLUMB. There is not an acre of that land—the Senator from Texas has some papers which I had on that subject—that is worth probably $2.50 an acre. Certainly no considerable portion of it is worth over that.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill or the Senator from Kansas what is to become of the Government improvements. There must be Government improvements there worth a good deal of money, perhaps.

Mr. PLUMB. The Government improvements have gone the way of other portable things a long time ago.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Are there no buildings?

Mr. PLUMB. There are the remnants of the old walls of some temporary buildings put up at the time the Government occupied it; but the Secretary of War told me distinctly that there was nothing there that the Government took interest enough in to consider of value. It is probably nothing. Let me say in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. PLUMB. If this was a reservation that was valuable for anything but agricultural purposes, the point of the Senator from Vermont would be well taken; but here is a reservation entirely out on the frontier. It is true there would be a grab, a controversy as to who should get the land; of course there would be a rush there; there always is when you open a new piece of land. It will be so when you open the Indian country. When you open a new tract of land there is always a rush for it. How much better to let that rush be by men who want to build up homes for themselves and make communities than by men who want to hold it for speculative purposes and compel emigration to go beyond it. This land is two hundred and fifty miles from the eastern border of my State. It is in that section of country, as I said before, which ten years ago was a desert. It is a section of country that has been snatched from a desert.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Does the bill require the settler to conform to the homestead laws?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly; it requires him to live on the land five years; my amendment does. The prosperous, happy community that shall grow up on this land is worth a thousand-fold more than all the money the Government would get out of it.

Mr. MAXEY. The committee wanted to follow the general law, and so provide; the Senator from Kansas wants to vary from that and make it follow a specific law, the homestead law.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Texas is mistaken. The committee's amendment is to sell to the highest bidder for cash.

Mr. MAXEY. According to the laws in force for the sale of public lands.

Mr. PLUMB. To the highest bidder for cash, but not to the settler.

Mr. MAXEY. According to existing law, without specifying the size of the tracts. The proposition of the committee is to follow the existing law.

Mr. MORRILL. I am disposed to be exceedingly liberal in relation to all the public lands; at the same time it seems to me we ought not to adopt anything that will be construed into a dangerous precedent. As we have a great many of these reservations, whatever we do in relation to one we ought to do in relation to all when all or any portion of them shall be abandoned. It does seem to me that there may be men who are living off five or ten miles farther from these lands than those who live adjacent, who have clearly just as good a right and as much title to come in and have a chance at this grab-bag as those who live nearer. I think, therefore, it is safer to follow the bill as reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY. It seems to me that there ought to be no serious objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas. This, if it is anything in the world, is purely agricultural land. It is in a remote portion of the State of Kansas. The policy of this Government has for years been, over and over and over again, expressed in favor of appropriating the remainder of the agricultural public lands to actual homestead settlers. The Government of the United States is not seeking for the future to make money out of the public lands. Its policy, better defined than it is upon almost any other question of the same magnitude, is that the people of the East and West may move upon, occupy, and improve the public lands. That is worth more to this country than the money that any land will ever bring.

Here is a military reservation about to be abandoned. It is away out West in the State of Kansas, a long distance off, in the midst of an agricultural people. Why should not the Senate say that it shall be reserved for actual occupation by the homestead settler, rather than that you or I or any Senator or any citizen may have the right to go and bid on it and that that amount of money may go into the Treasury and the person purchasing it shall afterward hold it to be sold to an actual settler at an increased price? So far as the Government is concerned, its ends will be absolutely attained by reserving the land for homestead settlers. When the actual settler shall occupy that land there will be a little strife, there will be a little animation about it, but some one will get upon it; and what is more, if this reservation shall be specifically appropriated for actual settlement every man who will then settle will be a homestead settler who will actually occupy the land; and why? Because those who seek to get the favor and fail will see to it that the man who does pretend to take it shall absolutely take it in good faith. There can be no possible cheating about it. There can be no possible benefit or gain about it. He will go upon the land, make his filings, take the steps under the statute required of the honest settler on the land, and the Government can possibly lose nothing by it. It is far better to make this disposition of it than any other; far better to say now that all the few remaining acres of the public domain that are fit for actual cultivation, for agricultural purposes, (for it would astonish the Senate as it would astonish the country to know the very limited amount of the agricultural lands left under the control and gift of the Government,) shall be reserved for homestead settlers. The lands that are agricultural farm lands, fit for agricultural purposes by the annual rain-fall, are nearly all gone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. OGLESBY. I suppose no one can have any objection to my going on. ["No; go on."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MAXEY. We ought not to extend the time. We are delayed by it. I have not asked to have my time extended, though representing the committee.

Mr. OGLESBY. I think the objection of the Senator from Texas is well taken, and I will make no further remark on the subject than that I hope the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will prevail.

Mr. McMILLAN. I concur with the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, who has just taken his seat. He seems to be very familiar with the correct policy of the Government, as it strikes me it should be.

The value of these lands, we are informed by the Senator from Kansas, will not exceed $2.50 per acre. Under these circumstances the Government cannot lose anything, because the benefit conferred upon the Government by the actual settlement upon the lands by such settlers will certainly be equivalent to any difference between the minimum price of the public lands and this increase in nominal value. The settlers going upon these lands must comply with the terms of the homestead law. A residence of five years must ensue upon their settlement upon these lands. Now, if they are willing to go there and comply with the provisions of that law, it seems to me they should have the opportunity of doing so here. If these lands were of very great value, if they could be sold in market for a very large sum, a different question would be presented; but that is not the case. It seems to me that the Senator from Kansas has presented an amendment that should meet with adoption in the Senate. For my own part, I concur in the views expressed in favor of the amendment and shall support it.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I agree with the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, but I think the amendment ought to be amended by adding, after "homestead," the words "or pre-emption;" so that a settler can obtain these lands under existing laws by pre-emption or homestead. Let a settler take up eighty acres of the land under either the pre-emption or the homestead law, and do not require him to remain there five years provided he prefers to enter the land under the pre-emption law. I therefore make that motion if it be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not be in order at this time.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I hope the Senator from Kansas will accept the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. INGALLS. Would it not be better to say "public land laws of the United States?"

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire if the general law authorizing homestead settlers to pre-empt would not be applicable in this case?

Mr. CHAFFEE. I do not know whether it would or not. The amendment to the amendment, as I understand it, confines the settler to the homestead laws. I desire to change that so that he can take the land under the existing pre-emption or homestead laws, as he sees fit.

Mr. PLUMB. While it does not meet the conviction I have as to the manner in which public lands should be disposed of, or only partially, at the same time I am willing to consent to that amendment; that is to say, that the land shall be sold for homestead or pre-emption purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas modifies his amendment in that respect. The question is on the amendment to the amendment as thus modified.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state that the last precedent made by Congress in reference to the disposition of military reservations of this character was made in my State, and it was made exactly in the direction which the amendment of the Senator from Kansas proposes. It was thought to be wise then, with respect to the reservation to which I allude, that it should be opened only to actual settlers; and so the law was framed in that way. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas if this reservation is remote from a town or contiguous to a town?

Mr. PLUMB. It is about four miles from a town of about seven hundred people. Mr. President, we are talking about this land out there when if anybody had asked the Congress of the United States ten years ago for it, they would have given it to him almost for nothing. It is simply a section of the country snatched from the desert.

Mr. PADDOCK. The land is undoubtedly comparatively valueless, and if it should be sold by the Government to the highest bidder it would pass into the hands of one or more speculators, who might hold it for a term of years and out of it make something of a speculation. The amount the Government would realize from it would very poorly compensate the Government for the loss of settlement that would surely be secured if the bill should pass in the form proposed by the Senator from Texas. It is actual settlement and development of the country that we want. Whenever a reservation of this kind can be disposed of, and through its disposition the actual settlement of a district of country can be secured and a tax-paying people can be placed there, it is to the interest of the Government and every person in the country, wherever he may be located, that it shall be done.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I join in the report made by that committee which has been read to the Senate. I believed that report to be right, and I support it now, and for two reasons. In the first place, it is a well-known fact that there are many military reservations, and that the land comprised in those reservations has become much more valuable than the land subject to the public land laws of the United States. I think that in this case the impression left on my mind by what took place in committee was that there were upon this land buildings of some considerable value. I know it has been stated to the contrary; but my impression was, at the time of making this report, that there were upon the land buildings of considerable value.

Now, Mr. President, it is unjust that this land, which has become much more valuable than land which is now subject to the land laws of the United States, should be seized by those who happen to be nearest to it, or rather by those who have the means to know quickest what passes in Congress, because of course they are the men who can take it, the men who first know that Congress has passed this bill and that it has become a law. I say it is unjust that they should have this land to the exclusion of anybody else. And then, in my judgment, it is unwise and impolitic to establish in this case a precedent which will to some extent hereafter bind Congress to give the military reservations of the United States in the same way that the public lands are given, although those reservations have become in the course of years while occupied as such immensely more valuable than the other public lands. I do not believe in this giving a gratuity to those persons who have facilities for knowing what our legislation is, and that, it seems to me, is what is asked for in reference to this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire, who is afraid that somebody will get some advantage out of this, and it seems to be the eye-sore generally in regard to this bill, that under the existing laws no portion of this land can be taken and no right acquired under it until the President of the United States shall have issued his proclamation giving ninety days' notice that the land will be open for settlement. There is no snap judgment about it. But further, suppose these lands are worth more. They are not in point of fact. I had some papers, which I gave to the Senator from Texas, but which he has not here at present, from the commissioner of the land office of the Kansas Pacific Railroad—

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator that I left those letters in the room; and whatever statement he makes as contained in those letters I will accept cheerfully.

Mr. PLUMB. And from the register and receiver of the land office of the district where these lands are, showing that there are one hundred thousand acres of Government land now within the limits of the same county unbroken. The value of similar land to this in that county varies from two to three dollars an acre. When you get outside of the railroad limits—and the value of lands grows largely out of the fact of their being in proximity to railroads—a settler can take a quarter section of land, but within the railroad limits he can take only eighty acres. This being within the railroad limits, a settler never can get more than eighty acres. Now, if gentlemen are afraid that some poor settler is going to have more land than he ought to have, more land than he needs in order to support his family, limit it to forty acres; but I say to-day that there is not a military reservation in the United States that I would not be perfectly willing should be cut up and given to actual settlers in some quantity; if it is near to a town give them an acre or five acres; and I say it would be the best possible disposition that could be made of them. But there is no precedent of that kind that can be established here.

And by the way, I might call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that the Military Committee at a later meeting authorized me to report, which I did report, a bill placing the Fort Fetterman military reservation, then proposed to be abandoned by the Government, in precisely the same category, and the bill has passed the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me we are establishing no precedent about it, because Congress all the time is competent to take into consideration the exceptional cases and govern itself accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 15—no quorum voting.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allison,	Chaffee,	Mitchell,	Plumb,
Armstrong,	Conover,	Morgan,	Kollins,
Blaine,	Inglis,	Oglesby,	Sargent,
Booth,	Kellogg,	Paddock,	Saunders.
Cameron of Wis.,	McMillan,	Patterson,

NAYS—24.

Palley,	Coke,	Johnston,	Maxey,
Bayard,	Conkling,	Kernan,	Morrill,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Burnside,	Garland,	McCreery,	Spencer,
Butler,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Harris,	Matthews,	Wadleigh.

ABSENT—33.

Anthony,	Dorsey,	Howe,	Te'ler,
Barnum,	Faton,	Jones of Florida,	Thurman,
Bruce,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Wallace,
Christiancy,	Ferry,	Kirkwood,	Whyte,
Cockrell,	Grover,	McDonald,	Windom,
Davis of Illinois,	Hamlin,	Merrimon,	Withers.
Davis of W. Va.,	Hereford,	Randolph,
Dawes,	Hill,	Ransom,
Dennis,	Hoar,	Sharon,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to offer an amendment providing that this land shall be sold only to actual settlers.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to have the bill read as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is preparing an amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. My amendment is reduced to form. It is to add to the amendment of the committee:

Provided, That no portion of such land shall be sold except to actual settlers, and not more than eighty acres to any one person.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It strikes me that that would be an alteration of the policy which has been pursued by the Government in reference to the sale of the public lands. I do not see how the Interior Department and those charged with the sale of these lands are to determine who are actual settlers. There can be no settlers on these lands until after the settlement is made. How is the Secretary of the Interior or the person charged with the sale of the lands to ascertain whether he is making a sale to an actual settler or not? I think it better to follow the general policy which has been pursued in reference to the sale of public lands, or else not pass the bill at all. We had better pass it just as it is, or else follow the general rule which obtains in cases of that character. I hope this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MAXEY. I trust the amendment now offered may not be adopted. So far from improving the theory upon which the committee's amendment is based, it is in direct opposition to it, it seems to me. I cannot understand how there can be an actual settlement on this land, outside of the equitable claim which is preserved by the bill, by any one except a trespasser; and thereby you give the wrong-doer an advantage over the man who has kept away from the public lands. It seems to me the only true policy is to pursue the theory laid down by the committee's amendment and put up the land and let it be sold.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

A division was called for.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to say that this brings it down to this one point, whether we are willing that the actual settler shall have this land or not. Of course, if the Senate wants to vote the other way, I have nothing to say; but it seems to me, after we have accomplished the object of the Senator from Vermont and others who have spoken of getting money, we ought at least to be willing the land shall go to the actual settlers and not to speculators.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have been, perhaps, negligent about this bill, but I desire to inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether the bill provides that the land shall be sold at public auction.

Mr. PLUMB. At public auction, to the highest bidder.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. But to actual settlers. I do not understand exactly how that can be done.

Mr. PLUMB. It has been done. The Delaware Indian reservation, a large portion of it in my State, was sold precisely in that way to settlers only and to the highest bidders. If there is any better way of accomplishing it I have no objection.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. How do you propose to ascertain whether or not they are actual settlers?

Mr. PLUMB. The Secretary of the Interior, as in all other cases, makes the rules necessary for the disposal of the public land. No law we pass provides the machinery of doing it; but the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, always applies the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is in time under the rule.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Do I understand the Chair to say that the objection now made by the Senator from Kansas is in time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the order adopted by the Senate to provide that an objection may be made at any time.

Mr. MAXEY. Acting in perfect good faith in this matter, I have no feeling on earth about it; but it is entirely clear that the Senate is in favor of the report as made by the committee. Now it does seem to me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can proceed only by unanimous consent, objection having been made to the further consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. OGLESBY. I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the Senator from Texas proceeding.

Mr. MAXEY. It does seem to me, Mr. President, that after we have arrived at this period—

Mr. PLUMB. I have objected to the consideration of the bill. I do not object to the remarks of the Senator from Texas. I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. If we really cannot go on with the bill, I trust the Senator from Texas will at once acquiesce.

Mr. MAXEY. I trust, in view of this style of proceeding, that I shall never have another Kansas bill in my charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made, under the order of the Senate the bill goes over. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. MAXEY. I rise to ask for information, does the objection continue the bill until to-morrow, or what is the effect?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The effect is to permit the bill to hold its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MAXEY. A man can contest his case until he finds he is going to lose it and then object!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That seems to be the construction.

Mr. PLUMB. I will say to the Senator from Texas that the design I have now in objecting to the further consideration of the bill is that I wish to propose another amendment that I am not prepared now to offer. I think that is the better way of getting at it than to proceed further now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Texas desires to understand the ruling of the Chair, the Chair will read the resolution.

Mr. MAXEY. It seems to me so inequitable that I cannot understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution adopted yesterday reads as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday next, at one o'clock, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, and continue such consideration from day to day until the same shall have been gone through with; and bills that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once, and for five minutes only, unless, upon motion, the Senate should at any time otherwise order; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings; and this order shall take precedence of special orders or unfinished business, unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. MAXEY. But it says "unless the Senate should at any time otherwise order." Now cannot the Senate pass its order upon that objection? That is the point I wish to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the words "unless the Senate should at any time otherwise order" refer to the limitation as to the length of time that a Senator shall speak, and that the words "at any stage of the proceedings" relate simply to the objection.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Texas will not consider that any discourtesy was intended toward him by the Senator from Kansas because of his objection. The bill as it stands, the Senator from Kansas knows very well, as every Western Senator knows, would be exceedingly objectionable to his people. The desire is that all such lands disposed of in this way should be disposed of to actual settlers; and I am sure that the only object the Senator from Kansas had in interposing an objection was to get a little time in order that he might prepare an amendment which should cover the objections made by Senators on the other side to the plan which he had previously proposed. I am very glad myself that the bill does go over, because I think that I have in my desk an amendment which can be taken from another bill which was passed by the Senate at the last Congress which will be satisfactory to both sides of this controversy.

I think it is very proper for all parties interested that the bill should go over until to-morrow or some subsequent day.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not suppose that any explanation at all would be necessary, because my objection was in the precise line of objection made here the last time we were on the Calendar, and which led to the discussion about the rule and to the construction which the rule has now had put upon it. That bill—I have forgotten what it was now—was under consideration, having been discussed time and time again, and was then discussed for two or three hours, and then objection was interposed and it went over. I could not suppose that the Senator from Texas could have thought for a moment that I had any design of performing any act of discourtesy toward him. I certainly had no such intention. This bill interests me, interests the people of Kansas, and I desire an opportunity to perfect it. I am certain the Senator from Texas has no personal interest in the bill. He is doing his duty, as I am trying to do mine; and, the precedent having been established, I did not suppose a word of explanation was necessary, and I should not have offered it at all except for the seeming misunderstanding which has arisen.

Mr. MAXEY. I have only this to say: I have no feeling on earth in this case except to do my duty, which I will do under any state of case. I presented the amendment as I was instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to do, and it was concurred in by every member of the committee excepting the Senator from Kansas. I resisted all the amendments offered by him, because I was instructed to report this bill as amended by the committee; and every one of his amendments was voted down. The committee's amendment was adopted by the Senate, thereby showing after full and ample discussion that they believed the committee to be right. Then, when the bill was brought to its final passage, for the first time I was informed that this technical objection was going to be interposed. I like to do a man's work and never child's play; and I cannot yet for the life of me see why this Senate should be trifled with through all these stages which I have mentioned until finally, when the matter is ready for a vote and it is perfectly manifest what the result is going to be, an objection is made and the whole work is lost. I do not care to be in charge of a bill which is treated in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas question the correctness of the ruling of the Chair under this resolution?

Mr. MAXEY. Oh, no, sir. I never question the correctness of a ruling, from the fact that I do not pretend to know anything about parliamentary rules, only enough to behave myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

THE BELT RAILROAD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 320) amendatory of the act to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street, and South Washington Railway Company.

Mr. MORRILL. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over under the rule.

ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 458) to authorize and equip an expedition to the arctic seas.

Mr. SARGENT. It is impossible to consider that bill under the five-minute rule. For that reason only I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 720) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that go over. The Senator from Missouri who is not now here objected to it heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over and the next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

PRESENTS FROM FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (H. R. No. 47) authorizing Rear-Admiral John J. Almy, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the King of the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. SARGENT. I object to that and the four following cases on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California objects to this case and the four following cases on the Calendar, all of which will go over under the rule, and the next succeeding case will be reported by the Secretary.

COLORADO AGRICULTURAL-COLLEGE LANDS.

The bill (S. No. 394) extending the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanical arts," to the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out the third section in the following words:

SEC. 3. That until the State of Colorado shall have received her full quota of lands named in this act, and as heretofore granted by law, the public lands in said State shall not be subject to entry, sale, or location under any law of the United States, or of any scrip or warrants issued in pursuance of any such law, except the homestead act of May 20, 1862, and acts amendatory thereto and the acts granting and regulating pre-emption, but shall be reserved exclusively for entry by the said State for the period of two years from the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill explained for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CHAFFEE. In 1862 Congress passed an act granting to each State for establishing an agricultural college thirty thousand acres of land, or its equivalent in scrip, for each Senator and member of the House from that State. Colorado not being a State in the Union at that time, this bill is brought in for the purpose of extending that act over the State of Colorado, giving to the State the thirty thousand acres of land in accordance with the act of 1862 for each of its Senators and for its member of the House. In addition to that, the committee agreed that two townships of land should be appropriated for teaching the science of mining, as a primary interest of the State of Colorado is mining as well as agriculture; and the committee thought that in order to establish a laboratory and provide teachers for the purpose of teaching the practical theory of mining, it would be right to grant to that State two townships of land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the act that set her up gave her all the townships that we have given to the other new States, except the agricultural-college lands to which, being the first section of this bill, I have no objection; but the act creating the State of Colorado, I think, provided for the same amount of school lands and so on that are given to the other new States when they come in.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The act admitting Colorado did grant certain tracts of land, such as are usual upon the admission of a State. This is an innovation upon that, I admit; but the committee thought, and I think, that inasmuch as the State of Colorado only gets ninety thousand acres of land for agricultural-college purposes, whereas other States having several members of Congress get their proportion for each member, that State ought to be entitled to more land; and as she cannot get it under the act of 1862, it would be no more than fair to grant two additional townships. I hope the Senate will agree to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The only objection I have to the bill is to the second section granting seventy-two entire additional sections. The ground that the Senator from Colorado puts that upon is that the State of Colorado is growing. So are all the western States; and States that got a certain number of sections under the agricultural-college act when it was passed and when they took the benefit of it, now have a much larger population, many of them, and the principle, therefore, upon which this second section rests would extend to all those other States, and they would have the same right, this being a precedent, to come in and say "Now we have grown; give us more land;" and that would disturb the whole theory of the agricultural-college act. If this was the only instance that could arise, of course it would not be worth while, considering that Colorado is a young State, a growing State, a good State, to spend much time in respect of her having seventy-two more sections of land; but the ground upon which it is put, and put rightly and fairly by the Senator, is that she is growing, and that applies to Kansas and to Nebraska and to Oregon and in fact to all the States that were young at the time the original act was passed and the original grant took effect, and they would see that the only thing necessary to do on the precedent of this second section would be to come in at the next session or this and say "Measure up on our increased numbers and give us more land." The consequence would be that all the public lands would be gone. It rather strikes me that the misfortune of Colorado's being admitted when it was quite young and small is one that she ought to bear.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I do not put it wholly on the ground the Senator names; but the people of the State of Colorado are largely engaged in mining; the Senator from Vermont well knows that we have few if any schools for teaching a practical knowledge of mining in this country, and the committee thought, and I think that it is time the United States gave some encouragement to this great industry in this country of mining. The small pittance of two townships of land does not appear to be so great as should induce the Senate to strike it out of this bill, although if the Senate thinks it should not be granted I of course shall consent to its being stricken out of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I must move to strike out the second section of the bill so that it may undergo further consideration. It will not necessarily follow that it may not be done at some future time when you take into view the other States as well; but it involves so much in point of principle and reaches so far that I think it better to let the State take her agricultural-college land and let the second section go out.

Mr. PADDOCK. Is that the section which relates to the additional donation for metallurgical purposes?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir. I move to strike out so much of the second section down to and including the word "metallurgy," in line 9, so as to leave the land to be selected by the governor under the agricultural-college part of the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. That will leave it only applicable to the agricultural-college feature, and leave the metallurgical part unprovided for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly so.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope that amendment will not prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question will be on the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands, to strike out the third section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, to strike out the second section to and including the word "metallurgy," in line 9, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out in section 2 the following words:—

That seventy-two additional entire sections of land, not mineral, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said State of Colorado for the use and support of at least one State agricultural college, in which shall be taught such branches of learning as relate to agriculture and the mechanical arts, including the theory and practice of mining and of reducing ores and extracting therefrom the precious metals, and such other studies as conduce to a thorough knowledge of mineralogy and metallurgy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rest of the section merely relates to the selection of the lands granted under the first section.

A division was called for on the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Evidently we must have the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Rather than have a call of the yeas and nays I will let the amendment go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the amendment is agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move to strike out the word "hereinafter," in the seventh line of section 1, and insert the word "therein," so as to correspond with the Senator's amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. In line 9 of section 2, after the word "selected," I move to insert the words "in said State." I want the land to be selected in the State and not have the grant in the shape of land-scrip to be floated in other States. But perhaps the amendment is unnecessary.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The bill provides for that.

Mr. SARGENT. I see further on in the bill that that is guarded against. I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAFFEE. After the word "Colorado," in the title, the words "and for other purposes" should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will be amended as suggested by the Senator from Colorado, if there be no objection.

RECONSIDERATION OF A BILL.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to make a motion for reconsideration. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate indefinitely postponed the bill (S. No. 963) to amend the record of a naval officer, for the purpose of putting it on the Calendar. Some evidence has come to the notice of some of us since that vote was taken, and we want the case simply put on the Calendar, no action being taken now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill designated by him was indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will now be placed on the Calendar.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-routes in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 17, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of an act (S. No. 927) to authorize the construction of a railroad from a point at or near Bismarck to the Black Hills, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced that in the absence of the Vice-President the Senate had chosen Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY, a Senator from the State of Michigan, President pro tempore of the Senate.

NATHAN UDELL.

Mr. SAMPSON. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a privileged question. I wish to move to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 698, granting a pension to Nathan Udell, was laid upon the table. All I desire is that this pension bill may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not here, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa later in the day when the bill can be found.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise for the purpose of moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to proceed with the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to move to go to the business upon the Speaker's table, but will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has taken a list of gentlemen applying to be recognized to ask unanimous consent, and would like to conform to that list.

Mr. REAGAN. I demand the regular order of business. I do not see any necessity for the introduction of bills when the committees are not allowed to report them back for the action of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the House go into committee to take up the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. VANCE. Can we not have a morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The only way to reach it is to vote down the motion to go into committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 93.

Mr. BLOUNT demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. COX of New York were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 105.

So the House refused to go into committee.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at two minutes after one o'clock, and reports are in order from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PROHIBITION OF COINAGE OF TWENTY-CENT SILVER PIECES.

Mr. BELL, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 85, a bill (H. R. No. 4368) to prohibit the coinage of the twenty-cent piece of silver; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, directs that from and after the passage of this act the coinage of the twenty-cent piece of silver by the Government of the United States be prohibited, and all laws in conflict herewith are repealed.

Mr. BELL. I ask that the bill be now put on its passage, and demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POPULAR LOAN.

Mr. PHILLIPS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2906, a bill (H. R. No. 4395) to provide for the deposit of savings in a popular loan, and to provide for funding the national debt in home bonds convertible into currency; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

That any holder of lawful money or Treasury notes or coin may make deposit thereof in any sum or sums not less than twenty-five cents at any one time, in any postal money-order office of the United States, of which deposit a book account shall be kept and a pass-book receipt given to the depositor; and when such account shall reach the sum of $10 the postmaster at such money-order office shall issue to such depositor, free of charge, a postal order on the Treasury of the United States, which shall be in the form following, to wit:

The United States are indebted to _____, or order, in the sum of $10, payable, on demand, in currency, at the post-office in _____. This order will be received, after five days' notice, in exchange for the postal savings bonds of the United States at the office where issued and stamped, or at the office of the Treasurer or of any assistant treasurer, on presentation.
(Here shall run the date.)

Treasurer of the United States.

Register of the Treasury.

and shall be so devised and engraved as to afford as complete security as possible against counterfeiting or imitation, and shall be printed upon paper of the kind and quality used for United States notes; and when presented in sums of $10, or any multiple of $10, shall be receivable in exchange for bonds of the United States of the kind and description hereinafter provided. And any person desiring so to do may make deposit, not exceeding $20 in any one day, at any postal money-order office, and receive in exchange therefor postal orders equivalent in amount to such deposit; and such postal orders shall be transferable upon indorsement of the depositor. And all moneys received into postal money-order offices under the provisions of this act shall be accounted for by the postmasters at such offices, or, on ten days' notice being given, may be refunded to depositors under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 2. The bonds herein provided for shall be called the "postal savings bonds of the United States," and shall be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, of such form and description, and accompanying coupons, as he shall prescribe, and of the denominations of ten, twenty, fifty, and one hundred dollars, and shall bear interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, or one cent on each $100 for each day after its issue. And holders of the postal orders provided for in the first section of this act shall be entitled to receive, in exchange therefor, at the money-order offices where they were issued, free of charge, after five days' notice, 3.65 per cent. bonds herein provided for to the full face value of the postal orders presented for such exchange. And said bonds shall also be issued upon application in exchange for lawful money or Treasury notes or coin at the Treasury of the United States, or at the office of any assistant treasurer or designated depository; said 3.65 per cent. bonds, as well as the said postal money orders, shall be exempt from all United States, State, municipal, or other local taxation. And said bonds shall be exchangeable at par for the 4 per cent. bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by an act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870; and the interest thereon shall be payable every three months in currency of the United States, at the Treasury of the United States, at the office of any assistant treasurer, designated depository, or at the money-order offices where issued: Provided, however, That coupons shall only be detached from the bond at the time of payment; and all coupons redeemed at the money-order offices, or received thereat in payment of postage, or in exchange for postage-stamps, shall be credited to such offices the same as money in their accounts with the Post Office and Treasury Departments. And the postal savings bonds herein provided for, on presentation at the Treasury of the United States or at the office of any assistant treasurer, shall be exchangeable for notes of the United States, with interest computed to the day of presentation. And the postal orders provided for in the first section hereof shall be redeemable in currency on presentation at the offices of the Treasurer of the United States and of the assistant treasurers, and at such postal money order offices as the Postmaster-General may designate for that purpose.

SEC. 3. The names of depositors of moneys under the provisions of the first section of this act shall not be disclosed, nor the amount of their deposit, except to the proper officers of the Treasury or Post-Office Department.

SEC. 4. All moneys received into the Treasury in pursuance of this act shall be applied exclusively to the redemption of such bonds of the United States as are redeemable at the pleasure of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall call in of such bonds those that bear the highest rate of interest at the time; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be prepared a special issue of United States notes, identical in all respects with the legal-tender notes, which shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and payment of interest on public debt, to the amount of 10 per cent. of the postal money orders and postal savings bonds actually outstanding, until the whole amount of such special issue shall reach the sum of $50,000,000; which special issue of legal-tender notes shall be used wholly and exclusively in the redemption of the postal savings bonds herein provided for, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe for the purpose.

SEC. 5. All expenses incurred under the provisions of this act, except as provided for by appropriations for engraving and printing the public securities, shall be paid out of the appropriations made by the act of July 14, 1870, for refunding the national debt. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General to provide rules and regulations, and promulgate the same, to carry out the provisions of this act. And they shall require adequate security from all officers whose responsibility is increased by it, and shall see that the same is increased, from time to time, as the public interests may demand.

SEC. 6. All acts and parts of acts conflicting with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. CARLISLE. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that that bill under the rules must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PHILLIPS. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. CARLISLE. That this bill must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, inasmuch as it involves an appropriation of money.

Mr. PHILLIPS. It does not involve an appropriation of money.

Mr. CARLISLE. It provides for increased expenditure of money by the General Government, and necessarily involves an appropriation now or hereafter.

Mr. PHILLIPS. To what section does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BURCHARD. Sections 4 and 5 are amenable to Rule 112, which provides that all proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property shall be first discussed in the Committee of the Whole House. Section 5 requires the payment of money out of an appropriation already made. Section 4 requires an appropriation of money; it directs how money that comes into the Treasury shall be applied. And section 2 is liable to the point of order under Rule 110.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has only read section 5, and thinks that is sufficient. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, and decides that this bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The Committee on Banking and Currency have directed me to report the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read. I had intended to have it read when the bill was reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the substitute for House bill No. 2906 be made the special order for May 2 and from day to day until disposed of, in the House as in Committee of the Whole, not to antagonize reports from the Committee on Appropriations and the tariff bill, and that bills of a kindred character may be offered as amendments or substitutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Kansas that the bill is now in Committee of the Whole, and that the resolution ought to conform to that fact.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the Clerk to make the necessary modification of the resolution. I desire to state that this bill was matured some two or three months ago by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BURCHARD. Before the gentleman proceeds further, I wish to suggest to him that the last part of the resolution is unnecessary, that about bills of a kindred character being offered. They would be in order to be offered under the rules.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Since this bill was agreed to be reported from the committee two other bills or more have been offered, and the purpose in offering the resolution and getting the special order made is that the House may have the privilege of voting upon all those separate measures. The committee did not desire to press to a vote this morning the bill now presented. It is a subject of very great moment, one of general interest, and in its management the utmost fairness is intended for all the bills pending, so as to bring them fairly before the House.

Mr. WADDELL. I hope the resolution offered will be adopted and that a day will be fixed for the consideration of all these measures. As the House is perhaps aware, in addition to this bill there is a bill ready to be reported by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads when it is reached in the call of committees. One has already been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. All bear on the same subject, and I shall be very glad if the resolution of the gentleman from Kansas be adopted.

Mr. BURCHARD. I agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas; but I wish to offer one suggestion, or, rather, to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is this order to be subject to prior orders?

The SPEAKER. To all prior special orders.

Mr. WOOD. I ask that the resolution be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BURCHARD. If it is the intention of the committee to make this bill the pending proposition and that all the other propositions that have been submitted or shall be submitted shall be subordinate to that, I submit that that would not be in accordance with the previous order of the House. The House has already made a special order on this subject, and if this bill or any other bill were offered as an amendment to that special order it could not be objected to, or if this measure should be called up there would be no objection to offering any proposition germane to it; but I hope the committee do not intend to set aside prior orders.

Mr. PHILLIPS. We do not intend to set aside any prior order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. What order will it interfere with?

The SPEAKER. All prior special orders.

Mr. ROBBINS. A bill reported from the Committee of Ways and Means on this subject has been made a special order continuing from day to day, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. When that special order is reached, then it will be competent to amend the bill.

Mr. BURCHARD. I ask the gentleman from Kansas to modify his resolution so that if this bill is made the special order it shall not antagonize the bills mentioned or any prior special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would hold that it could not set aside any prior special order. But the present occupant of the chair would not occupy it in the Committee of the Whole. Therefore the resolution might as well embrace the fact as agreed upon.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I agree to that, and I ask the previous question on the resolution as modified.

Mr. BURCHARD. It is unnecessary to except the tariff bill.

Mr. WOOD. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that he except any reports from the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee of Ways and Means; otherwise there might be involved a serious question whether those reports would not have a prior right to consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, as modified, will be again read, so that the House may act understandingly and intelligently.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That substitute for House bill No. 2906 be made the special order for May 2, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, not to antagonize reports from the Committee on Appropriations or the tariff bill, nor to interfere with previous special orders, and that bills of a kindred character may be offered as amendments or substitutes.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to include any reports from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I do not object to that.

Mr. EAMES. As a member of this committee and voting against this bill in committee and proposing to vote against it in the House, I hope that this proposition made by the gentleman from Kansas who has the bill in charge will be agreed to unanimously by the House. It gives the opportunity and the only opportunity that I have seen on the floor of the House for debate and for amendment. But I am very willing indeed, as a member of the committee, though opposed to the bill, that it should be submitted to the judgment of the House.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. PHILLIPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESERVE FUND OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. HARDENBERGH from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3831) regulating the reserve fund of national banks; and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 5182 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARDENBERGH also, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 2740) to amend section 5182 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The motion was agreed to.

COINAGE OF SILVER BULLION.

Mr. HARTZELL, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a substitute for House bill No. 3780 a bill (H. R. No. 4396) to authorize the deposit of silver bullion, and to issue certificates therefor, and asked for the present consideration of the bill, and that the same be put upon its passage at this time.

Mr. BURCHARD. I reserve points of order upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will first be read.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That coin certificates of the denominations of $10 and multiples thereof up to $1,000 may, in the mode herein provided, be exchanged by the several mints and assay offices at San Francisco, Denver, Boise City, Carson City, Philadelphia, New York, and New Orleans for the net value of silver bullion deposited thereat; and the bullion so received in exchange for said coin certificates shall at all times be held and kept on hand for the redemption of said coin certificates in silver. The silver thus deposited shall be computed in said exchange at its coinage value, at the rate of 412½ grains standard silver to the dollar, less the usual and lawful mint charges and the charges for transportation from the several assay offices to the mint for coinage, and from the latter to the assistant treasurers, respectively, at which the coin certificates shall be payable.

Sec. 2. That for bullion deposited at the mints of San Francisco and Carson the coin certificates provided for in this act shall be redeemed on demand at the office of the assistant treasurer at San Francisco, and for bullion deposited at the Philadelphia, New York, Denver, Boise City, and New Orleans mints and assay offices the certificates shall be redeemed at the office of the assistant treasurer at New York. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause coin and mint bars to be transferred, after the said bars are stamped, as provided in the first section, to the assistant treasurers in New York and San Francisco for the redemption of the coin certificates aforesaid; and said coin certificates shall be receivable without limit for all dues to the United States.

Sec. 3. That the coin certificates to be issued under this act shall be redeemed on presentation either in silver bars or silver dollars, at the option and convenience of the Treasury.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the said certificates authorized by this act to be prepared and delivered to the mints and assay offices aforesaid as a part of the bullion fund, and from which fund deposits shall be exchanged as coin or coin certificates, at the option of the depositor.

Sec. 5. That the fine or standard silver bars authorized to be issued by this act shall be stamped according to their fineness, weight, and value; and the value of the silver bars shall be computed according to their coinage value in dollars. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby required to prescribe the necessary regulations for carrying this act into effect.

Mr. BEEBE. I make the point of order that that bill must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARTZELL. I would like the gentleman to state his reasons.

Mr. BEEBE. It necessitates the expenditure of money and an appropriation.

Mr. HARTZELL. Where does it provide for an expenditure of money?

Mr. BEEBE. In the engraving and issuing of the certificates there will be a necessity for an appropriation of money.

Mr. BURCHARD. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] to make a point of order upon this bill.

Mr. BEEBE. I do, under Rules 110 and 112.

Mr. BURCHARD. I think we had better send this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that it may receive fuller discussion. I would suggest that under that part of the bill which provides for the payment of these certificates they must be paid out of the Treasury, and under Rule 112 they will require an appropriation to be made, or the payment must be made out of an appropriation already made, and therefore it would be subject to a point of order. Under Rule 112 "all proceedings touching the appropriation of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property or requiring such appropriations to be made or authorizing the payment out of appropriations already made shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House."

Then again, under Rule 110, these certificates become a tax or charge upon the people; they are to be paid, they are charged upon the Treasury of the United States. The bill also provides for a change of the law in respect to the payment of dues to the United States. Lines 10 and 11 of section 2 provide that "these certificates shall be receivable without limit for all dues to the United States." It changes the law also, as it now provides for the payment of customs dues, which is a charge upon the United States, and the bill would therefore be liable to a point of order under Rule 110.

Mr. HARTZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this bill is subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BEEBE.] The statement made by my colleague that the bill changes the law so far as the payment of customs dues is concerned, I think is rather far-fetched. You can pay customs dues to-day with silver dollars or with silver bullion.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. HARTZELL. Well, perhaps not with bullion, but you can with silver dollars. And the proposed certificates are based not only upon bullion but upon silver coin, and by the terms of the bill are made receivable for customs.

Mr. BURCHARD. That does not make any difference.

Mr. HARTZELL. I think the same point was made on the silver bill and was overruled.

The SPEAKER. This point was not made on the silver bill.

Mr. EAMES. That bill passed under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HARTZELL. I believe, upon reflection, it was passed under a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. It passed under a suspension of the rules. The Chair sustains the point of order. Section 4 of the bill is subject to the operation of the rule, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARTZELL. I desire to offer the resolution which I sent to the Clerk's desk, fixing a time for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURCHARD. The committee seem to have been advised that these bills were subject to the point of order and were prepared with resolutions.

Mr. GARFIELD. The resolution now introduced sustains the Speaker's ruling and shows that the committee expected it.

Mr. YEATES. I do not think that the committee anticipated the point of order.

The Clerk read Mr. HARTZELL's resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the substitute for House bill No. 3780, to authorize the deposit of silver bullion and to issue certificates therefor, be made the special order for the 9th day of May and from day to day until disposed of in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, not to antagonize reports from the Committee on Appropriations, nor reports from the Committee of Ways and Means, nor previous special orders.

Mr. BEEBE. Does this resolution provide that the bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and the resolution could not provide for anything else.

Mr. BEEBE. Unless it does so provide, my point is that the resolution is not in order.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Does this resolution affect the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It has nothing to do with the morning hour.

Mr. BEEBE. If it be in order, I would suggest an amendment to provide that this order shall not interfere with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It cannot interfere with the morning hour, unless such is the will of a majority of the House. The majority have at all times the right to control the business of the House; and, if they so desire, can insist upon the morning hour, as was done this morning. The House cannot go into Committee of the Whole so as to cut off the morning hour unless such is the will of the majority. The caution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] is, however, quite proper.

Mr. BEEBE. If it were provided in the resolution that this business should not interfere with the morning hour, then of course that hour would come on, and the matter would not be left to be determined on the 9th of May.

The SPEAKER. The majority, if they wanted the morning hour, could refuse to go into Committee of the Whole. The control of the majority over the question of priority of business cannot be interfered with.

Mr. BEEBE. I merely sought an expression of the majority at this time.

The SPEAKER. On the very day named the House might go into Committee of the Whole and yet refuse to take up this bill.

Mr. FORT. I would like to offer an amendment now to be pending when the bill comes up.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman might have his amendment read now for information.

Mr. FORT. I desire to have it read.

Mr. HARTZELL. I will say to my colleague on the committee [Mr. FORT] that at the proper time I will yield for him to offer his amendment in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARTZELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3966, a bill (H. R. No. 4397) extending the time to construct and complete the Northern Pacific Railroad; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the public Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, presented in writing the views of a minority of the committee on the bill just reported; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOUSE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4398) amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the several acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the public Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave that the views of a minority of the committee, with an accompanying draft of a bill, be ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. MORRISON. Dissenting as a member of the committee from the report of the majority, I ask consent to present my views in writing to be printed with the majority report.

There being no objection, leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I also ask the privilege of having a minority report printed on the same subject. I will present it during the day. I have it not here at present.

There being no objection, leave was granted accordingly.

PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bills Nos. 3999, 4117, and 4118, a bill (H. R. No. 4399) to establish a board of Pacific Railroad commissioners; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the public Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Would it be in order to move that this bill be made a special order for the 10th of May, not to conflict with appropriation bills or other prior orders?

The SPEAKER. It will be competent for the committee to report a resolution of that sort.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he will accept a motion to that effect?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will accept a motion of that kind.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Say, then, the 15th of May, not to conflict with appropriation bills.

Mr. BLAIR. That requires an appropriation and should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is not the point; but the point is this: the committee must authorize and report such a resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. In that matter I wish to present the views of the minority with the accompanying bill.

The SPEAKER. The report will be received and ordered to be printed. The committee have not made the motion referred to by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The gentleman from Massachusetts agrees to it.

The SPEAKER. The committee must authorize it. This is the morning hour for the reception of reports from committees and extraneous motions are not in order.

AUSTIN-TOPOLOVAMPO PACIFIC ROUTE.

Mr. THROCKMORTON, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 112) to survey the Austin-Topolovampo Pacific route; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CHALMERS. I am directed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to report back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4158) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act. I ask that the bill and report be printed. It is the identical bill which has since come from the Senate known as the Thurman funding bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then I move that the Thurman funding bill which comes from the Senate be moved as a substitute for this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask consent.

Mr. CHALMERS. I ask that that substitute be received as an amendment and be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall object unless I can make a previous report.

The SPEAKER. There is no difficulty about that bill if the House desires to reach it. The morning hour will expire within ten minutes, when the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table will be in order and the Thurman funding bill can then be reached.

Mr. CHALMERS. Then I move that the bill and report be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SETTLEMENT OF RAILROAD GRANT LANDS.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1230, a bill (H. R. No. 4400) to facilitate the sale and settlement of the public lands granted to aid in the construction of railroads and lines of telegraph; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. I move the adoption of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the substitute for House bill No. 1230 be made the special order for May 14, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of, to be considered by the House as in Committee of the Whole, not to antagonize reports from the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee of Ways and Means nor with previous special orders.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests the modification that it be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as that is where the bill has gone.

Mr. BLAIR. No one has objected to the bill. It provides for no appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill provides for disposition of public land.

Mr. BLAIR. Not in the sense the Speaker imagines.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker has no imagination about it. The Chair goes by what is on the face of the bill. The gentleman from New Hampshire moved the reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the only criticism the Chair made was the resolution for the consideration of the bill should be in reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where the bill has gone, and should not be in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. BLAIR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I am directed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That the substitute for House bills 3999, 4117, and 4118, to establish a board of Pacific Railroad commissioners, be made the special order for the 15th of May, not to antagonize reports from the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee of Ways and Means or previous special orders.

Mr. PRICE. What bill is that?

Mr. HOUSE. What is known as the prorator bill.

Mr. SAMPSON. Is that the action of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to report it from the committee.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee of Claims, reported back the following petitions and bills; and the same were severally referred to the committees named, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The petition of Davis Hatch, of Norwalk, Connecticut, for remuneration for losses sustained by the wrongful acts and conduct of General Orville E. Babcock when acting as the authorized agent of the Government and of the late Executive with reference to the annexation of San Domingo—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The petition of John W. Wright, for reimbursement on account of money loaned for the use of the levy court in the District of Columbia—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. No. 3845) for the relief of Cyrus C. Clark, paymaster in the Army—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 3936) for the relief of Elias R. Core—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 4199) to compensate Samuel E. Ogden, of the steamers Des Arc and Emma No. 2, for carrying the United States mail from Memphis, Tennessee, to Deval's Bluff, Arkansas, and intermediate places, twice a week, from November 27, 1863, to December 31, 1864, under peremptory orders of the officer of the United States Army then in command at the post of Memphis—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 3757) for the relief of John W. Hickey, of the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 2004) for the relief of Henry C. Prens, administrator of Constantia Reeves—to the Committee on War Claims.

The petition of Dr. Mary E. Walker—to the Committee on War Claims.

The petition of Charles A. Folsom, of Chicago, Illinois, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

The petition of James Keenan, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

The petition of William D. Bibb, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. COX, of New York. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

BUSINESS OF EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to make a statement to the House, and to make a request for unanimous consent. At the session of the House last evening all the bills for revolutionary and invalid pensions that were on the Calendar were worked off; all of them favorably except two or three. The bills reported last night will not be ready to be printed and placed on the Calendar before to-morrow night. I now ask unanimous consent that the session this evening be utilized by taking the Private Calendar and considering it as on objection day, that we may get rid of a number of bills that have been pending from one Congress to another.

Mr. HANNA. I think that is very fair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the session this evening be devoted to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar as though on objection day, the effect of which would be that a single objection would prevent the consideration of any bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection. If he will attend the session this evening his objection can defeat any bill.

Mr. CONGER. Is it understood also that no bills that have already been objected to can be considered?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I desire to say that the Committee on Invalid Pensions do not wish to give up the right the House has accorded them; but, owing to the inability of the printers to have the bills ready, the evening session to-night would be of hardly any avail.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs to state, on behalf of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. RICE.] that unless the proposition of the gentleman from Texas is agreed to it will be unnecessary to have an evening session to-night.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I hope further that the request of the gentleman from Texas will be granted. A single objection will put over any bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. When a bill on the Calendar has been objected to by one member, and on a subsequent day by five, would a single objection prevent the consideration of that?

The SPEAKER. It would, because to-night is not for consideration. The evening session would not be treated as consideration day.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see present my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM;] but he intends, if we can get the legislative appropriation bill up, to ask for an evening session to consider that to-night. I do not see him present.

Mr. DURHAM. I am present.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Do I understand a single objection to-night will prevent the consideration of any bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Very well, with that understanding I withdraw my objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. It was not so understood last night.

The SPEAKER. Because the evening session last night was not made objection day as against pension bills.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I will state that in one single case last night, that of Fairly, there had been one objection, and then according to the rule it took five. We acted strictly according to the rule in that case.

Mr. THOMPSON. There will be no objection, I think, if the resolution be put in such a form that there can be no question as to one objection being sufficient to prevent the passage of a bill.

The SPEAKER. No bill on the Private Calendar can be passed to-night under the proposition of the gentleman from Texas if there be a single objection thereto.

Mr. MILLS. But if the bill has been once objected to, then it can be passed unless there be five objections.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

Mr. MILLS. Then I withdraw the proposition I made.

Mr. BRIGHT. I renew the proposition.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is recognized.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I renew my objection.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary. The subject is not before the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to go to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BLAIR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

BUSINESS FOR EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the objection if it is understood that the evening session shall be considered as objection day under the rules; that is, that a bill shall be laid aside to be favorably reported unless there be one objection when first reached or five objections when reached the second time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the proposition to be that to-night's session should be devoted to bills on the Private Calendar, as if on objection day, and not as if on consideration day.

Mr. MILLS. That is it exactly.

The SPEAKER. Then a single objection as against any bill on the Private Calendar to-night will be fatal to its consideration.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose a bill is reached which has once been objected to, does it not then require five objections to prevent its passage?

The SPEAKER. The evening session is to be considered as objection day and not as consideration day.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. On objection day, if a bill has been once objected to, then it requires five objections, if again reached, to prevent its passage.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I renew my objection unless there is a distinct understanding on this subject.

Several members called for the regular order.

PACIFIC RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Mr. BLAIR. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to call attention to the disposition of what is known as the pro rata bill reported by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and which I understand has been made a special order for the 15th of May. At the time when that was proposed I objected to its being done. I understand that the committee have consulted upon this floor, and that with the assent of a majority that order has been made. I am opposed to it.

The SPEAKER. That was a report made in the morning hour, and the morning hour has passed by.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask if an entry has been made contrary to the understanding as announced in the House, and I wish to know whether that can be done properly or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the entry on the Journal to be read. The gentleman rises, it seems, to a question of privilege, and states that something has been done that was not agreed to be done.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Chair please, I will state in a few words all there is in this matter. I do not rise to make any captious objection or to find fault. I wish to know what the right is in this matter. It will be recollected that when the bill was reported some gentlemen wanted to make it a special order for the 15th of May. I objected to that being done. The Chair stated to the House that it could only be done by virtue of a resolution reported from the committee itself. There was no opportunity for any meeting of the committee and there could be no such resolution agreed to. The matter passed, my understanding being that there was no special order made. I learn now that by private consultation between members of the committee, to which I was not made a party, and by consent thus obtained, the entry has been changed on the Journal, and the bill has been made a special order for May 15.

The SPEAKER. Nothing has been entered on the Journal that did not take place in the House. If a gentleman in his capacity as a member of his committee rises and states that the resolution he presents is offered by the direction of the committee, the Chair cannot dispute his word.

Mr. BLAIR. I would like to know if the Journal shows that any such statement was made by any member of the committee. I would like to have the Journal read.

The SPEAKER. The Journal shows that the resolution, which will now be read, was reported from the committee and agreed to by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the substitute for House bill No. 3999 be made a special order for the 15th of May, not to antagonize reports from the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee of Ways and Means and previous special orders.

Mr. BLAIR. What does the Journal show?

The SPEAKER. It shows that it was reported from the committee and adopted by the House.

Mr. BLAIR. I state as a matter of fact that it was done without my knowledge, and every member of the committee knew of my presence and of my objections. I did not hear anything that transpired in open House of that description whatever, and I was paying close attention.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts stated, if the Chair recollects aright, that the resolution was offered by the direction of the committee.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I did.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reaffirms that statement, and the Chair has nothing to do with the matter further.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. By the authority of the committee, obtained upon the floor of the House, I offered the resolution. The gentleman from New Hampshire was consulted, and declined to concur with the other members of the committee, but a majority of the committee authorized the report.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the committee was consulted, and that I was consulted as a member of the committee; that all that occurred as a matter of fact was this: I stood in my place waiting to offer a report, and the gentleman from Massachusetts desired me not to object to this bill being made a special order on the 15th of May. I did not withdraw my objection, and no suggestion was made to me of any consultation with other members of the committee or of any action of the committee at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the subject beyond his duty to submit the motion.

Mr. BLAIR. How could a committee sit during the session of the House?

The SPEAKER. That is for the committee to determine. No point of order was raised by any one.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 655) to incorporate the Cheyenne and Black Hills Railroad and Telegraph Company.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday, June 10, A. D. 1878, at twelve o'clock noon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL. I would ask the House to proceed to the consideration of the resolution just received from the Senate providing for adjournment sine die.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I was recognized just now by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] had been previously recognized before the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] rose.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move that we proceed to the consideration of the resolution which has just come from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to proceed to business on the Speaker's table, as made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the business to be transacted by the House at the session tonight?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer that question, because he is apprised that there will not be ready to-night any further business of the character for which the night session was appointed.

Mr. O'NEILL. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The resolution referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] having been received from the Senate, does it not go the Speaker's table, and is not the only way to reach it by the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]?

The SPEAKER. There cannot be two motions pending at the same time. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. O'NEILL. I presume that if we go to the Speaker's table the adjournment resolution may be reached.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until order is restored.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] moves that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I now move to take up the adjournment resolution which has come from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The business on the Speaker's table will be proceeded with in order under the rule.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY, WALLABOUT BAY, NEW YORK.

The first business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, inclosing a copy of the report of the commission appointed under the act of Congress approved February 26, 1877, entitled "An act to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in Wallabout Bay, State of New York, to the city of Brooklyn."

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I move that this communication be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order under the rule is Senate bills with House amendments; but there are no bills of that character on the table. The next order is House bills with Senate amendments.

THOMAS W. COLLIER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2291) for the relief of Thomas W. Collier.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out "$1,086.25" and insert "$938.72," so as to read: "That the sum of $938.72 be reimbursed Thomas W. Collier, postmaster at Coshockton, Ohio, for postage-stamps," &c.

Strike out the words "postage-stamp fund."

Mr. CARLISLE. I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARLISLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. C. SNYDER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 536) for the relief of W. C. Snyder, of Illinois.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out "four hundred and fifty-one" and insert "three hundred and eighty-one," so as to read: "and the further sum of $381 on his general account, being the amount of postage-stamps and stamped envelopes burned by the destruction of his office by fire," &c.

Strike out the words "and funds of the United States stolen."

Mr. CARLISLE. I move that these amendments be concurred in. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARLISLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3712) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Kansas, in the State of Missouri.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 11, 12, and 13 the words "release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or assess said site, or the property thereon, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof," and insert the following: "Cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State, and the service of any civil processes therein."

Add the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended toward the construction of said building.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I move that the House concur in these amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRANKLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS SINE DIE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a concurrent resolution from the Senate; which was read, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 17, 1878.

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday, June 10, 1878, at twelve o'clock noon.

Mr. WOOD and Mr. O'NEILL addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WOOD. Under Rule 54, I move the reference of this resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. O'NEILL. As an amendment to the gentleman's motion, I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the resolution, and on that I call the previous question.

Mr. WOOD. On my motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The sense of the House can be tested very readily. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] moves that the concurrent resolution of the Senate just read be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and on that motion he demands the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL. I rose to move (and I presumed the Chair would recognize me) that the House proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman who represents the committee usually having charge of this subject.

Mr. O'NEILL. I presume to be able to say that the business of this country can be finished in Congress by the 10th of June in spite of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means or the Speaker of this House, or the chairman of any committee of the House. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. CARLISLE. Under the rules of the House the vote must first be taken on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. O'NEILL. I claim that I rose in my seat and the Speaker recognized me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may have risen in his seat, but there are proprieties in legislative bodies which must not be forgotten, and the Chair has only conformed to them in recognizing the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. O'NEILL. I consider the proprieties rest with me as much as with any other member of the House, whether the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means or any other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair conforms to the uniform parliamentary practice in recognizing the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to have charge of this subject and to make the motion he has made.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope, then, the motion will be voted down.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 112, noes 105.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, demanded tellers, and Mr. KILLINGER demanded the yeas and nays on ordering the main question, but subsequently withdrew the demands.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, and Mr. KILLINGER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WOOD. I ask the Speaker to state to the House on what it is the House is now called to vote.

The SPEAKER. It is on the motion to refer the concurrent reso-

New York the Chair thinks that such a motion would not be in order. When a motion has been made to refer and the previous question ordered thereon, and then the affirmative failed, the previous question runs to the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. THOMPSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Reconsider what?

Mr. WRIGHT. To reconsider the vote just taken; and upon that I wish to say something.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to reconsider the vote just taken. Did the gentleman vote with the majority?

Mr. WRIGHT. I did.

Mr. GARFIELD. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is right.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am not right, if you say so. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to refer the resolution and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] moves to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CARLISLE. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to move to postpone the consideration of the whole subject?

Many members called for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it not in order to move to postpone the consideration of the whole subject?

The SPEAKER. Not while the question is pending to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion to lay on the table prevails, does it carry the whole subject with it?

The SPEAKER. It merely carries the motion to reconsider, and clinches the vote by which the House refused on the motion of the gentleman from New York to refer.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were yeas 62; a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this motion prevails, will the question recur on the proposition to concur in the resolution of the Senate?

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion has just been made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

The question being taken on Mr. SPRINGER's motion, the Speaker announced that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The pending proposition being to fix the day of adjournment, does not that take precedence of a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is always in order. Under Rule 42 it takes precedence of all other motions.

Mr. SPRINGER. This concurrent resolution is to fix the day of the adjournment of Congress, not of this House.

The SPEAKER. Not of this House; it is for the joint action of the two Houses.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 87, nays 146, not voting 58; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BREWER. My colleague, Mr. STONE, is paired with Mr. ROBERTS, of Maryland. If here, my colleague would vote "no" and Mr. ROBERTS would vote "ay."

Mr. LATHROP. I desire to state that Mr. ALDRICH is paired with Mr. EDEN.

Mr. SAMPSON. I desire to state that Mr. BURDICK is paired with Mr. BENEDICT. If here, Mr. BURDICK would vote "no."

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I desire to announce that I am paired with Mr. WHITE, of Indiana.

Mr. POUND. I desire to state that Mr. HAZELTON is paired with Mr. SHELLEY, of Alabama.

Mr. MAISH. I am requested by Mr. ACKLEN, of Louisiana, to announce that he is paired with Mr. THORNBURGH, on this question.

Mr. THORNBURGH. No; he is paired with me on concurring in the resolution of the Senate, but on no other question.

Mr. MAISH. I only make the announcement that I was requested to make.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH. My colleague, Mr. BROGDEN, is detained from the House by sickness. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. BEEBE. The previous question has been ordered and I make the point of order that no further motion to adjourn is in order.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes, it is.

The SPEAKER. The previous question does not cut off motions to adjourn.

Mr. PRICE. Is it not true that two dilatory motions cannot be made, and this is evidently a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Iowa point to the rule that says anything on that subject after the previous question has been ordered?

Mr. PRICE. I do not know that I can find the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will be kind enough to read Rule 44 and he will recollect the rulings which were made in the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, let them go on if they want to delay business.

Mr. EWING. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 10, nays 222, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—10.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky. I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. SAMPSON.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. ELLSWORTH.

Mr. HUNTON. On all questions arising during to-day's session I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. FRYE.

Mr. PRICE. My colleague, Mr. BURDICK, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. BENEDICT.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. WHITE.

Mr. POUND. My colleague, Mr. HAZELTON, is paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. SHELLEY.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DURHAM. I rise to make a privileged report. [Cries of "Regular order."] Gentlemen will find, I think, that this is the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, are we not operating now under the previous question?

Mr. DURHAM. Gentlemen will discover that I have the right to make this report at any time.

Mr. PAGE. Not when we are operating under the previous question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Speaker BLAINE decided that the report of a conference committee was so highly privileged that it could take a member from the floor, and would even take precedence of a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the Manual on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

The report of a committee of conference is, under the practice of the House, so highly privileged that it has been held to be in order even pending a motion for a call of the House.—Journal, 1, 31, page 1500.

Under the practice, reports of conference committees are received at any time, (except when the rules are suspended,) even during the pendency of a motion to adjourn or to adjourn over, and, like the motion to go to the Speaker's table, may interrupt a member who is on the floor speaking.

Mr. O'NEILL. This does not affect the motions already made?

The SPEAKER. It does not affect the status at all. The gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to be under a misapprehension. The concurrent resolution of the Senate is before the House because of the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] to go to business upon the Speaker's table, and when the concurrent resolution of the Senate was reached the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wood] moved to refer it to the Committee of Ways and Means, on which the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. If the motion had prevailed to refer, the previous question would have been exhausted under the practice of the House. But the affirmative vote did not prevail, and the effect has been to keep the concurrent resolution before the House under the operation of the previous question. The Senate concurrent resolution was reached by reason of the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] and being before the House for consideration the motion to refer was made in order under rule.

Mr. O'NEILL. The Chair stated that some time ago and I understand it thoroughly. I am not seeking any special credit for attempting to bring the House to a vote on the resolution for an adjournment of this session of Congress at as early a day as possible.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the gentleman is seeking, but he merely states the fact.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not care whether the gentleman from New York gets the credit for having brought the House to a vote on this question or I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman entitled by usage to be in charge of this matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. While the previous question is operating is a conference report in order?

The SPEAKER. The highest privileged motion is the motion to adjourn, and it has been repeatedly asserted that a conference report can interrupt a motion to adjourn, can interrupt a motion to adjourn for a day, can interrupt a member who is occupying the floor. The status of this question is not disarranged by this interruption.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no doubt about the correctness of the decision of the Chair, but we are still where we were after the conference report has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. CONGER. Is a conference report of higher privilege than going to the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly it is of higher privilege. The House is now disposing of the business upon the Speaker's table and that is the way the Senate concurrent resolution came up for consideration. It is the practice under the rule of the House and under the joint rules.

TEMPORARY CLERKS, ETC.

Mr. DURHAM. I now ask for the reading of the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House, No. 3102, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriations for detecting trespasses on the public lands and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendments numbered 1 and 4, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of $20,000 insert $6,500; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $1,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 5, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$15,000," in lines 4 and 5 of said amendment, insert "$7,500;" and in lieu of "$5,000," in line 7, insert "$7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the committee are unable to agree upon the amendments numbered 7 and 8.

M. J. DURHAM,
JAMES H. BLOUNT,
J. H. BAKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM WINDOM,
S. W. DORSEY,
JAMES B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, if the House will give me its attention I believe I can explain this matter so every member will understand it. I hope members will send for the bill and have it before them.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it the deficiency bill?

Mr. DURHAM. It is the bill to employ temporary clerks and to protect the timber lands of the Government. The House will bear in mind the original bill provided for the employment of twenty temporary clerks and appropriated for that purpose $6,500. The Senate amended it by striking out the per diem allowed these temporary clerks and gave unlimited authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to employ clerks and appropriated $20,000 thereon. The conference committee agreed to strike out the per diem for reasons which I will state in a moment and the Senate agreed to yield to the original appropriation and fix it at $6,500. That is the first amendment.

The next amendment was an item placed on the bill by the Senate appropriating $2,000 for a deficiency for care of horses, feeding the same, &c. The conference committee compromised upon that and made it $1,000.

The next item was an amendment put on by the Senate appropriating $2,000 for gas, &c. After this amendment was put on by the Senate, it is due to our committee to say that on its behalf I went to the Treasury Department and found that this appropriation was really needed, and the House conferees agreed to that amendment.

The next amendment was to what was known as the timber part of this bill. The original bill appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of protecting timber lands, together with other purposes specified in that section of the bill. The House will bear in mind that the Senate only appropriated $5,000 for the protection of timber lands, and appropriated the other $15,000 for the other purposes spoken of in that section of the bill. As this appropriation was recommended or asked for some time in the month of January, the conference committee believe that $15,000 was all that was necessary for the balance of the year, and we compromised by putting $7,500 for the purpose of protecting timber and $7,500 for the other objects specified in that section of the bill, thus reducing the original amount appropriated by this House $5,000.

The next amendment put on by the Senate was adopted by this House. It is amendment number 6.

The seventh amendment put on by the Senate reads as follows:

For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, $40,000.

The eighth amendment was:

For railway mail agents and postal clerks, $20,000.

Upon these two items the conference committee could not make any compromise at all. But it is right to say that if the forty-thousand-dollar item in regard to the special collectors could have been agreed upon by the conference committee a compromise could have been reached so far as the postal clerks are concerned. I will leave it to my friend from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] who was on that committee and who understands that postal matter, to make a statement in regard to that to the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to consume the time of the House very long; but I want to place the conference committee of the House, and the House itself, in a right attitude before the country; because I do not believe that one of the gentlemen on that conference committee from the Senate did your committee justice or did this House justice. I will mention no names. But I have a right to refer to the record as to what was said and done. One of those conferees said, in making this report to the Senate:

Upon the whole, the bill outside of the last item giving clerks to carry on the Pension Bureau was $1,500 less than it was as it came from the House in the first place, leaving out the items we disagreed about; so that there has been no extravagance on the part of the Senate.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that while my friend at the other end of the Capitol did not intend to be incorrect, yet he was so. As I stated a moment ago, the Senate has ratified that report as made to the Senate, and I have a right to speak of it because it is a matter of history and on the public records of the country. The report shows the Senate yielded $13,500—

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a question of order. I wish to call the attention of the Speaker to the question of order whether the gentleman from Kentucky who presents the conference report has a right, as he claims, to speak of the proceedings in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BANKS. And to carry it so far as to involve, perhaps, a question of veracity in regard to what was said?

Mr. DURHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is not a question of veracity. It is just a mistake, as I said.

Mr. BANKS. Then I withdraw that.

Mr. DURHAM. I hope you will.

Mr. BANKS. I so understood the gentleman; but I insist on the question as to the right of a member to refer to proceedings in the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the gentleman is thoroughly justified in the reference he is making, because the whole report shows that the Senate conferees recited what passed between them and the House conferees.

Mr. BANKS. There must be some other way of reaching it. It is not competent for a member to reply to anything said in the Senate on that subject.

Mr. DURHAM. I might say there was nobody to reply in the Senate to this, either. The gentlemen who acted on that conference committee on behalf of the Senate undertook to say they were as economical as this House, and I say the record does not bear out that statement. And if we have no right to reply here to what was said, I think it is fair that the conferees on the part of the House shall be heard upon this question and upon the statements of the gentlemen which have gone into the public prints. They have set the precedent, and that is all I ask to do.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit that we cannot—

Mr. DURHAM. Furthermore, before the gentleman responds I desire to say that I am standing here by the dignity of this House. And I stand by it because they approved of this legislation which we made here in the first instance, and until I am voted down by this House, whose organ I am, I will stand up and defend its honor and its integrity. That is what I will do, and I hope I will not go beyond parliamentary limits either when I undertake to do it.

Mr. BANKS. I did not rise to question the propriety of the argument of the gentleman on the position assumed by the committee of conference at all. I am perfectly willing to stand by the House committee, and I only raise the question as to the right of the gentleman to refer to the debates in the Senate. The Chair will see that there never would be an end to it if each House discussed what had taken place in the other.

The SPEAKER. There has always been a difficulty on this subject between the two Houses and very often there have been evasions by which those matters desired to be spoken of which have occurred in the respective Houses have been brought before the respective Houses. The Chair desires to have read what he has marked upon page 213 of the Manual.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majority on it there; because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independence, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses.

Mr. DURHAM. If I am not permitted to respond to what is published in the RECORD by experienced men at the other end of the Capitol then I will proceed in my own way and I hope I shall not go beyond the bounds of propriety.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never stated that the gentleman from Kentucky had gone beyond the bounds of propriety; the Chair only had read from the Manual what has been the practice in these matters.

Mr. DURHAM. Well, I will get at the argument without even referring to the RECORD at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. I sympathize entirely with the gentleman from Kentucky in his desire to set the conference committee and himself right, for I know so well the necessity a man is under under such circumstances to justify the action of himself and his associates on the committee of conference; but it may always be done by declaring what the committee of conference did and what he and his associates contended for in the committee of conference, and by saying what was refused by the conferees on the part of the Senate. That is a plain matter that he can speak of, but the proceedings of the other body we cannot, with propriety, refer to because it would beget a right on their part to reply to our proceedings, and if we once get to that we should get into a jangle of debate between the two bodies.

Mr. DURHAM. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Ohio for his suggestion, for I always listen to my friend with respect, because he served so long upon this committee and has been on so many committees of conference. But I was only doing that which the conferees on the part of the Senate have done.

Mr. GARFIELD. If a bad example has been set in the one House the dignity of this House does not require that we should follow it.

Mr. DURHAM. I was governed by precedents set for me by older and wiser heads than mine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been alleged, and has got into print, that the Senate is equally as economical as this House. I undertake to say that the records of the proceedings of the two Houses do not bear out that assertion, for the bill under consideration will show that the Senate has tacked on, in addition to the appropriation of the House, $13,500 on the first item; they put on $2,000 on the second item; they put on $2,000 on the third item; they put on $40,000 on the fourth item; they put on $20,000 on the fifth item; they put on $11,768 for clerks in Surgeon-General's Office; and it is not true in point of fact that the Senate has been as economical as the House upon questions of this sort. That is all I desire to say upon that question.

Now, I hope that the House will adopt this conference report and send us back to consider the items contained in the seventh and eighth amendments of the Senate, the seventh being $40,000 for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue and the eighth for railway mail agents and postal clerks. And I ask the House to bear with me while I discuss these two propositions. So far as the assistant collectors are concerned, I want to say this: that I am not for the "moonshiners." It has gone into the public prints that it is a controversy between the "moonshiners" and the regular distillers. I represent a district that is largely interested in distilling. I represent a district, I am sorry to say, in which moonshining is done to some extent, and I will never protect a "moonshiner" if I know it. But I will never put into the hands of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue $100,000, if I can help it, for the purpose of sending out his agents and spies all over the country to entrap men whom he supposes have been guilty of illicit distilling.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that last year there was appropriated for the present fiscal year $1,800,000 for collectors; at the extra session and at other times $42,000 have been appropriated, making $1,842,000 for collectors. This is ample for the period of one year for all the regular collectors throughout the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I do not understand that this House has appropriated a deficiency of $42,000 for collectors. We have appropriated some money for special agents which belongs to another appropriation.

Mr. DURHAM. Now, may I inquire what this $40,000 is asked for?

Mr. FOSTER. For collectors.

Mr. DURHAM. No, sir; for special agents.

Mr. FOSTER. No, sir; for collectors.

Mr. DURHAM. To show that the Senate conferees have misunderstood this whole question from beginning to end and that my colleague on the committee [Mr. FOSTER] does not understand it, I will read what the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says:

I desire to call your attention, especially, to the two items recommended to be appropriated for deficiencies in the internal-revenue service, namely, $40,000 on account of "salaries and expenses of collectors," and $150,000 on account of "salaries and expenses of agents, surveyors, gaugers," &c.

Now, mark what the Commissioner says further:

The allowances for collectors that have been recommended for your approval have not created and will not create a deficiency in the appropriation, but the needs of the service are so urgent that I deem it for the best interests of the Government that this appropriation of $40,000 should be made.

Now, what is this appropriation intended for?

It is intended, mainly, for the purpose of suppressing frauds in the manufacture and sale of spirits and tobacco.

That is just exactly what I said. It is not for regular collectors; the Commissioner does not place the matter upon that ground; he says it is mainly for the purpose of detecting the illicit manufacture of whisky and tobacco.

Mr. HANNA. Does the gentleman take the position that those frauds ought not to be detected?

Mr. DURHAM. I do not. But we have already given in this bill all that has been asked for that purpose—$20,000—and I want to say that I consented to give this much very reluctantly, because I believed that the Commissioner would have had sufficient for the purpose without this appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. DURHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it important that this question should be understood. Either the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] is mistaken, or a large number of other intelligent gentlemen are mistaken. Now, the appropriation of $40,000 asked for by the Commissioner is for collectors; but he tells us in the communication which the gentleman has read that there is no deficiency, nor will there be any, but that if we give him this $40,000 the service of the collectors throughout the country will be very much improved.

There is another appropriation for special agents—for the detection and punishment of frauds. That is a different purpose entirely, and for that we have made appropriations heretofore. Then there is still another appropriation, for gaugers and storekeepers. For that the Commissioner asks $150,000, and he says that he has no control of that, and we must make up that appropriation. But the $40,000 to which the gentleman refers is for collectors.

Mr. DURHAM. My friend will have an opportunity to make a speech after a while.

Mr. FOSTER. I know the gentleman does not want to misinform the House.

Mr. DURHAM. I do not. I am informing the House correctly; and I will show that the gentleman does not understand the question.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me finish my statement.

Mr. DURHAM. Why, this bill says that it is a deficiency of $40,000 for this year; and the gentleman has just told this House that the Commissioner says there is no deficiency and will not be any.

Mr. FOSTER. I say the Commissioner has said, "Give me the $40,000 and I will serve you a great deal better than if you do not give it to me; but if you do not give it, I will make no deficiency; I will run the service without it."

Mr. DURHAM. I say that this appropriation is for detective purposes. I prove this not only by the recommendation of the Commissioner dated October 31, 1877, but also by a dispatch, which I will read, dated April 10, 1878.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman has confused three appropriations which are entirely distinct.

Mr. DURHAM. I am very sorry I cannot beat this thing into my friend's head. [Laughter.] I hope he will just sit still till I read this dispatch; and if he then says he does not understand it, I will ask the Speaker to summon a jury on his case and see what they will do. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. I will call that Senate jury to act on the gentleman's case.

Mr. DURHAM. I wish I could have a chance at that Senate jury. [Laughter.] Now, in addition to the recommendation of the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue made on the 31st of October, I read this dispatch, which has been published in the RECORD:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10, 1878.

To Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM,
United States Senate:

In reply to your dispatch asking information as to the necessity of an appropriation of $40,000 for collectors, &c.—

Ah, it is this " &c. " that does the mischief. My friend said this was for collectors. Now we have this " &c. " brought in—

I have to say that the present appropriation is virtually exhausted.

Where is the deficiency? Why, it is just as the Commissioner said, there is no deficiency, and there should be none. Yet the Senate tacks on as an amendment to this bill an appropriation of $40,000 and calls it a "deficiency." Now let us read a little further.

Mr. FOSTER rose.

Mr. DURHAM. I cannot yield now. [Laughter.] I will not yield now.

The present appropriation is virtually exhausted, no more of it being available for the employment of deputy collectors—

He gets that in it now. Where is that? Was there any " &c. ? " Were there not deputy collectors in that? Now let us read a little further—for enforcement of the laws against those engaged in illicit manufacture of spirits and tobacco.

Clearly a detective farce. You cannot make anything else out of it. Now, mark what he says: "The necessity for increasing the regular force for the purpose named is urgent and pressing." Well, what does that say? Is it for a force already in the field? Not a bit of it; but for increasing the force. For what? For deputy collectors, &c. What is &c. for? To support a few of those gentlemen who are running around through the country at night pouncing upon innocent men and dragging them before the United States courts and robbing them of their property and then turning them loose. That is what it is for. It is not for the regular collectors, as I contend.

Why, sir, that dispatch is dated only the 10th day of April. I want to show you a little piece of law which I do not suspect the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has ever seen. He has not only expended $1,842,000 upon this part of the service, but you by solemn act—and my friend from Ohio was on that committee and helped to enact it—did what? The Secretary of the Treasury was directed for this present year to reduce the expenses of that Department 5 per cent., but instead of that if you appropriate this $40,000 to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue you will increase it 5 per cent. rather than reduce it 5 per cent. What does the law of the last Congress say? After making this appropriation of $1,800,000 for collectors of the internal revenue this House said and the whole Congress said:

And the Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to cause a careful examination to be made of allowances to collectors of internal revenue under the provision of section 3145 of the Revised Statutes for collection of revenue in the several districts, and to equalize the same, and to reduce the aggregate of such allowances not less than 5 per cent. of the amount of the same.

I undertake to say when the House will look into this thing, instead of reducing that expense 5 per cent., if you appropriate this $40,000 you will increase it 5 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date of that law?

Mr. DURHAM. The last appropriation bill. I refer to page 11 of that identical bill which my friend from the State of Ohio helped to pass in this House last winter. It is under the heading of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I have said about all I desire to say. I will add that what has been published as to economy in regard to matters of this sort is not borne out by the facts. While I do not intend to disparage the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and believe he is a clever man, I believe he is like the head of many of these Departments—indeed like the whole of them—the more you give him the more he wants, without ever looking to what may be the consequence or how it may be expended, provided only certain parties can be kept in employment. I say both sides of this House—I do not claim it for this any more than the other—I say so far as I have had the charge generally of these appropriation bills that side of the House has come to my assistance like this; but I do say you ought not to put it in the power of these gentlemen to expend one dollar beyond what you appropriate for them.

And you will bear in mind that at the end of the report made on the 31st of October last he said there would be a deficiency and he asked for this appropriation at that time, but on the 10th of April he still says that fund is not out but nearly exhausted! I think it holds out longer than any fund I ever heard of in my life. He asked for a deficiency October 31, 1877, and then run it upon nothing until the 10th of April and then admits he had still some in the Treasury, "but that it is nearly exhausted!" If he could hold out from the 31st of October, 1877, down to April 10, 1878, on nothing and besides put something into the Treasury, I ask you to compel him to run on to the 30th of June next and not give him a dollar. That is right. It is as plain a proposition as the nose on a man's face. It is paraded before the country. It is claimed that the Senate is as economical as the House. I hope I have a right to say that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a democratic authority.

Mr. DURHAM. Oh, politics are always running in my friend's head. Now, let us talk about business. That is what we should do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have tried to explain this term of $40,000. I say there is not a dollar of a deficiency, and you will place a falsehood upon your record if you vote that there is a deficiency there when the head of this Department tells you that that appropriation is now about exhausted. I undertake to say that we have already appropriated $30,000 for this purpose and they do not need another single dollar. But, as I remarked a little while ago, it is like the leech. It is "Give!" "Give!" "Give!" That is what it is. And I do insist that this House ought to put down the brakes on this extravagance, because you cannot denominate it in any other way than that it is a species of extravagance that this House and the whole country must necessarily condemn.

In regard to the postal clerks, I give way to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] to explain that. He understands it better than I do.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. DURHAM. Certainly I will. Whatever this House will say I will submit to it.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope not.

The question being taken on Mr. REAGAN's motion, there were—ayes 99, noes 91.

Mr. CAMP. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. I understand an order was passed for the purpose of having the evening session tonight. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question the gentleman from Illinois desires to ask may be a proper one. The Chair would like to hear it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand there was an order made to have a night session. I wish to know what effect this motion to adjourn, if it is carried, will have upon that order.

The SPEAKER. It will vacate it, of course.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEEBE. If the motion to adjourn should prevail, will this come up as unfinished business to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. Which?

Mr. BEEBE. The conference report and the Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. There will come up as unfinished business first the conference report and then the resolution in regard to the sine die adjournment.

Mr. BEEBE. The two matters will come up in their order?

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I understand the Chair to state that if the House should now adjourn there will come up as unfinished business to-morrow first the conference report and then the question of the sine die adjournment. Then, I ask, what is the use of taking a vote on adjourning by yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask gentlemen to withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, there were, ayes 51.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 96, not voting 86; as follows:

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey, upon all political questions. Not regarding this as a political question, I have voted.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce that I am paired with Mr. HOOKER. Mr. JORGENSEN. I desire to say that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. PRIDEMORE.

Mr. RIDDLE. I have been requested to announce that Mr. MORRISON is paired with Mr. DANFORD.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to state that Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, is paired with Mr. CHITTENDEN.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. BURDICK, is paired with Mr. BENEDICT.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON, is paired with Mr. BICKNELL.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Before the announcement of the vote,

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the Committee on Enrolled Bills had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 1080) authorizing the issue of passports free to colored citizens going to Brazil.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated, and accordingly (at five o'clock and fifty minutes p.m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: Resolutions of the New York Association of Mexican war veterans, indorsing the action of the House of Representatives in passing the bill placing General Shields upon the retired list of the Army—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of 335 citizens of Randolph County, Indiana, for an amendment to the Constitution as a substitute for the first amendment thereto that will effect a total separation of Church and State—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: The petition of citizens of Greenfield, Pennsylvania, for the extension of the national credit to aid in the construction of a great northern line of railroad to the Pacific Ocean, and the guarantee of interest upon the bonds of the company, protected by a first mortgage and lien upon the road and its revenues—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. CRAVENS: The petition of Robert Jackson, of Clarksville, Arkansas, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ERRETT: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, against the passage of the bill providing for the erection of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tennessee—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of workmen of Niles, Ohio, against the passage of the pending tariff bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. GAUSE: The petition of John T. Oates, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Resolutions of the Patent-Office Bar Association, of Washington, District of Columbia, relative to the disposition of appeal cases, as provided for in House Resolution No. 3615—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HISCOCK: The petition of citizens of Syracuse, New York, against the reduction of the tariff—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of citizens of Truxton, New York, for the amendment of the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Maria C. Fitzhugh and Ann C. Carroll, trustees of Daniel Carroll, for relief from assessments levied by District of Columbia officials—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MCKINLEY: The petitions of 150 citizens of Stark County, Ohio, and of 100 other citizens of the same county and State, for the equalization of bounties—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MORSE: The petitions of William F. Tewksbury and others, and of J. W. Balch and others, relative to appropriations for the purchase of Courtenay's buoys for the coast—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. RICE, of Ohio: The petition of Joseph Odell, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCHLEICHER: The petition of citizens of Texas, against the proposed change in the tariff on wool—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of citizens of Pleasanton, Texas, for the building of a railroad on the Rio Grande border—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: The petition of Patrick White and 55 other citizens of Tuscarawas County, Ohio, against the reduction of tariff duties—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. STENGER: The petition of 19 citizens of Snyder County, Pennsylvania, for the passage of the bill extending aid to the Texas and Pacific Railway—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Also, the petitions of 189 citizens of Juniata County and of 178 citizens of Perry County, Pennsylvania, for the extension of national credit to the completion of a great southern line to the Pacific—to the same committee.

By Mr. SWANN: The petition of Rebecca Straughan, showing that she is the widow of John Straughan, who was seized and taken from on board the United States frigate Chesapeake in 1807 and kept by the British five years as a prisoner; that this was one of the flagrant acts which caused the war of 1812; and asking for the same pension as is granted to a widow of a soldier of that war—to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON: The petition of manufacturers of Philadelphia, against changing the tariff—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York: The petition of stockholders of the National Capital Insurance Company, for the repeal of the charter of said company—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of bankers, merchants, and manufacturers of Troy, New York, for the repeal of the bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TUCKER: The petition of citizens of Rockbridge County, Virginia, for the passage of the Texas Pacific Railroad bill—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. WRIGHT: The petition of manufacturers and other business men of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, against any change in the tariff—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of Alfred H. Darden, for compensation for quartermaster stores taken by the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE

THURSDAY, April 18, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of George D. Hill, secretary and attorney of the Missouri and Niobrara Railroad Company, praying the passage of a law authorizing the President of the United States to designate the Missouri and Niobrara Railroad Company, a company organized under the terms of the amended Pacific Railroad law, approved July 2, 1864, to construct the north branch of said road westward from Sioux City to Rock Creek or Cheyenne, in the Territory of Wyoming; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of J. S. McGregor and E. B. Ogg, praying relief on account of the loss of a land warrant and failure of title to land located by them in the State of Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KERNAN. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York, which I ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK.

IN ASSEMBLY, Albany, April 5, 1878.

Resolved, (if the senate concur.) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States adverse to the right of the States to pass laws imposing per capita tax upon immigrants to provide for their support in cases of poverty or sickness, to urge upon Congress the necessity of some provision by Federal law to relieve this State from the burdens of a tax which it has been declared this State cannot pass in its own right without a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, signed by the presiding officers of the Legislature, be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

By order:

J. W. HUSTED, Speaker.
EDWARD M. JOHNSON, Clerk.

IN SENATE, April 5, 1878.

Concurred in.

By order:

WILLIAM DORSHEIMER, President.
JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

Mr. KERNAN. I beg to simply suggest to the committee to which this resolution shall go, the Committee on Commerce, I suppose, the importance of early action not only with reference to the State of New York but other States. The United States Supreme Court, in a case decided in 2 Otto, held that the law of New York, which we supposed to be somewhat in the nature of police regulations, by which the State of New York collected from immigrants a small amount per capita to provide for the sick and poor who came into the State, to be unconstitutional, and that Federal legislation must provide for that difficulty. I therefore hope the committee will take the subject up and see what law we may pass to relieve States like New York, Massachusetts, California, and Louisiana from the difficulty they experience in having a large number of sick and poor people left upon them, against whom they cannot in any way protect themselves by raising any revenue from immigrants to pay the expense of taking care of them. The system we had in New York of course is destroyed by this decision, and the State is quite anxious that Congress should act upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK. I present an act of the General Assembly of the State of Kentucky, which I ask to have read at the desk, and it will be followed by a joint resolution which I have in my hand and shall present when that order of business is reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the paper.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

An act to provide for the erection of a monument at the tomb of Zachary Taylor.

Whereas it has ever been the pride of Kentucky to show a proper appreciation of the merits of her illustrious sons and to commemorate the achievements of her patriots, whether they be in the civil or military field; and

Whereas the remains of General Zachary Taylor, late President of the United States, lie buried at his old home in Jefferson County marked by no monumental commemoration of the grand career of this honored son; and

Whereas it is a duty, the performance of which should be a pleasure as well of this State as of the United States, to honor one whose whole life was an example of devotion to his country unsurpassed in the annals of our Republic, whose invaluable public services so unselfishly rendered, embracing his brilliant success in our

Indian and Mexican wars, have immortalized his name and reflected a luster upon his State and the whole country: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That the sum of $5,000 be, and it is hereby appropriated for the purpose of purchasing land immediately surrounding the grave of the late President Zachary Taylor, not to exceed one acre, including the family burying-ground, to inclose the same by a substantial fence and to erect thereon a suitable monument to his memory.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the governor of this Commonwealth to appoint three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to carry out the provisions of section 1 of this act, and also to receive any contributions which may be tendered by the soldiers of the Mexican war, or any other persons, for the purposes set forth in section 1, and to forward to our Senators and Representatives a copy of this act, who are requested to solicit an appropriation from the General Government to aid in the purposes above set out.

Sec. 3. Upon the application of the commissioners, or any two of them, the auditor is directed to draw his warrant upon the treasurer, in their favor, for the sum appropriated by the first section of this act.

Sec. 4. Said commissioners shall receive no compensation for their services; and it shall be their duty to make a full and detailed report of their acts, the moneys received, from whatever source, and how expended, to the next General Assembly.

Sec. 5. This act shall take effect from and after its passage.

ED. W. TURNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JNO. C. UNDERWOOD,
Speaker of the Senate.

Approved March 11, 1878.

JAMES B. MCCREARY,
Governor.

By the governor:

J. STODDARD JOHNSTON,
Secretary of State.

A true copy from the original.

J. STODDARD JOHNSTON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. BECK. I move the reference of the paper to the Joint Committee on the Library, to which I shall ask the reference of the joint resolution also.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCCREARY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of the rivers of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MATTHEWS presented the memorial of Edward Wagstaff and others, citizens of Niles, Ohio, engaged in the manufacture of iron nails, &c., remonstrating against a reduction of the duties on imports and against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution in the nature of a petition of the Maple Council No. 3, Sovereigns of Industry, of the District of Columbia, praying the passage of a law providing for the appointment of a coal-weigher, and compelling coal-dealers to send the certificate of such weigher with every load of coal sold by them; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1016) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868, reported it with amendments.

Mr. DENNIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1044) granting a site for a dry-dock in the City of Baltimore, upon certain conditions, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 125) to change the name of the steamer George W. Elder to Columbia, and the bill (S. No. 126) to change the name of the City of Chester to Portland, reported them without amendment.

CUSTOMS OFFICERS IN ALASKA.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the bill (S. No. 1045) to provide for the administration of the oath of office to collectors and other officers of customs in the district of Alaska, and have directed me to report it back with a recommendation that it be passed. Mr. President, there is a necessity that this bill be acted upon at once. It simply allows the collector of customs in Alaska to take the oath of office before the judge of any circuit or district court of the United States. Whether he could do so now or not, the Committee on the Judiciary do not wish to pass upon; but the Treasury Department have doubts upon the subject, and there can be no objection to the passage of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that until the formal organization of the Territory of Alaska, the oath of office required by law to be taken by a collector or other officer of the customs in Alaska may be taken before the judge of any circuit or district court of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KELLOGG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1110) to aid the completion of the soldiers' and sailors' monument at Chalmette national cemetery, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAXEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1111) for the relief of Somerville & Davis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 25) to aid in the erection of a monument over the grave of Zachary Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Joint Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. CHAFFEE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post roads in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 490) supplementary to an act entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Kansas," approved March 3, 1877. The bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint three discreet, competent, and disinterested persons, who shall constitute a board of commissioners, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, who shall hold their offices for the period of one year from the date of their appointment, and shall have the same powers and authority in all respects as was provided for the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas," which act is hereby continued in full force for the purpose of enabling said board of commissioners to determine the claims presented to the board of commissioners appointed under said act, whose term of office has expired, and to do and perform all other acts and duties authorized and directed by said act. And said commissioners shall have power to employ assistant stenographers, not exceeding three in number, at such times as their services may be necessary to aid said commissioners. And the unexpended portion of the appropriation made for continuing the work of the commissioners appointed under the act aforesaid shall be available for the continuance of the work by the commissioners to be appointed under this act.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like the Senator having charge of the bill to explain the necessity for it.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, a few weeks since a bill was passed by this body upon the subject. It went to the House of Representatives, but not being reached in the regular course of business there, the term of office of the commissioners of the Hot Springs reservation expired. My colleague, who introduced the original bill, moved that that bill be recalled from the House, which motion was agreed to, and the bill was returned to the Senate. The bill was recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands, and in lieu of it the substitute which has just been read was reported under the direction of that committee.

The three commissioners appointed under the act of March 3, 1877, failed to complete the task assigned them within the time that the law required, and we find ourselves without any commissioners in point of fact and with the important work that had been assigned them left undone in part. There was a large amount of testimony in about nine hundred and fifty cases taken before them but no adjudication was had in any case. Therefore it became necessary, I will state in answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Delaware, that the former act should either be revived or a new act passed giving the President power to appoint commissioners that this work might progress.

That is the main feature of the bill that is now before the Senate. It revives the former act as far as it is possible by another act to do so, giving the President power to appoint three commissioners, not three in addition to the other three, but simply three commissioners. The features in the bill that passed this body some three weeks since that elicited debate here have been taken from the bill entirely and it is not obnoxious to any objection that was urged at that time against the passage of the bill. We leave the pay of the commissioners as provided under the original act; there is no increase of pay. We limit their appointing power to the maximum of three stenographers. We make no appropriation, but simply leave the unexpended balance, which is something over $9,000 under the former appropriation for this purpose, to be used in carrying out the object of this act.

It is important that this action should be had at an early day. I have already stated in the aggregate the number of cases that were pending before the commission. Many of the parties who have presented their claims before the commission have no other property at all but the property upon which they live, and it is important for them to know their status. It is important for the Government to know how much property it is going to have there. It is important to the public interests that this matter be settled at a very early day. The bill pretermits, if I may use that expression, all other questions in connection with this property, as to what the Government may ultimately do with it. It commits nobody to any particular idea as to the final disposition of the property in any respect, but leaves those questions open for future action whenever it may please Congress to take such action.

I hope and trust, Mr. President, that this bill will be passed that it may go to the other House. I am ready to answer any other question which the Senator may wish to propound.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator whether it is provided by the bill that these commissioners are to be paid out of the nine thousand and odd hundred dollars left of the appropriation made by the former act?

Mr. GARLAND. They are to be paid out of that appropriation. That sum has not been expended by the commissioners already named, and I may state that in the view of the commissioners it is ample to carry out the purposes of the commission.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. President, I concur fully with what my colleague has said in respect to the necessity for the prompt passage of this bill. When the bill was before the Senate some time ago, I felt it my duty to offer an amendment which was adopted. As I believed, that amendment was for the best interests of the people of Hot Springs as well as of the Government; and were it not for the paramount necessity of settling the question of title, I should renew the amendment which was offered and adopted before. But I think it so much more important that this question of title should be settled than that I should offer that amendment now.

But I wish to say that if this bill shall pass both Houses promptly, as the Secretary of the Interior has decided that he has no power to lease any waters or places for bath-houses on the reservation at Hot Springs, the entire waters and the bath-houses at that place will be under the control of two or three individuals who, I have no doubt, will be very anxious to retain it, and probably will do so for many years.

I simply wanted to state this much in justification of the amendment which I offered the other day authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to lease out the bathing-places to anybody who would apply for them. I hope, however, the bill reported by the committee will pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the appointment of commissioners to determine claims, and for other purposes, at Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas."

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Mary W. Rhett, administratrix, &c., be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

GEORGE R. DENNIS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 998) for the relief of George R. Dennis, of Maryland.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $2,394.66, in full payment for damages sustained by George R. Dennis in having his schooner William J. Dennis run into and sunk by the Government steamer General Meigs, in the year 1864.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL on the 27th of March, 1878:

The Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the petition of George R. Dennis and a bill for his relief, make the following report:

That they find the facts of the case as set forth in the petition fully sustained by the affidavits attached thereto, so far as ex parte affidavits can establish such facts, and these facts are substantially as follows:

On the 2d day of September, 1864, petitioner being the owner of the schooner William J. Dennis, duly licensed to carry on the coasting trade and engaged in navigating Chesapeake Bay, John T. Waters being captain and master; said schooner being then engaged on a voyage, carrying freight from the Annapomess River to Baltimore, and having on board five hundred and twenty-six bushels of oats, two hundred bushels of wheat, one hundred and seventy-two bushels of corn, ninety bushels of peaches, two tons of cast and wrought iron, one hundred and twenty-five grain-bags, and sixty-five peach packing-boxes, all being the property of the petitioner.

While said schooner thus laden was proceeding on her said voyage, about two o'clock at night of the 2d or 3d day of September, 1864, off or near the mouth of the Little Choptank River, and off or near James Point, the wind being southwest or south-southwest, and with her sails drawing with a free wind, those on board said schooner discovered the steamer General Meigs (otherwise called the T. L. Cannon) proceeding on a voyage down the Chesapeake Bay. When discovered said steamer was about four hundred yards from said schooner, coming down with great rapidity upon her; that there were no means by which said schooner could then have avoided a collision with said steamer, the schooner hugging the Eastern Shoals of said bay as closely as safety would allow; that said steamer taking no steps and those on board using no means to prevent such collision, said steamer struck said schooner on the larboard quarter, cutting her down to the light water mark, and so injured her that she immediately capsized and sank.

That before and at the time of the collision it was very dark, and the schooner had all her lights and signals required by the act of Congress; but that no lookout was kept on board said steamer at and about the time of the collision, and said steamer had not the lights and signals required by law of vessels engaged in such coasting trade; but that said steamer was at the time of said collision owned by the United States, or at least armed as a Government vessel and in the service of the United States, engaged in the lookout for blockade-runners, and for that reason carrying no lights.

But your committee find that had said United States vessel used ordinary caution said collision would have been avoided.

That after such collision every effort was made to save said schooner and her cargo, but the cargo became a total loss, and the schooner was raised, brought to the shore, and repaired at an expense of $250; the loss of cargo of the value of $1,694.66; cost of taking schooner to place of repair, $100; loss of and injury to furniture, $100; lost time incident to raising and repairing, $250; making total damage claimed, $2,394.66.

The steamer being in the service of the United States and employed as a part of her Navy, the courts of admiralty had no jurisdiction to adjudicate petitioner's claim. He therefore, in 1866, filed his petition against the United States in the Court of Claims. But upon hearing the case in the Court of Claims the petition was dismissed upon the ground that, the claim or cause of action being for the consequences of a marine tort, the Court of Claims had no jurisdiction to try it.

The petitioner therefore asks the passage of the bill referred to the committee, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $2,394.66 as the amount of damages to petitioner from the collision.

Your committee, in view of all the circumstances of the case, believe the petitioner entitled to the amount of the claim made in petition. They therefore report back the bill (S. No. 998) and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I could not hear all of the report; and I ask the Senator making this report whether it shows that the schooner, it being in the night-time, was carrying the lights required by law.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir; the schooner was complying in all respects with the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the committee find that those in charge of the schooner were entirely free from fault on their part?

Mr. MITCHELL. Entirely free from fault.

Mr. McMILLAN. The only dissent in this case from the report of the committee was on the part of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] and myself. We did not deem it necessary to submit a written minority report; but the ground on which we thought the claim should not be allowed was this: that the accident, if it were an accident, happened through the negligence of the commander of the Government vessel or through his willfulness, and in either case the Government cannot be liable for the tort of its agent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business—

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope we shall go to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar. The first case on the Calendar will be called at the point where it was left off yesterday.

LIFE-SAVING AND COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first bill on the Calendar at the point stated is the bill (S. No. 777) to organize a life-saving and coast-guard service.

Mr. SARGENT. That bill will lead to a great deal of debate. I wish myself to be heard on the bill at length when it comes up, and I know there are Senators opposed to it who wish to be heard. As it cannot be discussed under the five-minute rule adequately, I therefore object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES C. RUDD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 559) for the relief of James C. Rudd; which was reported adversely by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 195) to declare certain lands subject to taxation; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to add to the bill the following:

And provided further, That prior to the payment of such costs of surveying by said railroad companies no taxes shall be imposed except in organized counties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like as the bill is short to have it read at length the third time.

The bill was read at length, as follows:

That all the lands granted by the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and the act amendatory thereof, approved July 2, 1864, to the several railroad companies therein named, and to which said companies would have become entitled upon payment of the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same, as provided by section 31 of said amendatory act of July 2, 1864, shall be subject to all legal taxes imposed under authority of any State or Territory in which such lands are located, to the same extent as they would have been had such costs been paid and the lands conveyed to said railroad companies: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as applying to lands already forfeited by said railroad companies or either of them; nor shall it operate to relieve any such company from any forfeiture heretofore incurred: And provided further, That prior to the payment of such costs of surveying by said railroad companies no taxes shall be imposed except in organized counties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am quite doubtful whether that bill ought to pass. I know that in some instances there is hardship to localities in respect to such questions; but these lands were the property of the United States before they were granted to the railroad companies. They were granted to the railroads conditionally, but patents have not issued for them in respect to what this bill covers. All that the railroad companies have become the absolute owners of are taxable, as I suppose. Now we all know the United States has a pretty heavy lien upon all these lands for the payment of a great many millions of money. Whether it is right, therefore, for the States and Territories to tax these lands, while the title is yet in the United States and while the United States has so heavy and equitable a lien upon them, so much more than they are worth altogether, ten times over—whether in such case the States and Territories ought to be authorized to tax the lands is in my opinion a matter of very great doubt. I think I must ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

TERRITORIAL MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 330) explanatory of section 1889 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to ratify and confirm certain territorial legislation, and for other purposes; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Territories, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 10 of section 1, after the word "them" and before the word "corporate," to insert "the," and after the word "privileges," in line 11, to insert "necessary to their local administration;" so as to read:

That the words "the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories shall not grant private charters or especial privileges" in section 1889 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be construed as prohibiting the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States from creating towns, cities, or other municipal corporations, and providing for the government of the same, and conferring upon them the corporate powers and privileges necessary to their local administration, by either general or special acts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 15 of section 1, after the word "conferring" to insert "such," and in line 16, after the word "same," to insert "as were necessary to their local administration;" so as to read:

And that all general and special acts of such Legislative Assemblies heretofore passed creating and providing for the government of towns, cities, or other municipal corporations, and conferring such rights, powers, and privileges upon the same, as were necessary to their local administration, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed and declared to be valid, any law to the contrary notwithstanding, subject, however, to amendment or repeal hereafter by such territorial Assemblies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the end of the first section to insert:

But nothing herein shall have the effect to create any private right, except that of holding and executing municipal offices, or to divest any such right, or to make valid or invalid any contract or obligation heretofore made by or on behalf of any such town, city, or other municipal corporation, or to authorize any such corporation to incur hereafter any debt or obligation other than such as shall be necessary to the administration of its internal affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the second section, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories are hereby authorized and empowered to create a court for any town or city within such Territories, to be called the recorder's court of such town or city, to provide for the election and qualification of the judges thereof, and to define the jurisdiction of such courts: Provided, That such recorders' courts shall not have jurisdiction in any case in which the title to land or the boundary thereof shall in any wise come in question, or when the debt or damages claimed shall exceed the sum of $200, or in any criminal case where the charge is a felony, except for the purpose of commitment for trial in the district court: And provided further, That appeals shall lie in all cases, both civil and criminal, from said recorder's court to the district court, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Legislative Assemblies of such Territories.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If the Senator from Arkansas who reported this bill would state the amendments, &c., at length, I should be pleased to hear him.

Mr. GARLAND. It will be observed that the second section of the original bill gave authority to create new courts in cities and towns. On looking over the territorial legislation of this country the committee found that the ordinary justices of the peace, or magistrates, as they are generally termed, have been in most instances the only courts they have had of this character, and always sufficient for all purposes in the Territories in their cities and towns. The committee was unwilling to extend this authority beyond that general practice or general custom in the Territories in the government of cities and towns anywhere. The committee thought they were ample for all purposes of courts of jurisdiction that this section intended to confer.

To properly understand the bill itself I ask the Secretary to read section 1889 of the Revised Statutes.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1889. The Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories shall not grant private charters or especial privileges, but they may, by general incorporation acts, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits, or the construction or operation of railroads, wagon-roads, irrigating ditches, and the colonization and improvement of lands in connection therewith, or for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any benevolent, charitable or scientific association.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTRA PAY TO SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask for the present consideration of House bill No. 376.

Mr. ALLISON. Why go out of the order?

Mr. MAXEY. That bill was overlooked by some means, I do not know how.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves the present consideration of House bill No. 376.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we had better keep on with the Calendar regularly.

Mr. MAXEY. This bill is on the Calendar, but has been passed over by some means, I do not know how. It is No. 37 on the order of business.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the reading of the Journal to show how that was.

Mr. ALLISON. I remember now how it was passed, if the Senator will allow me. The Senator from Texas at the moment was not in his seat, and I remember to have objected myself. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to take up the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 376) for the payment to the officers and soldiers of the Mexican war of the three months' extra pay provided for by the act of July 19, 1848, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to the officers and soldiers "engaged in the military service of the United States in the war with Mexico, and who served out the time of their engagement or were honorably discharged," of the three months' extra pay provided for by the act of July 19, 1848, and the limitations contained in that act, in all cases, upon the presentation of satisfactory evidence that the extra compensation has not been previously received.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment, which was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall include also the officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the United States Navy employed in the prosecution of said war.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read. I see there is one.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY January 22, 1878.

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 376) entitled "An act for payment to the officers and soldiers of the Mexican war," &c., have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The act of July 19, 1848, which House bill No. 376 seeks to revive, was "repealed" by the act of July 12, 1870. (Sections 4, 5, chapter 251, volume 16, Statutes at Large, pages 250, 251.) According to the construction of that law by the accounting officers of the Treasury—though it will be observed that neither the act of July 19, 1848, granting extra pay to the men of the Army, nor the act of August 31, 1852, (chapter 108, volume 16, page 100,) granting extra pay to persons in the naval service on the coasts of Mexico and California, (the same as had been allowed to the Army serving in California, see chapter 78, 1850, volume 9, pages 504, 505,) are specifically mentioned as being included in the laws repealed by said act of July 12, 1870.

A proviso to House bill No. 376, on line 12, after the word "received," to wit—Provided, That the provisions of said act shall include also the officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines of the United States Navy employed in the prosecution of said war—would perhaps be just and proper.

The debate in the House (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 19, instant) when the bill passed, will give some light on the subject.

The same bill passed the House June 30, 1876, and some remarks were made by Mr. RIDDLE and others on the merits of the case. (See RECORD, July 1, 1876.)

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended by the proviso.

Mr. MAXEY. I can explain in a very few words, I think satisfactorily to the Senate, the reason for the passage of the bill now pending, which came to us from the House of Representatives, having first passed that body.

Three months' extra pay was allowed by the act of July 19, 1848, section 5, page 248, of volume 9 of the Statutes at Large. That three months' extra pay was designed, as I think, to apply to all those who had honorably served and been honorably discharged from the Mexican war. A joint resolution was approved July 29, 1848, directing the payment under regulations of the Paymaster-General, approved by the Secretary of War. That is to be found in volume 9, page 239. The joint resolution of July 20, 1850, transferred the unsettled claims to the Second Auditor. The extra pay to officers and sailors serving in Oregon and California was provided for in an act found in volume 9, page 504. That applied to privates and non-commissioned officers of the Army, and did not extend to the marines and Navy.

On the 12th of July, 1870, (pages 250 and 251 of volume 16,) all acts granting extra pay were repealed. A careful examination of the act of July 12, 1870, as compared with the act of July 19, 1848, and the acts of the other dates I have stated, leaves it in doubt whether those acts not specifically set forth in the repealing act are repealed, and whether or not the act of July 19, 1848, not being specifically mentioned, was repealed. In point of fact, however, after the 12th of July, 1870, any claim for the three months' extra pay was stopped. This is not a debt which was owing by the Government of the United States to those who served in the Army and Navy, but was a gratuity granted by the Government to those who had honorably served as a reward for meritorious services in a foreign country in defense of the flag of the United States. If this was a gratuity, and from any cause those who had thus honorably served did not receive their compensation, I submit that it would be just and proper that they should now get it.

Again, I will state that a very large number, (as I find by the letters which I have received about this bill,) who have heretofore paid no attention to this little matter, for it was a mere trifle, have by various causes been reduced to a condition of penury, and it is now a matter that they need; and persons who a few years ago would not have thought of asking for this are now sending up their letters asking for this three months' extra pay, though it is a mere trifle. So I think it would be right to pass the bill.

Further, an examination of the original act of 1848 satisfied me that the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the regular Army were not embraced in the three months' extra pay; and so I found—all of which will appear by the papers on file—on writing a letter to the Paymaster-General that he furnished copies of letters which had been addressed to Governor Marcy when Secretary of War showing that he placed a construction that the officers of the Army of the United States remaining in the service did not get this three months' extra pay. I cannot see myself why they should not be entitled as well as anybody else. If it was designed as a reward of merit, I cannot see why those who faithfully served throughout the whole war, whether they remained in the service or not, should not be entitled to this pay the same as men who had been discharged.

Again, in regard to the marines and the Navy, it is a historical fact and happens to be within my personal knowledge that the officers and soldiers of the Marine Corps did serve in the Mexican war and they are as much entitled to their pay as anybody else. Hence the suggestion of this amendment. If they served, they ought to be entitled to pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The Senator has spoken five minutes. The five-minute rule applies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will have an opportunity to finish what he has to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. MAXEY. I was endeavoring to explain so that the Senate might act understandingly. I was aware that I could not do it in five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thought it his duty to call attention to the rule.

Mr. MAXEY. The officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the Marine Corps are shown historically to have been in service with the United States Army in the Mexican war. It is also true that the officers and sailors of the Navy did valuable and gallant service during that war. I think the most gallant thing I ever saw anywhere was the movement of Commodore Tatnall against the castle of San Juan de Ulloa just preceding the siege of Vera Cruz. Those who were engaged in it certainly distinguished themselves for their courage in that movement. It is shown that the Navy, officers and sailors, did serve not only in the Mexican Gulf in that war, but also in California. Therefore it would be right, it seems to me, that the officers and sailors of the Navy and the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the Marine Corps should get the benefit of this three months' pay. That amendment is not included in the bill; but I care to speak of it now because I shall submit it to the Senate as a question of equity. If anybody is entitled, the officers and soldiers of the United States Army yet remaining in the service are just as much equitably entitled to this three months' extra pay as those who were discharged.

These are the reasons which actuated the committee in making the report. I have given the dates of the laws, not caring to trouble the Senate with reading them. They will be found just as I have stated them by date.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that the act of July 19, 1848, may fairly bear the construction that Secretary Marcy put upon it at the time, that it did not apply to the regular Army. It evidently applied to the volunteers who had left their regular business and gone from their homes for a short time, and thus were for a short time broken up; and it might stand upon a different equity, a different principle of gratitude, from the case of the regular Army who enlist for regular periods of time, as so far as the officers are concerned for life, and who make war their regular business. It appears that the proper officers of the Government in the time of it, now thirty years ago, put that construction upon it, in which apparently everybody acquiesced. That being the state of the case, now after thirty years to reopen this question, this law having been taken off the statute-book twenty years after the events occurred, appears to me to be unwise; and certainly it ought not to be done without a full report from the Secretary of War as to the application, and extent, and bearing, and cost of it, so that we shall have everything in view.

I think, therefore, Mr. President, that I ought to ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

MAJOR P. P. G. HALL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 420) for the relief of Major P. P. G. Hall.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

Mr. SPENCER. There is a report. It is a long report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want some information, because from the reading of the bill I should be compelled to vote against it, if there were no facts appearing in the report that would change my mind. This seems, as I understood the bill, to be a case where a paymaster comes here and asks Congress to indemnify him for a loss occasioned by his own clerk's misconduct or defalcation. Unless there is some special reason why that should be done, I shall vote against it.

Mr. SPENCER. The report shows the special reason. This man was assigned to duty under the reconstruction laws and a soldier was detailed to him as clerk, and the soldier detailed to him committed forgery, a matter that he had nothing to do with. If the Senator will listen to the report, he will be perfectly satisfied, I think.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, submitted by Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, on the 26th of February.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I see from the reading of the report that this is a question which ought to be examined to some extent before we act upon it. I must therefore ask that the bill go over, which will save the necessity of the further reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

ROSA VERTNER JEFFREYS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 819) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys.

Mr. McMILLAN. That may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

NEW RIVER CANAL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 820) to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase from the New River Canal Company, for military purposes, the free use of an inland canal and water-route between Pamlico Sound, North Carolina, and Charleston, South Carolina, paying for the same by installments, as the work is completed between certain navigable bodies of water.

Mr. SARGENT. That bill has never been referred to a committee, and I suppose the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] desires to be heard upon the matter by the Senate, and that is the reason it is on the Calendar without a reference. I therefore object, so that it may remain on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

TERRITORY OF LINCOLN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 144) to establish the Territory of Lincoln, and to provide a temporary government therefor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may go over, Mr. President.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not interpose an objection to the consideration of this bill. It is a bill that ought to be considered at an early day. If any action is had at all it ought to be at once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it ought to be considered, and it ought to be considered a good while before it passes, in my opinion; and, therefore, under the five-minute rule, stopping a lot of small cases to which nobody has any objection, when we can find them, I think we had better let Lincoln alone.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not think it ought to occupy five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I ask unanimous consent to be indulged one minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be heard if there be no objection.

Mr. CHAFFEE. It will be remembered that this bill was called up something over a month ago and passed through all the stages except the final passage of the bill, and the question now is on its final passage. The committee having the bill in charge made a very thorough examination of it and instructed me to make the report. The bill was cut off before by the expiration of the morning hour, and I have never had an opportunity to call the bill up since; but I was in hopes the Senator from Vermont would allow the vote to be taken. It comes from me in the regular discharge of my duties as a Senator and a member of the Committee on Territories. Not having the habit that some Senators have here of getting up in the morning hour and asking to call up a bill in order to retain possession of the floor, I have never been able to get the floor to call the bill up. I was in hopes the Senate would at least in this form, when it was reached on the Calendar, give me a vote on the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would give me great pleasure to oblige the honorable Senator from Colorado, as he well knows; but this bill is a bill of public and general importance, and it strikes me of very doubtful propriety, in fact a good deal worse than that. Certainly it is a general bill. Now I agree with the Senator that it is not a very convenient thing to file caveats to get the floor, and the Senator will bear me witness that I am not one of the individuals who fall into that category, so that I am sure the Senator will not feel that I am unkind to him if I insist that it should take its regular course as part of the public business affecting general interests.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Then I will only say that I shall seek to get the floor upon this bill at the very earliest day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M.

ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 8) for the relief of Othniel P. Hollis, of the Soldiers' Home, Augusta, Maine;

A bill (H. R. No. 99) granting a pension to Charles Slawson;

A bill (H. R. No. 3565) granting a pension to Dr. P. F. Reuss, late surgeon Seventh New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3566) granting a pension to Harriet E. Edwards, widow of David S. Edwards, late surgeon in the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 3567) granting a pension to James G. Mason, of Company I, Fifteenth New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3568) granting a pension to Mary T. Thompson, widow of William Thompson, late second lieutenant Company E Twelfth New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3569) granting a pension to Ovid H. Clark;

A bill (H. R. No. 3570) granting an increase of pension to John Murphy, late private Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 3571) granting a pension to Zephaniah Crnbaugh;

A bill (H. R. No. 3572) granting a pension to Andrew J. Morrison;

A bill (H. R. No. 3573) granting a pension to Charles G. Galezio;

A bill (H. R. No. 3574) granting a pension to Thomas Pulling;

A bill (H. R. No. 3576) granting a pension to Catharine D. Hunt;

A bill (H. R. No. 3577) granting a pension to W. H. Gould;

A bill (H. R. No. 3578) granting a pension to Julia J. Wheeler;

A bill (H. R. No. 3579) granting a pension to Philip Henry;

A bill (H. R. No. 3730) granting a pension to Elizabeth Reese, widow of John Reese, a deceased soldier; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3731) granting a pension to Rebecca T. Scott, widow of Major John B. Scott, late of the United States Army.

These several bills were read twice by their titles respectively, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

STEPHEN V. BENÉT.

The bill (S. No. 187) authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to rehear the application of Stephen V. Benét for patent for cartridges, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Why is a rehearing needed? Let the report be read; or perhaps the Senator from New Hampshire can state the case. I would just as lief he should state it as have the report read.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The report is quite long, and perhaps I can satisfy my friend the Senator from Illinois with a very brief statement. Under the law as it existed prior to 1870, General Benét had the right at any time he saw fit to make application for a rehearing; but the law of 1870 prohibited the reception of such an application by the Commissioner of Patents after the lapse of six months. General Benét was absorbed in his office duties at the time of the passage of this law, and the fact that a limitation of six months was imposed did not come to his knowledge on that account. When he learned of the change in the law it was too late; and this application has been pending before Congress from that time to this. As I say, the sole reason for his not knowing the fact was that he was engaged in the service of the Government.

I will state further what appears upon the report, that a similar bill actually passed both Houses of Congress once, but failed to be signed, on account of some mistake of the Clerk.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CAPITAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 502) repealing the charter of the National Capital Insurance Company; which was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish somebody would explain to me exactly the theory upon which the United States, by an act of Congress, gets the power to appoint a trustee by name of an insolvent corporation.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It has to go into court.

Mr. PADDOCK. I suggest, inasmuch as this bill was reported by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] who is not in his seat, that it had better go over unless some member of the committee desires to take charge of it.

Mr. SARGENT. Would it be in order to have a call of the Senate? It seems to me the Senate is very thin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in order, and a good notion.

Mr. SARGENT. If in order I should like to have the names of Senators called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. DORSEY. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There are serious legal questions involved in the bill. I will state to the Senator from California that I think the Senator from Kansas told me yesterday that he could not be here to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. He will be absent for several days.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He will be absent for a day or two. He is not purposely away. The bill may as well be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over. Does the Senator from California insist on a call of the Senate?

Mr. SARGENT. I did not desire to reflect on the Senator from Kansas at all, but I notice when we proceed to the Calendar quite a number of Senators seem to think it is unimportant business and leave the Chamber. We want those Senators here to explain the bills which they have reported. It was with a general application, and not with reference to any particular Senator, that I made the request. I am told, however, a number of Senators are probably at lunch, and I withdraw my request for a call in order to give them a chance to return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The demand for a call of the Senate is withdrawn; and the next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

LOTTERIES IN THE DISTRICT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1411) to prevent the sale of policy or lottery tickets in the District of Columbia; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REAL-ESTATE RECORDS IN THE DISTRICT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1432) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF PATENT LAWS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 300) to amend the statutes in relation to patents, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That will go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

OFFICERS TO TAKE TESTIMONY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2843) to provide for taking testimony for the courts of the District of Columbia; which was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the necessity of the bill explained; I understand what it means.

Mr. DORSEY. The bill was reported by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] not now in his seat, who, together with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] also absent, examined the matter. They referred it to the supreme court of this District and it was recommended by the court. I am not familiar enough with the bill myself to explain the necessity of it, which the Senator from Vermont suggests he desires.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is open to considerable question whether notaries public ought to be invested with the powers of examiners to take testimony. A great many notaries public here are cashiers of banks, mere business men, not acquainted with the judicial administration of the law. The power to take testimony ordinarily implies the power of the examiner to commit a witness for contempt for refusing to answer, and so on.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest, if the Senator from Vermont will allow me, that the bill go over until the Senator from North Carolina is in his seat.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well. It may be explained so as to be perfectly satisfactory. I think the suggestion is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over under the rule.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 850) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain; which was read.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill which has been read was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by myself. I was placed by that committee in charge of it. The bill is accompanied by a written report which has since been printed. A bill was passed by the House, No. 4242, having in view the same point. That bill I have examined also. It is precisely in effect and substance the same as the Senate bill. I therefore wish to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The House bill will be reported if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. No. 4242) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state that the House bill follows the precise verbiage of the Senate bill down to the last proviso which is contained in the House bill, and which is precisely in effect and substance the proviso of the Senate bill, and in order to avoid any further trouble the committee accept the House bill in lieu of the Senate bill. I therefore move to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill in connection with it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which is the bill now up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean? As an amendment to the Senate bill?

Mr. MAXEY. No, sir; but to discontinue the consideration of the Senate bill and act upon the House bill. This bill has come from the House, having passed there. The bill which was passed by the House is in substance precisely the same as the bill reported by the Senate committee and which is pending on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the House bill?

Mr. SPENCER. The House bill is also on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reported from the committee?

Mr. MAXEY. I will call the attention of the Senator from Vermont—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the point. What I want to get at is the present condition of the House bill. Has it been reported from a committee and is it now on the Calendar, or is it still in the Military Committee?

Mr. MAXEY. It is on the Calendar, order of business No. 317.

Mr. SPENCER. Both bills have been acted upon by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then what the Senator wishes to do is to take up the House bill in lieu of the Senate bill?

Mr. MAXEY. Precisely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the House bill is on the Calendar, having been read twice, but that it has never been referred to the committee.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to postpone indefinitely the Senate bill in order to take up the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves to postpone indefinitely Senate bill No. 850.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I now move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4242) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I should like to hear the report.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the House report be first read and then I will have the Senate report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, on the 6th instant:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No.

1642) for the restoration of George A. Armes to the Army with the rank of captain, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The records of the War Department show the following facts:

That George A. Armes entered the military service of the United States as a private in Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, September 1, 1862; was appointed second lieutenant in the same regiment December 8, 1862, and was appointed captain in the Second Regiment New York Artillery October, 1864. On the 14th of December, 1864, he was mentioned in general orders for meritorious conduct, by General Miles, "for leading the charge and capturing the works at Hatcher's Run, Virginia, in the face of an entrenched enemy and over obstacles very difficult to surmount." Upon the recommendation of Generals Hancock, Anger, Griffin, Mott, Miles, and Thompson, he was appointed second lieutenant in the Second United States Cavalry. Soon after, he was appointed captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry, and his commission was dated back, upon the recommendation of General Philip St. George Cook, with the approval of General U. S. Grant, as a recognition of merit. March 2, 1867, he was brevetted major in the regular Army for gallant services, having been previously brevetted major of volunteers. On the 12th of November, 1866, the following general order was issued:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PLATTE,
Omaha, Nebraska, November 12, 1866.
[General Orders No. 20.]

The commanding general announces to the Department that Lieutenant George A. Armes, Second United States Cavalry, being sent with twenty-five men of his regiment from Fort Sedgewick, October 23, in pursuit of a war party of Sioux Indians, which had driven off the previous day several hundred head of stock, found and followed their trail—under the difficulties of crossing two wide rivers, forks of the Platte, and of darkness—ninety-eight miles, from five o'clock a. m. to eleven o'clock p. m.; then he surprised the party, instantly attacked, killed, and wounded nearly all their superior numbers, captured twenty-two Indian horses, burned their camp, and brought off safely most of their stolen stock. Thus this young officer has set a fine example to the Department of overcoming difficulties that would have discouraged and stopped many without loss of credit, of bold determination to succeed, and of striking without stopping to count his enemies, and has presented to the profession, perhaps, the greatest cavalry feat heretofore recorded.

By order of Brevet Major-General Cooke.

G. LITCHFIELD,
Brevet Major, United States Army,
Aid-de-Camp, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

On the 20th of August, 1867, he was recommended by Generals Sherman and Hancock for the brevet of lieutenant-colonel, for hard and heroic services against the Indians, by whom he was wounded during an engagement. This is only a portion of the very meritorious and gallant conduct of this young officer to this date in his military history, which seems to have challenged almost the universal respect and confidence of the officers under whom he served. The records of the War Department further show that in 1869 charges were preferred against Major Armes. They were four in number. The first charge, with its specifications, was abandoned on the trial. Upon the third and fourth he was found not guilty; and upon the second charge, "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," he was found guilty and sentenced "to be dismissed the service." These charges were preferred by Captain George W. Graham. The main witnesses were Lieutenant B. F. Bell and Captain Charles G. Cox. Bell had already been tried, convicted, and cashiered for bribery and embezzlement of public property. Cox was, when called, undergoing trial upon charges previously preferred by Major Armes, and he was subsequently convicted and sentenced to be dismissed, cashiered, fined, and imprisoned in a penitentiary for three years. Graham, who was also called as a witness, was at the time awaiting trial upon charges preferred by Major Armes, which resulted in his conviction, and he was fined $500 and sentenced to be confined two years in the penitentiary. He was afterward shot while attempting to rob and murder a United States paymaster, captured, brought to trial, and sentenced by the civil authorities to the penitentiary for a term of two years, and, upon serving out that sentence, was killed while attempting another daring robbery.

The testimony, viewed in the light of its own contradictions and the character of the persons who testified, was all of the very worst quality. Many of the circumstances of his trial are remarkable. An officer who not only acknowledged that he entertained an opinion unfavorable to Major Armes, but had publicly proclaimed it, was allowed to sit as a member of the court, and no objection or remonstrance on the part of Armes was of any avail. The trial of Cox was in progress when that of Armes was taken up, yet the trial of Cox was suspended, it would seem, that he could appear and testify before his inevitable conviction upon the charges preferred against him by Armes. The debased characters of these witnesses, Cox, Bell, and Graham, were no better before than after conviction, and if justice had been allowed to take its course and these two desperate villains had been tried before Major Armes was, as they should have been in the regular and due order of things, the trial of Armes and the terrible injustice that was done him would never have taken place. Here is a case of a brave and energetic young officer, with a most brilliant record, driven in disgrace from his profession upon the testimony of witnesses wholly unworthy of credit. Major Armes did nothing but his duty in bringing charges against Graham and Cox, and they concocted the charges against Armes to save themselves. Two months after the trial of Major Armes their conviction and severe punishment followed upon the charges preferred by him. He was moreover their senior in rank, showing that Armes was justified in bringing the charges and that he was actuated by proper motives. His conduct, therefore, entitles him to commendation. It has already been shown what characters Bell, Cox, and Graham sustained. The women who testified had been ordered off the reservation at Fort Harker by the commanding officer as persons of notoriously bad character. The testimony of the weak-minded boy who was a witness against Captain Armes was so inconsistent and contradictory as to be entirely worthless. It is believed that every committee either of the House or Senate which has examined this case has reported in favor of Captain Armes. And the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of both the Senate and House in June, 1874, recommended his restoration to the Army in the following complimentary terms:

To the President:

The undersigned, members of the Military Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, earnestly recommend and request the reinstatement of George A. Armes, late captain United States Army, without loss of rank or pay. His case has had a thorough examination, and his innocence is proven; hence, his reinstatement, the least measure of justice, should be done at once.

POWELL CLAYTON,
GEORGE E. SPENCER,
JAMES K. KELLY,
P. M. B. YOUNG,
W. G. DONNAN,
J. M. THORNBURGH,
JOHN B. HAWLEY,
JOHN COBURN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 20, 1874.

Numerous testimonials from responsible and well-known citizens and officers of the Army and Navy, who have been associated with Major Armes from boyhood, show that he has always been upright and honorable. To any one who will examine the evidence and the subsequent character and history of the witnesses in the case, there can be no doubt that the charges against and conviction of Major Armes were the result of a conspiracy to disgrace and drive him from the Army, on the part of the desperate characters who figured in the trial. The record does not show that the proceedings in this case were reviewed and approved by the President, as the law directs. The case was therefore not completed, and, in the opinion of your committee, this fact is sufficient to entitle the accused to a review and judgment on the record, which, on the evidence produced before your committee, would certainly be in his favor. But it appears that an act of Congress was passed in June, 1874, honorably discharging Major Armes from the service. This act had the effect to sever all connection Armes may have had with the Army. The action of your committee, therefore, is based entirely on the abstract merits of Major Armes's case. He was greatly wronged and the bill here recommended, should it become a law, will enable the President to restore him to the Army, and thus measurably repair the injuries he has suffered.

The committee report a substitute for bill H. R. No. 1642, and recommend the passage of the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there not a Senate report?

Mr. MAXEY. There is, and as I am familiar with the theory of the report, having had it on my mind, I will, with the permission of the President of the Senate, read the report from the Senate Military Committee on the bill myself:

It appears from the evidence before the committee that Captain Armes was arraigned before and tried by a general court-martial convened at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, March 12, 1870. There were before the court on this trial four charges, with accompanying specifications, against Captain Armes. One of the charges, with its specifications, (charge 1.) was abandoned by the judge-advocate on the trial, and need not now be considered. He was found not guilty on the third and fourth charges, and guilty as to the second charge, and was sentenced "to be dismissed the service."

Charge 2, upon which he was found guilty, is as follows:

CHARGE II. Conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in violation of the eighth third Article of War.

Specification 1. In producing and publicly exhibiting at the mess-table, at Fort Harker, Kansas, several lewd, indecent, obscene, and lascivious pictures.

Specification 2. In then and there giving said pictures to the negro servant Ben, and ordering him to carry them to a Miss Shaw or Foster, living near, and ask her what she thought of them.

Specification 3. And when the said girl, after such public insult, resented it by slapping his face at the table, calling her a 'damned fool.' All this August 19, 1869.

Of the first specification he was found guilty. Of the second specification, guilty, except the words, 'and ask her what she thought of them.' Of the third specification, guilty, substituting the words 'damned fool' for the words 'damned fool.' Of the charge, guilty.

The sentence is as follows:

"And the court does therefore sentence him, Brevet Major George A. Armes, captain Tenth United States Cavalry, 'to be dismissed the service.'"

Following this the committee finds an order styled "General Court-Martial Orders No. 36, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, June 7, 1870," reciting the assembling of the court, the findings, and sentence, and closing with these paragraphs:

"II. In conformity with the sixty-fifth of the Rules and Articles of War, the proceedings of the general court-martial in the foregoing case have been forwarded to the Secretary of War for the action of the President of the United States, and the proceedings, findings, and sentence are approved. The sentence will be duly executed."

"III. Brevet Major George A. Armes, captain Tenth United States Cavalry, accordingly ceases to be an officer of the Army from the date of this order."

"By command of General Sherman.

"E. D. TOWNSEND, Adjutant-General."

At a later date this appears:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 2, 1872.

"In conformity with the sixty-fifth of the Rules and Articles of War, the proceedings of the general court-martial in the foregoing case of Brevet Major George A. Armes, captain Tenth United States Cavalry, have been forwarded to the Secretary of War for the action of the President of the United States, and the proceedings, findings, and sentence are approved. The sentence will be duly executed."

"WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War."

If the order of June 7, 1870, was valid, then there was no need for the above order of June 2, 1872, nearly two years later.

Before proceeding to the question of validity or invalidity of the order of dismissal, the committee deems it proper to examine the testimony on which the sentence of dismissal is based. There were six witnesses to sustain the prosecution. One had been cashiered and dismissed the service on charge of fraudulent conversion of public property to his own use. Two were officers of the Army awaiting trial before the court that tried Armes, both charged with fraudulent conversion of public property to their own use. Each was sentenced to be dismissed the service, and, further, to confinement in the penitentiary for a term of years. Two were women proven to be of abandoned character, and their general reputation for truth and veracity was proved bad. One of them (Miss Shaw, or Foster) is the party to whom the pictures are alleged to have been sent. The sixth was the colored boy Ben, referred to in the specifications, whose testimony was manifestly contradictory and evidently unreliable.

On the part of Captain Armes, he is shown to be a man of conspicuous gallantry, who had rendered his country much valuable service in the field. He had been more than once handsomely mentioned in general orders, and appears to have had the entire confidence of his associates and commanding officers. No act consistent with the charge and specifications throughout his life was shown. On the contrary, he appears to have had a moral character consistent with his character for courage and dash. The committee is unable to perceive how such a man, upon such testimony, was found guilty of such a charge. In this conclusion the committee finds itself in accord with all of the several committees of the two Houses which have heretofore examined, in some form or other, the case of Captain Armes. Still if the proceedings were laid before the President of the United States, as the final reviewing authority, and the sentence was approved by him, the question is settled. If such is the fact, it is evidenced, so far as appears to the committee, by the orders heretofore quoted of June 7, 1870, and June 2, 1872. It does not affirmatively appear from either of these orders that the President ever saw the proceedings, or ever reviewed them, nor does that fact appear in any wise to the committee. Section 996 of the revised army regulations of 1863, in force at the date of these proceedings, and yet so, reads as follows:

"996. The judge-advocate shall transmit the proceedings without delay to the officer having authority to confirm the sentence, who shall state, at the end of the proceedings, in each case, his decision and orders thereon."

This being a case of dismissal from the service, the President is by law the final reviewing authority. Nowhere in the record submitted to the committee, "at the end of the proceedings," or elsewhere, does it appear that the President "stated" in this case "his decision and orders thereon," unless the indorsement of the Secretary of War of June 2, 1872, may be so construed. This is not clear; it is not the natural construction of the language. A court-martial is quasi of criminal jurisdiction, and it is submitted that nothing should be taken by intendment in the proceedings before a court-martial any more than in proceedings before a court of criminal jurisdiction.

The material and essential fact—that which is essential to the validity of the order of dismissal—to wit, that the President has reviewed the proceedings and confirmed the sentence, nowhere affirmatively appears. It would be as difficult to sustain this paper as evidencing that fact, upon authority, as to sustain a record of a court of criminal jurisdiction in a capital case, which did not show affirmatively the appearance of the accused, his arraignment, his plea, the election, the paneling and swearing of the jury, the hearing of evidence and argument, and the charge by the court, the return into court of the verdict, the judgment thereon, &c., &c. In short, nothing on principle can be taken by intendment, in a case like this involving the character of the accused. And the very fact that the law makes the President the final reviewing officer only in cases of sentence of death and of dismissal from the service shows the jealousy with which the law wisely protects the character of the officer from unjust aspersion and accusation. Were there nothing in the way but the orders of June 7, 1870, and June 2, 1872, the committee would feel constrained to recommend a bill authorizing and instructing the President to review the case. It is manifest that the President's duty in this regard is judicial, and therefore cannot be performed by any one save the President himself. The record of his judgment, of his "decision and orders," may, of course, like any ministerial act, be performed by another hand, but the judgment, the decision, the orders in the case must result from the operations of his mind and conscience. But the committee finds itself in the progress of the investigation confronted with an act which took effect June 9, 1874, chapter 273, as follows:

An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to give to George A. Armes, late captain, Tenth United States Cavalry, an honorable discharge, to date the 7th day of June, 1870.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to give to George A. Armes, late captain Tenth United States Cavalry and brevet major United States Army, an honorable discharge from the service of the United States, to date June 7, 1870; and that said George A. Armes be paid the same pay and allowances as if he had been discharged under the provisions of the third section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1871, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1870.

By virtue of this law, Special Orders No. 136, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, June 19, 1874, were issued, honorably discharging Captain Armes as of date June 7, 1870. So that the committee concludes that the connection of Captain Armes with the Army was completely severed by virtue of the act aforesaid and order aforesaid, and whatever irregularities there may have been in the proceedings of the court-martial, and especially as to the review thereof, were completely cured by the act and orders aforesaid, and by the voluntary acceptance thereof by Captain Armes.

Afterward, to wit, during the second session, Forty-fourth Congress, Senate bill 407, a copy whereof accompanies this report as part thereof, marked Exhibit A, passed the Senate and House of Representatives, but failed to receive the signature of the President, and by the adjournment of Congress in less than ten days after the passage of the bill it failed to become a law.

It will be observed that this bill recognizes the fact that Captain Armes's connection with the Army was completely severed by the act of June, 1874, before quoted, and the honorable discharge granted Captain Armes by virtue of that act.

Proceeding upon the view entertained by every committee which has investigated the case, to wit, that injustice has been done Captain Armes, this bill, last referred to as having passed both Houses, declares:

"That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect George A. Armes, and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said George A. Armes, late captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of captain held by him on June 7, 1870, in any vacancy occurring; Provided, however, That no pay, compensation, or allowance whatever shall ever be given to said Armes for the time between June 7, 1870, and the date of appointment hereunder."

This bill appears to be, with a single exception, fairly guarded, and designed by Congress to do equity, as near as may be, to Captain Armes. If the intent of this bill was to authorize the President to nominate and the Senate to confirm Captain Armes captain of the Tenth Cavalry, to take his place in grade and rank in the regiment where a vacancy should occur in the grade of captain in that regiment, then the bill, in the judgment of the committee, would be equitable; but if it is to be construed as justifying promotion to the rank of captain, as of date June 7, 1870, in any regiment where a vacancy may occur, then it would not be equitable, because no one outside of that regiment has been promoted to the rank of captain by reason of his dismissal. The provision in respect to pay and allowance, prohibiting payment of any pay or allowance whatever between June 7, 1870, and his appointment under the act, should such appointment be made, is also right. It recognizes the act of June, 1874, which granted him an honorable discharge as of date June 7, 1870, and which directed his pay up to that date. The fact of complete disavowance from the Army is also recognized by the phraseology "late captain," &c.; also by the suspension of the law regulating line promotions so far as it affects this case.

Upon a full review of the whole case the committee are of the opinion that the passage of an act in substance the same as the bill passed through both Houses at the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, would be equitable toward a meritorious officer, who has rendered good service and who has suffered injustice, as the committee believes, as all committees have reported, and as the two Houses have twice shown they believed. In expressing this opinion the committee does not wish to be understood as reflecting on the motives of the court but to say that in its judgment the testimony was unreliable, and that no man whose whole life, from youth up, as the testimony shows in this case, was without tarnish, and whose official record is most honorable, should have his honorable ambition in his profession blasted and his fair character tarnished for all time by such testimony. Should the view of the committee be adopted, the committee would recommend that after the words "in any vacancy occurring" the words "in the grade of captain in said Tenth Regiment of Cavalry" be added. Such a law would leave it to the discretion of the President to nominate, and of the Senate to confirm, and is, in the judgment of the committee, the full extent of relief that can lawfully be granted to Captain Armes.

In pursuance of the views expressed in the foregoing report, the committee herewith report a substitute for Senate bill 352, submitted to them, and recommend the passage of the substitute.

I do not know, Mr. President, nor do I believe that anything which I may say can add to the strength of the committee's report. In the case before the court-martial there were six witnesses on behalf of the prosecution. One of those was a dismissed officer of the United States Army, dismissed for appropriating public property to his own use. Two others were under charges for like offenses, both of whom were convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary. Two others were women of notoriously bad reputation, and their general reputation for truth and veracity was proven before the court-martial to be bad. Thus five are disposed of. The other was a weak-minded boy, and you have only to attempt to follow his testimony to see that it is utterly crooked and unreliable on every part of the case.

The impression springs up at once, is it right, is it just, is it fair on such testimony to strike down the honorable reputation of a man who has done gallant service for the country, who has received the encomiums of those placed ever him in general orders published at the head of every regiment for gallant and meritorious conduct on the battle-field? Is it fair that such a man ought to have his whole life and the reputation which he had built up from a youth of sixteen, blasted upon such testimony? The testimony shows that this young man was a Virginian, and at the age of sixteen entered the Federal Army, against the general sentiment of the people where he lived. Following his conviction of duty, as he understood it to be, he entered the Federal Army as a private soldier, and step by step rose until he arrived at the rank of captain and brevet major. Nowhere in all that military history does a stain appear upon his character until it became important to destroy him in order to save others whom he had placed before a court-martial. The remarkable fact appears that, although the two cases of Cox and Graham stood upon the record of the court-martial in date prior to that of Armes, yet the cases of both those men were set back and his was advanced, and they were put upon the stand and their testimony taken. After this was done by the same court these two men were placed upon trial, both found guilty, and sentenced to the penitentiary. The other man had previously been dismissed, and then these two women were put upon the stand whose reputation for truth and veracity, in addition to their reputation for chastity, was proven upon the trial by prominent officers to be notoriously bad, one of those officers being no less than Colonel Miles, who has distinguished himself on the northwestern frontier. I refer to their general reputation for truth and veracity, which was proved, outside of the fact to which everybody testified as to their bad character otherwise, to be notoriously bad. No man who ever read the testimony or who examined the facts could possibly believe such witnesses.

Such is the character of the testimony. In the face of the record of this man they placed him upon trial, and upon such testimony he was found guilty and sentenced to be dismissed.

Mr. President, every committee which has examined this case as lawyers examine a case, has arrived at the same conclusion. Congress twice arrived at the same conclusion, once by setting aside the order of dishonorable discharge and granting him an honorable discharge; next a bill was introduced, what for? To restore him to the Army? Not at all, but to place him as near as may be where he was before, so far as the power of the President is concerned to promote him. With the laws in force prohibiting promotion except by seniority, the President, if he believes that wrong and injustice have been done, may under this bill nominate this gentleman, send the nomination to this body, and then it will be for the Senate to say whether or not he shall be confirmed. Not a dollar of pay is given, but it simply restores him as near as may be.

Mr. President, I have only to say that if I had been the reviewing officer, those proceedings never would have received my sanction. I can state that so far as the papers have been shown to me, I do not believe they ever did pass under the review of the President of the United States, although the law was mandatory that proceedings in review should be had by him, and his order and decision made thereon. But Congress did, as near as they could, attempt to relieve him. They ordered an honorable discharge to be granted him; and passed another bill, which is exactly the same as the one now pending. That bill passed both Houses. Whether designed on the part of the President or not, I do not know, but being at a very late day of the session, it failed to receive the approval of the President, and thereby it fell. It seems to me that this is simply a case of pure, naked justice. Some may have thought that I have had blood toward all those of our kith and kin who turned against us. No such feeling can actuate me in this case. This man fought under the flag of the Union from his youth up. It is not to be supposed that I would have had feelings toward him on that account, or that that would specially commend him to me; but I have made this defense in behalf of this young man because the eternal principles of justice ought to be maintained. All we can do is to restore him to the position which he was honorably given, and of which he was unjustly deprived.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, there seems to be pretty good reason to believe from the statement of the Senator from Texas that the judgment of this court-martial was an error, although it appears that the other people who accused Armes were convicted and that the people whom Armes accused were convicted. They were convicted all around, and what we should find if we reviewed the court-martial proceedings in the other cases as to their regularity or illegality we do not know. I am not making these remarks as preliminary for asking that this case go over. I have no objection to its being voted upon. But the danger in respect of this kind of legislation is, as it appears to me, that the Congress of the United States, having provided by law courts-martial to try matters of this character and regulated all their proceedings in the Army just as we do in private affairs by a judicial system, now is sitting at this moment as a court of review of the findings of a court-martial, (not upon the ground, which would have some force in it,) that it appears to us that the members of that court were corrupt and so the court had not any honest jurisdiction because they were unfit to try the case, but because, although as the committee say, they have no imputations to make upon the officers who composed that court-martial, who might be able to vindicate themselves if they had a hearing possibly, but because they committed an error. That is a very dangerous ground for legislation to stand upon. In the history of this Government and respecting men now living, there are no doubt thousands of cases of hardship, of error, where injustice has been done to gallant men by the error of a court deciding against them when it ought to have decided, as we might think, in their favor. There is the intrinsic danger of steps of this character. Of course this proceeds upon the principle that it is a part of the business and the duty of Congress to rectify the errors of courts-martial, not to rectify their doings when it turns out that the members of the courts were themselves prejudiced and unfit or corrupt, but where, as in this case, the members were upright, the court was duly formed, but unhappily for the victim made a mistake, as we think. Mr. President, I do not wish to commit myself to that ground. I must be excused from doing so, as much as my sympathies have been affected by the statement of the Senator from Texas.

Now let me come to a second point.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Vermont permit me a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it does not come out of my five minutes, Mr. President.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator knows very well that I dislike to interrupt anybody. The record does not appear in the report, but it appears in the proceedings that Captain Armes upon trial objected to one of the members of the court because he had expressed an opinion in regard to him and his case. That objection was one of the most serious character; he had said that he would not believe him on oath, and so on. The court overruled the objection and permitted the trial to go on. I do not think that could occur in civilized life.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, that very often happens in civil life, where a man objects to a judge, but it unhappily happens that the committee have told us from their investigation that they have no reflections to make upon the court except that they committed an error.

Mr. MAXEY. The committee do not reflect upon the honor of the court. What we complain of is that it was an error of judgment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the committee has not stated in its report, if I correctly understood it, and I listened very attentively, that it finds that this objection to this member of the court was well founded, because the objection if well founded was that he was a scoundrel, that he was a man whose oath to try that case honestly could not be believed. Perhaps that officer would like to have a fair hearing in this court of review before we condemn him.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not think the Senator understood me. I said that this member of the court so charged Armes, not that Armes had charged him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah, very well.

Mr. MAXEY. And the point Armes made was that this member of the court had already formed an opinion and had expressed such an opinion and, therefore, was incompetent, which in my country at least would be a very good objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be a good objection if true, but the committee do not tell us that the court found that this member of the court had formed and expressed any such opinion. Presumptively, therefore, the court found that he had not, and that this officer who was on trial had made an objection that was untenable in point of fact. There is the difficulty with that; and this very little interruption—I do not know but that I shall have to ask an extension of my time—illustrates the dangerous ground it is that we are treading upon in undertaking in this way to review the judgments of courts-martial or any other courts. But I pass that; and if I can have time to state the difficulties that occur to me, I do not wish to have this matter go over if it can be avoided.

Now we come to another point. I must be excused from giving in my adhesion to the reasoning of the committee in respect of what they consider to be the invalidity of the approval of the proceedings because it does not appear on the face of the papers affirmatively and in terms that the President of the United States approved of the finding of the court-martial, but as they state it appears to have been signed by the Secretary of War. Now, it is a question that is worthy of a good deal of consideration before we decide it certainly in the direction that the committee have, whether under the statutes of the United States creating the office of Secretary of War and prescribing the duty of the President in respect to court-martial cases, the act of the Secretary of War in signing a paper of that character is not presumed by law to be the act of the President of the United States just as the act of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland and Empress of all the Indies is conclusively proved by the mere signature of one of the officers of her cabinet without even the foot-note or titular description of "secretary of state for foreign affairs," or whatever it may be. But I do not propose to go into that, only to say that I must be excused from accepting at this time as sound law that proposition of the Committee on Military Affairs.

It appears that in 1874 Congress authorized the Secretary of War to issue to this gentleman an honorable discharge from the Army of the United States. It appears to have been done on his application. The committee say that he voluntarily accepted that. Grant that injustice had been done him, yet by his own voluntary act if he was in the Army he went out, and if he was already out he took a certificate of character and went his way. Then he was out of the Army by his own volition if he was not out before. Now the question is whether it is right to the other officers of the regiment, he having accepted an honorable discharge, which is just the same as it affects him or anybody else as a resignation, for Congress four or five years afterward to say that he may be reappointed to rank those gentlemen who then stood below him and who have served all the time; and if the appointments in the regiment are full what is to become of the lowest second lieutenant, if that is the present lowest grade of commissioned officers, who has come in to fill up the vacancy, so that all the vacancies in that regiment are full? He must be turned out of the Army I suppose. Is that right? And it is stated to me by my honorable friend from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that this gentleman obtained a year's pay also when he took this honorable discharge in 1874, and his connection with the Army then, by his own act, however great may have been the injustice done him, was completely dissolved. Now it is proposed to overturn the regular order of promotion in the Army, to set that all aside, and authorize the President and the Senate to put this gentleman up at the head or near the head or wherever he would have been. If this were merely to authorize the President of the United States to give him an appointment in the Army like any other deserving citizen who for any reason has a good right to be favorably considered for such a place, that would be another thing.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Vermont misunderstands the bill again. It does not propose to authorize the President to appoint him until a vacancy occurs, and therefore does not displace anybody.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Until a vacancy occurs in what rank?

Mr. MAXEY. In the rank of captain, the rank he held at the time of his unjust dismissal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it would not squeeze out the lowest lieutenant. I am obliged to the Senator for correcting me. Then what is to become of the nine other captains who have served for the last three or four years, perhaps on the plains fighting the Indians, just as gallantly as Captain Armes did—because there are a great many gallant officers in the Army of the United States; he is not the only gentleman who has distinguished himself; I am glad to be able to say from my information that ninety-nine in one hundred at least of all the officers of the Army of the United States do distinguish themselves in the same way. They do their duty bravely and truly all the time. This gentleman being out by his own volition and with a year's pay, is it right to put him at the head of these other nine? I do not believe it is; and but for the sympathy we feel for an injustice that appears on this investigation to have been done him by the error in judgment of a court-martial, which involves our inquiry in every other case of that sort and involves the consequences that I have already stated, I do not think it would commend itself to the judgment of the Senate. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think the ground taken by the Senator from Vermont proves too much. If he objects to having the findings of courts-martial ever reviewed by Congress, I think he would take off one of the most salutary restraints upon the license to which courts-martial might run, that now exist. There is no service, military or naval, in any country that does not have a little bit of a tendency to run into cliques, sometimes a very great one, and there have been instances in which very grave injustice has been done to the best of officers under such influences. There is no danger that Congress is going to launch forth into the general business of reviewing courts-martial. From the foundation of the Government to this time very few officers have been restored by any action of Congress—I mean very few in comparison with those who have suffered at the hands of courts-martial. At the same time, I have no doubt that the power of Congress to do it and its entire discretion to do it at any time, has been a very wise and salutary restraint upon the care and circumspection with which courts-martial are conducted; and if you once establish it that, no matter what finding of a court-martial may happen to get approved, there is no possible appeal here, I say God help some officers of the Army in future years.

Now, the fact that this man got a certificate of good character, an honorable discharge in 1874, as the Senator says, only proves to my mind that very gross injustice was done him. The very fact that Congress granted that proves the injustice of the court-martial. You could not possibly have granted that without absolutely trampling on it, and by that very act saying it was unjust. If we are willing to say that a thing was unjust, do not let us stop at half measures. If we put it as a matter of record that this man was entitled to an honorable discharge, then surely he ought not to lie under the curse of having been guilty of so grave an offense as to call for that punishment which to a soldier is equal to death, being cashiered.

I do not pretend to have examined with any very great care the case of Mr. Armes, although I have casually known of it for a great many years; but we are all more or less governed by the findings of committees and we have to trust them. I find that this case has been examined with the utmost care by committees in both branches of Congress without the slightest regard to party. I find that such men as Powell Clayton, GEORGE E. SPENCER, James K. Kelly, P. M. B. Young, W. G. Donnan, J. M. THORNBURGH, John B. Hawley, (the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury,) John Coburn, (for a long time chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the other House and one of the most careful men I have ever known in legislative affairs,) Charles Albright, B. WADLEIGH, (present Senator in this body,) J. W. Nesmith, EPPA HUNTON, Lewis B. Gunkel, Joseph R. Hawley, and C. D. McDougall have been in favor of this measure in the past. You have had favorable reports from those who have given the utmost care and attention to this case; and I have no doubt that it would be a very serious injustice to this man to deny this relief; an injustice that we cannot afford, not simply with regard to him, but with regard to ourselves, and still more with regard to the vast number of officers who in the future in the Army and in the Navy are liable to suffer from causes which we need not specify, and which we may not go into, from the summary punishment of courts-martial. It is a wholesome and good thing to hold the power of review in Congress, to exercise it of course always with discretion, but in meritorious cases to exercise it with absolute power.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to offer an amendment so as to limit this power of the President to appoint to the first vacancy which shall occur. I have no doubt that the principle of examining the records of these courts-martial is too firmly established now to be overturned. We shall continue to sit here, I have no doubt, as a court of appeal for cases of this kind.

While I have a very decided conviction that the bill itself ought not to pass, at the same time I interpose no objection to that, but suggest this amendment, which seems to me to be fair. This will prevent this bill and the subject of the appointment from becoming a sort of covenant to run with this regiment and with the presidential office in point of fact. If the President shall see fit now, with all the light before him when this matter comes freshly before him from the hands of Congress, to appoint this man to the first vacancy that shall occur in the rank of captain, so be it; but let it not be there as a sort of terror to the lieutenants and captains who are back of him in rank all the time interfering with that just feeling and idea of promotion which is constantly before them as the incentive, and be a bugbear to them, so to speak, and prevent them from knowing what the consequences are to be, whether, when a certain captain may be promoted or when in some accidental manner he may go out of the Army, Armes may be obtruding before them all the time and prevent them realizing what they expect and are entitled to.

I do not see that my amendment interferes practically with the effect of this bill. It is not offered with any design that it should do so, but that it should not simply give to this an extension which would be under the circumstances very unjust to that regiment.

Now, perhaps, as germane to this general question, I might say something about this matter of putting people into the Army in this manner. We have been this session all the time considering, Congress has been considering what the Army should consist of, as to the number of privates and as to the number of officers. I think the conviction is very general, whatever may be the fact in reference to the number of privates, that we have officers enough, too many. West Point is giving us seventy or eighty a year. We have undertaken no method of limiting that number, but are putting that many into it in addition to those who are appointed from civil life, and at the same time we are constantly putting men in in this irregular way. It seems to me that it is entirely wrong, that we are going at this matter in a manner which is doing injustice to the Army itself, and which is bound to bring about that state of prejudice on the part of the people which will result in very great damage to the Army.

I notice, also, that no one ever here appears for a private soldier, nor does a private soldier ever here appear to say anything for himself. We bother ourselves completely and exclusively about that portion of the Army which is the least entitled practically to consideration. I know personally, as I have no doubt do other members on this floor, that the injustice that is done by courts-martial is much more glaring in the case of private soldiers than it is in the case of officers; and that brings me to speak generally of the obligation which the country is under to that very meritorious class of people, not merely those who are now in the Army but those who were in the Army during the late war. The negligence, so to speak, of Congress in reference to their rights and interests, is much more conspicuous than it is with reference to the officers of the Army. There were men who served without pay or reward or hope thereof, practically speaking, that never received enough to make them whole. The class of men who received large rewards, who had a constant incentive in the shape of the hope of promotion to do their duty, have been constantly pressing Congress for recognition until we have a retired list for the Army which embraces men just as able to do a day's work as any member on this floor, who are receiving a benefaction of nine or ten thousand dollars a year in some cases. It has become a very conspicuous injustice. We are constantly doing this thing; we are doing it piecemeal. Now I say if it be, as the Senator from Maine says, notorious that courts-martial are doing injustice—and I have no doubt it is so—and if the present authorities for reviewing such cases are insufficient, we ought to create a board of review. We ought to go at it in some systematic way and not be picking out exceptional cases of this kind, which, as the Senator from Maine well said, are not really exceptional. There are hundreds of cases equally meritorious with this, cases of men who have simply quietly stood aside and made no appeal to Congress, who have not importuned Congress for years as this man has, and consequently are in no condition whatever to receive and will not receive anything at the hands of Congress and will leave their wrongs unrighted.

Mr. MAXEY. I trust the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will not be adopted. The committee investigated that point as closely as we possibly could. The House committee did the same. If we are to do right, let us do right all the way through. It is entirely clear that the President will not nominate this officer nor the Senate confirm him unless the case is right. Hence I do not see the sense of this restriction. Had it been presented in committee or anywhere where it could be acted on, it might have been different; but here the bill has passed the House; it has passed through the Senate committee, and is now before the Senate for final action. If we amend it, it will have to go back to the House. I do not see that the amendment is of such importance as to justify anything of that kind. Therefore I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. BLAINE. I think the Senator from Texas will also see that the amendment might be very prejudicial. It is in effect saying to the President that if you cannot make up your mind instantly this man shall not be righted. A vacancy may occur the day he approves this bill, and when he has not had the least time to examine the case, when you do not give him the least opportunity to exercise the sound discretion which he ought to exercise in such cases as this; and if he does not appoint him to the very first vacancy, the bill goes for nothing. The amendment takes from the President the discretion with which he ought to be clothed, and in that respect, which I do not think the Senator from Kansas intended, it renders the bill entirely nugatory.

One other word in answer to my friend from Kansas. I agree with him that the Army in some respects is top-heavy, that there are many more officers in some departments than there ought to be, and we might by some wise legislation probably thin them; but I would not do it by injustice. I would not stop the railway train, as the old lady desired, by a collision. I think we can afford to get rid of officers without turning them out with disgrace upon them when they have been honorably discharging their duty, and I think we can better afford to pay an extra officer or two than to do injustice to the humblest officer or the humblest private in the Army of the United States.

Mr. MAXEY. I did not care to criticize the amendment in the light that the Senator from Maine has suggested; but it appears to me very clear that it would have an appearance of dictating to the President "if you do not put that man in right away the act shall have no effect." Suppose a man were to die to-day a captain of the Tenth Cavalry and a vacancy therefore occurred which would have to be filled, the President would have to go immediately to work and investigate this case. In other words, if it is just to pass the bill, let it pass removing all restriction from the President and the Senate. I therefore ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas I think is a good one and a just one, and I do not think the observations of the Senator from Maine show it to be otherwise. His point is that this vacancy may happen so suddenly that the President would not have time to read the reports of these committees and the record of the old court-martial to know what to do. But the President cannot fill up the vacancy until he nominates somebody to the Senate. The vacancy will stay until the President and the Senate act. So there is nothing, it appears to me, of any force in the objection that this amendment does not give the President an opportunity to decide, because the moment a vacancy occurs if you limit it to the first one as the Senator from Kansas wisely proposes, that vacancy remains open until the President has had the opportunity to go over the record and make up his mind.

Now, suppose you leave it as it is, then as the Senator from Kansas has stated, and as nobody denies, this is a running right. The present President of the United States may consider this case and conclude that he will not appoint this gentleman to the first vacancy; he thinks it is not just to the service or the public interest. That decision does not bind anybody. He nominates one man and he is confirmed. Another vacancy occurs the next year afterward. The question is reopened and the President of the United States is obliged to decide again. If he goes out of his office, another President of the United States comes in, for the office is continuous. Then a vacancy occurs; the same question is brought up again; and it may continue to be brought up for any length of time without limitation, because we do not provide that the matter once decided adversely shall be a bar to an application for a fresh appointment. It is an open, continuous, indefinite act.

Mr. President, on the motion of the Senator from Kansas I must ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I desire to say a single word on the case now before the Senate. As a member of the Military Committee, although I agreed with the conclusions reached in this report, I did not agree, and the committee was not otherwise unanimous, in the steps by which those conclusions were reached. It seemed upon the evidence clearly established that gross injustice and wrong had been done

Captain Armes, and I believed it to be the duty of Congress in this case to redress that injustice, although I recognized and felt the dangers arising from a precedent of this kind, as the Senator from Vermont has alluded to them. But the precedents for legislation of this kind have already been established; this establishes no new precedent; and acting in the line of other precedents I cannot see how the committee could reasonably refuse to grant to this man who had been thus wronged the justice which the bill would give him.

I recognize, too, the force of the reasons which have been urged in favor of the amendment of my friend the Senator from Kansas, and I shall vote for that amendment and for the bill thus amended. I think myself it would be unjust to the officers of the Army to have this appointment hanging over them for a long time to come and to have before the President a strife whenever a vacancy occurs as to whether Captain Armes shall not fill that vacancy.

The question being taken upon the amendment of Mr. PLUMB by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 7, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—7.
Anthony, Davis of Illinois,	Edmunds, Morrill,	Plumb, Teller,	Wadleigh,
NAYS—47.
Armstrong, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Blaine, Bruce, Burnside, Butler, Cameron of Wis., Cameron of Pa., Chaffee,	Coke, Conkling, Conover, Davis of W. Va., Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Grover, Harris, Hereford,	Hill, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, Matthews, Maxey, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, McPherson, Mitchell,	Morgan, Randolph, Ransom, Rollins, Sargent, Saulsbury, Saunders, Spencer, Voorhees, Wallace, Whyte.
ABSENT—22.
Allison, Booth, Christiancy, Cockrell, Dennis, Eustis,	Ferry, Hamlin, Hoar, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada,	Kellogg, Kirkwood, Merrimon, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson,	Sharon, Thurman, Windom, Withers.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN MITCHELL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 855) for the relief of Warren Mitchell.

Mr. McMILLAN. Under the five-minute rule of debate it would be impossible to dispose of this case at this call of the Calendar. I therefore ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to and goes over. Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate will probably continue the discussion to any extent that may be found necessary. I should be very glad if the Senate would consent so to do that we might proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think those interested in subsequent cases would not consent to the suspension of the rule, and it would not do to undertake it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the case goes over. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

TIMBER IN COLORADO, NEVADA, AND TERRITORIES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 20) authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes.

Mr. WHYTE. That seems to be a bill granting a large amount of timber, apparently, through a very great area of territory.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I hope the Senator from Maryland will allow the report to be read.

Mr. WHYTE. I think the bill had better go over and be taken up at a time when there is more opportunity of discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. SARGENT. It has been my observation that after several hours spent on the Calendar the Senate gets irritated and restless. I think we had better proceed to the consideration of executive business. I make that motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that motion will be withdrawn for the present.

Mr. SARGENT. Every bill now coming up is passed over because the Senate does not want to consider it. There is no more important bill than the one which has just been passed over, which was discussed at very great length some time ago. The people of the West are absolutely debarred from using the timber, buying the land, or living in the Territories. Under these circumstances the hardship of the situation presses with very great force upon western members. I have no doubt the Senate will be ready to allow any time to explain the bill which may be necessary. There is a similar one somewhat further along on the Calendar for the relief of California, and Oregon, and the Territory of Washington, where we propose to buy the land of the Government. I think preventing us an opportunity of considering these things must arise from the circumstance that Senators are really tired and irritated by the variety of topics taken up to-day, and we can do better afterward.

Mr. WHYTE. The only reason why I objected was because I remembered what a tremendous amount of discussion the timber question has involved during this session of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. That was a discussion in regard to certain measures submitted by the Interior Department. We propose to obviate the necessity for such measures hereafter.

Mr. WHYTE. That was exactly what I supposed. Therefore, I thought it was a very important bill; and having heard stump speeches on the timber question, I thought perhaps five minutes was hardly time enough for anybody to make one of that character. It will not do to cut a man down to five minutes on questions of this kind.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall ask leave that my friend be heard further at length if he desires.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The bill just passed over occupied an hour and a half of the Senate in discussion, and no word was said against it. It is as important as any private bill can possibly be. Now, as the Senator from California has just said, if the Senate has got into such a state of mind and feeling that no bill of this kind can be passed or considered, then I think we had better go into executive session or adjourn.

Mr. SARGENT. I make the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS.

Mr. GORDON. I want to appeal to the Senator from California to allow the bill establishing general quarantine laws to be acted on. It is a bill of a general character, and the season is so rapidly advancing when it is necessary to the cities interested to take advantage of it, that I trust the Senate will consider it an exceptional case and act upon it to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it on the Calendar?

Mr. GORDON. It is reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce, and I am satisfied it will not take ten minutes to act on it.

Mr. CHAFFEE. So of the bill just objected to.

Mr. GORDON. The difference between this bill and any other is that there are large cities and large sections of country in immediate danger now from invasion by foreign diseases, particularly the yellow fever. I am satisfied there will be no objection to the bill as amended by the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield?

Mr. SARGENT. I see the bill is on the Calendar a long way ahead. We cannot reach it to-day.

Mr. GORDON. It is a House bill.

Mr. SARGENT. It is the last bill but one on the Calendar, and we cannot possibly reach it to-day.

Mr. GORDON. I ask that an exception be made of it, because of the peculiar character of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I will withdraw the motion for the purpose of the Senator making the motion to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion for an executive session is withdrawn.

Mr. GORDON. I move to take up the bill I have indicated.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I object. We are proceeding now with the Calendar under the rule.

Mr. GORDON. We can set it aside by a majority vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection of the Senator from Colorado is well taken, the Chair thinks.

Mr. GORDON. I insist on my motion.

Mr. MORGAN. I insist that the motion shall not be allowed, for this reason: that bill contains, as I understand, a very grave constitutional question, and one that merits full discussion.

Mr. GORDON. If my friend from Alabama will allow me, I am satisfied he misapprehends the bill altogether. The bill, which I introduced by request myself, did have, as was supposed, some very grave constitutional questions involved, but those points have all been stricken out, and I am satisfied if he reads the House bill as amended by the Committee on Commerce he will find that the national quarantine regulations sought to be established by this bill are altogether subservient to the State regulations, and the objection which he anticipates will not be found in the bill as reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Georgia that it will be necessary that he should move to suspend all prior orders to take up his bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Georgia, but I desire to understand the rule. We are proceeding under a rule. Can a majority set that aside?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only by moving to suspend all prior orders.

Mr. ALLISON. That being done—

Mr. GORDON. Is it necessary to make a motion to suspend all prior orders, because there seems to be nothing now before the Senate at all except the Calendar? I understand we can suspend the Calendar on a simple motion to take up a particular bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Georgia that there is a present order to proceed with the Calendar of unobjected cases.

Mr. GORDON. Very well. Then I move that all prior orders be suspended and that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the House bill relative to quarantine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I desire to ask the Chair this question: when that bill is disposed of, do we immediately go back to the Calendar as before, or is it necessary then to readopt the order of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SARGENT. We go back, of course, under the order already adopted, which is simply suspended for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is only suspended for the time being.

Mr. ANTHONY. If that is the general understanding, very well; but it seems to me that a motion to lay aside the Calendar and take up the bill of the Senator from Georgia would supersede the order under which we are acting.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the way I supposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it only suspends the order temporarily.

Mr. GORDON. That is my motion; and of course I make it with the understanding that we proceed with the Calendar where we left off when this bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 23, noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. GORDON. I am satisfied there is a quorum present, and the Senator from Colorado will I think withdraw all further objection. If he does not, I shall be under the necessity of calling for the yeas and nays. I am satisfied that the Senate agrees that we ought to pass this bill.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The Senate has passed an order by which unobjectioned bills are to be considered in their turn. Now the proposition of the Senator from Georgia is to jump all the business except the very last bill or the next to the last bill on the Calendar and take that up. I think that is unfair to Senators having bills on the Calendar.

Mr. GORDON. I am satisfied the Senator from Colorado has not considered the nature of this bill. If a city in his State were in danger of invasion by disease from just off the borders of his State, and possibly the passage of this bill might render safe his people, would he not consider that an exceptional case which ought to be acted on promptly? I tell the Senator that the people of Savannah and the entire coast of Florida, Georgia, and the Carolinas are appealing here day by day, by telegram and otherwise, to the Senate to act upon this bill, so that they may put into operation the important regulations which it suggests to protect them from the yellow fever now raging in Cuba, especially in the city of Havana, with which this entire coast is in communication almost daily, certainly weekly. It is no mere private bill, but a bill in which a large portion of the people are interested.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Three-quarters of the morning hour is left undisturbed; the morning business is now through by quarter past twelve. The Senator can get up his bill in some morning hour.

Mr. GORDON. We can decide it very soon by a vote of the Senate. I call for the yeas and nays unless we can get Senators to vote.

Mr. WHYTE. I see that I am the innocent cause of this stoppage of the public business by having objected to the bill of my friend from Colorado. Now I withdraw my objection. Let the vote be taken on his bill, and then we can proceed with the bill of the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question, however, is on the motion made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WHYTE. He will withdraw that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Georgia, upon which he has called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to say a word in sympathy with the motion of the Senator from Georgia. He has indicated so clearly that I need not attempt to repeat or add to it, the importance and the interest attaching to this bill. There is one suggestion, however, which I think may induce Senators who have hesitated to consider it to forego their objections. Such a bill naturally suggests, and indeed the original draft of the bill warranted the suggestion, that the rights of States, of which we know historically they have been very jealous, were to be invaded or interfered with, that such legislation might trench upon what in a very famous case the Supreme Court called the police powers of the States, their right to make health laws, quarantine laws, pilot laws, and so on. When the bill was introduced, not in the Senate but elsewhere, attention was called to this view of the subject, and all parts of the act offensive to such objections were eliminated; and as the bill comes now to the Senate on the report of the Committee on Commerce, I think no Senator will find in such direction reasons for exception to it.

If I am right in that, I submit that there is every reason why prompt consideration should be given to a measure of this sort, and I hope that the motion of the Senator from Georgia will prevail, and indeed I should expect that he might get unanimous consent to take up a bill which has passed the House of Representatives, which comes now with two amendments as mere safeguards, and to which I think on consideration not a single member of the Senate will object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia, upon which he has called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHYTE. I hope the Senator from Georgia will withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORDON. I am very much disposed to do so; but if I withdraw this motion and the Colorado bill should lead to discussion the day will be exhausted.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me suggest to the Senator from Georgia if he will allow me—and I am sure my friend from Colorado will acquiesce to save time—that he see whether any Senator will now object to considering this bill as he has explained it. My impression is it will lead to no debate, and he can get action upon it at once and get it out of the way of my friend from Colorado sooner than in any other mode.

Mr. SARGENT. The withdrawal of the objection by the Senator from Maryland leaves at the head of the Calendar, if we proceed no further on that to-night, the bill of the Senator from Colorado, with which I think he will be satisfied. We can then take up by unanimous consent the bill referred to by the Senator from Georgia and dispose of it, and when we return to the Calendar the first bill in order will be the Colorado timber bill. With that understanding, I think everybody will be satisfied.

Mr. GORDON. Then I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, and I think if the Chair will again submit the question we shall have a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3739) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was to insert after the words "United States," in line 10 of section 1, the words "into or through the jurisdiction of which said vessel or vehicle may pass, or to which it is destined;" as as to make the section read:

That no vessel or vehicle coming from any foreign port or country where any contagious or infectious disease may exist, and no vessel or vehicle conveying any person or persons, merchandise, or animals, affected with any infectious or contagious disease, shall enter any port of the United States or pass the boundary line between the United States and any foreign country, contrary to the quarantine laws of any one of said United States, into or through the jurisdiction of which said vessel or vehicle may pass, or to which it is destined, or except in the manner and subject to the regulations to be prescribed as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, section 2, to strike out "inform" and insert "give information thereof to;" and in line 10, after the word "service," to strike out the word "thereof;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That whenever any infectious or contagious disease shall appear in any foreign port or country, and whenever any vessel shall leave any infected foreign port, or, having on board goods or passengers coming from any place or district infected with cholera or yellow fever, shall leave any foreign port, bound for any port in the United States, the consular officer, or other representative of the United States at or nearest such foreign port, shall immediately give information thereof to the supervising surgeon-general of the marine hospital service, and shall report to him the name, the date of departure, and the port of destination of such vessel; and shall also make the same report to the health officer of the port of destination in the United States; and the consular officers of the United States shall make weekly reports to him of the sanitary condition of the ports at which they are respectively stationed; and the said surgeon-general of the marine hospital service shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be charged with the execution of the provisions of this act, and shall frame all needful rules and regulations for that purpose, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President; but such rules and regulations shall not conflict with or impair any sanitary or quarantine laws or regulations of any State or municipal authorities now existing, or which may hereafter be enacted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3102) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriations for detecting trespass on the public lands and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes; that it still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7 and 8, insisted on by the Senate, and agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MILTON J. DURHAM of Kentucky, Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. JOHN H. BAKER of Indiana managers at the further conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 536) for the relief of W. C. Snyder, of Illinois;
A bill (H. R. No. 2291) for the relief of Thomas W. Collier; and
A bill (H. R. No. 3712) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Kansas, in the State of Missouri.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4394) to prohibit the coinage of the twenty-cent piece of silver; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1080) authorizing the issue of passports free to colored citizens going to Brazil;
A bill (H. R. No. 536) for the relief of W. C. Snyder, of Illinois;
A bill (H. R. No. 2291) for the relief of Thomas W. Collier; and
A bill (H. R. No. 3712) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Kansas, in the State of Missouri.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the report of the Committee on Railroads to accompany the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad and by a readjustment of the grants without increasing the appropriation to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad; which was ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. OGLESBY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 802) to establish post-routes in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4394) to prohibit the coinage of the twenty-cent piece of silver was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

TIMBER IN COLORADO, NEVADA, AND TERRITORIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The consideration of the Calendar will now be resumed; and the bill (S. No. 20) authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, objection to its consideration having been withdrawn.

The Committee on Public Lands reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all citizens of the United States and other persons, bona fide residents of the States of Colorado, California, or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, and all other mineral districts of the United States, shall be, and are hereby, authorized and permitted to fell and remove, for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, any timber or other trees growing or being on the public lands, said lands being mineral, and not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States, except for mineral entry, in either of said States, Territories, or districts of which such citizens or persons may be at the time bona fide residents, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the undergrowth growing upon such lands: Provided, That no timber shall be cut or felled in the mountain regions within three miles of the upper line of the timber commonly known as the "timber line."

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the register and the receiver of any local land office in whose district any mineral land may be situated to ascertain from time to time whether any timber is being cut or used upon any of such lands, except for the purposes authorized by this act, within their respective land districts; and, if so, they shall immediately notify the Commissioner of the General Land Office of that fact; and all necessary expenses incurred in making such proper examinations shall be paid and allowed such register and receiver in making up their next quarterly accounts.

Sec. 3. Any person or persons who shall violate the provisions of this act, or any rules and regulations in pursuance thereof made by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, and to which may be added imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move to strike out the proviso commencing in line 17 of the first section, in these words:

Provided, That no timber shall be cut or felled in the mountain regions within three miles of the upper line of the timber commonly known as the "timber line."

The reason for my amendment is that three-fourths of all the mines are within three miles of the timber line and most of them above the timber line.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit to the Senator whether there ought not to be some limit, say one mile or two miles.

Mr. CHAFFEE. There ought not to be a limit, because, as I said before, the mines are generally above the timber line.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. This bill is very well calculated indeed for Colorado and New Mexico, where timber is sparse; but where, as in California and Oregon, the latter of which, by the way, is not mentioned in the bill, the timber is thicker, the bill is inadequate to deal with the subject, and there is pending, reported from the Committee on Public Lands, another bill applying to California, Oregon, and Nevada. I do not wish to prejudice that bill by the mention of California in this. This would be a very partial and insufficient relief to our people who want to buy the land of the Government; and therefore I move, so as not to prejudice that legislation and not to concede that this bill adequately covers the subject in California, to strike out the word "California" in line 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, to strike out "California."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SARGENT. The other bill to which I referred is in the order of business No. 269. I ask that it may now be considered in connection with the bill just passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think we had better go on with the Calendar regularly.

Mr. SARGENT. The bills relate to the same subject-matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think it unjust to other bills.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well, I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next case on the Calendar will be reported.

LAND SCRIP.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 109) defining the manner in which certain land scrip may be assigned and located or applied by actual settlers, and providing for the issue of patents in the name of the locator or his legal representatives.

Mr. PLUMB. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CATHARINE AND SOPHIA GERMAIN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1679) for the relief of Catharine and Sophia Germain; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to reserve from that portion of annuities due, or to become due, to Cheyenne Indians the sum of $2,500 for Catharine Germain, aged eighteen years, and $2,500 for Sophia Germain, aged thirteen years, two white children, who were captured in Kansas by the Cheyennes while en route from Georgia to Colorado, and cause the same to be placed to the credit of Catharine and Sophia Germain, on the books of the Treasury of the United States, to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and to use from time to time the income from the same in such manner as he may deem expedient for their maintenance, education, and support until they attain the age of twenty-one years, when the principal and all unexpended interest shall be paid to them.

The Committee on Indian Affairs reported the bill with an amendment, after the word "if," in line 17, to insert "before attaining the age of twenty-one years;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That if, before attaining the age of twenty-one years, either said Catharine Germain or Sophia Germain should die without issue, the whole sum due the decedent shall revert to the survivor; and should both die without issue, the whole sum shall revert to the United States; but if either said Catharine Germain or Sophia Germain, or both, have lawful issue, then, at the death of either parent, the amount due to her in her own right, or which she may have inherited, shall become the inheritance of her own issue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask if we have not passed already at least one bill for the relief of these two persons? The name appears to me to be familiar.

Mr. ALLISON. We have passed a bill for two sisters of Catharine and Sophia, and this identical bill passed the Senate a year or two ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the bill that we passed?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it was in 1873; I do not remember exactly. But this bill passed the Senate in 1876. Indeed it passed both Houses at the close of the last session of Congress, but in the hurry it was not enrolled in time to receive the signature of the President. The Committee on Indian Affairs were unanimous that the bill ought to pass. This does not apply to the two children already provided for by another act of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did we not provide for the other children at the same time?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not able to answer that question except that these two children were omitted. I think I was not in charge of the matter when the other bill was passed. It passed in 1873 at the tail end of an appropriation bill perhaps.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is no great recommendation to my mind that a bill in the last hours of a session passed both Houses of Congress. It rather raises a presumption that nobody paid any attention to it. According to my recollection, we went through this Germain business once.

Mr. ALLISON. Thoroughly, and provided for two of the children. The Senator will remember that these children were captured under circumstances of the most brutal atrocity by the Cheyenne Indians and were retained by them for many months, the father and mother both being killed and all their property destroyed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President; but the thing that strikes me with astonishment at this moment is that if the family were captured we provided for two members of the captured persons and left out the other two. And that leads me to inquire of the Senator as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs how this has happened. I should like to find the act to see whether these are the same persons or some others.

Mr. ALLISON. If they are the same persons, the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill lay aside for a little while.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to its going aside temporarily. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

PATENTS TO POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 766) to legalize patents issued to members of the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. That bill is in charge of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] I do not remember the circumstances. I think it had better be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be laid aside for the present.

THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 512) in relation to the Pacific Railroads.

Mr. ALLISON. That has been disposed of.

Mr. SARGENT. It ought to be indefinitely postponed. I make that motion.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to know what bill this is. We cannot hear a word of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the Pacific Railroad funding bill, reported by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. MATTHEWS.]

Mr. SARGENT. Is the Senator from Tennessee satisfied?

The motion to indefinitely postpone was agreed to.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) supplemental to a joint resolution in relation to the international industrial exposition to be held in Paris in 1878, reported from the Committee on Appropriations adversely.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that that be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN S. MILLER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 535) for the relief of the executors of the estate of John S. Miller, deceased; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill directs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to credit Barbara Miller, John S. Miller, and William H. Miller, executors of the estate of John S. Miller, deceased, with the amount assessed against them for deficiency in the production of spirits at their distillery at Sterling, during the months of April, May, and June, 1876, the assessments being based upon an excessive estimate of the producing capacity of their distillery, forced upon the executors over their protest, and in opposition to the written opinion of the collector making the survey.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Is there a written report?

Mr. ALLISON. This is a bill for the relief of the executors of John S. Miller, deceased—

Mr. OGLESBY. The case is all right.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The parties are residents of Illinois. That is sufficient.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill received the unanimous assent of the Committee on Finance. There is a letter on file from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue saying this ought to be done. If any Senator desires that I should explain the bill in detail, I shall be glad to do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read, and then I should be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. The papers can be sent for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the reading of the report and accompanying papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there is no report.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommending this measure. There is no difficulty in the case, as Senators will see from a moment's explanation. There was a survey of this distillery and afterward a resurvey ordered by Commissioner Pratt, the distillery being known as one that operates under the seventy-two-hour rule. Under the re-examination ordered by Commissioner Pratt these distillers objected to the measurement made under that examination, but having on hand some two or three thousand head of cattle they were compelled to run their distillery or else sustain great loss and violate some contract. They ran it in that way some two months and then shut down. In the mean time they appealed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for relief. That relief could not be given without an act of Congress. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommends that these taxes be remitted to them. That is all there is in the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the letter of the Commissioner read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, December 9, 1876.

SIR: Your letter of the 8th instant, forwarding the petition of Barbara Miller and others, and a copy of H. R. No. 4119, introduced by Hon. H. C. BURCHARD, entitled "A bill for the relief of Barbara Miller, John S. Miller, and William H. Miller," has been received.

I have read the petition and find that the matters therein stated are substantially true.

The distillery of the petitioners has been and now is being operated upon a fermenting period of seventy-two hours. The surveyed producing capacity had been fixed at fourteen quarts of spirits to the bushel, and the distillery had been operated for a considerable length of time under that arrangement.

On the 10th day of February, 1876, a new survey was made of this distillery under orders from this office, and the producing capacity was increased to sixteen quarts per bushel upon the same fermenting period and the petitioners continued operating the distillery under that survey. The acceptance of the survey fixed their liability under the law. From sworn statements on file in this office I am satisfied that the petitioners would not have accepted the survey, but for the reason that they had undertaken to feed a large number of cattle, and would have been liable for heavy damages had they failed to furnish the necessary slop from their distillery for that purpose.

The assessments mentioned in the petition for the months of April and May, 1876, for a deficiency in production, are for $10,388.44, and for the month of June, 1876, the sum of $1,728.66, amounting in all to $12,117.10. To abate these assessments the petitioners filed the usual applications, and upon a thorough investigation of the subject, I became satisfied that it was impossible for any distillery to be run upon a fermenting period of seventy-two hours with the surveyed capacity of sixteen quarts to the bushel, so as to make a sufficient amount of spirits to avoid a deficiency assessment, and I also became satisfied, as heretofore stated, that the petitioners accepted the survey unwillingly, and because of their liability to damages in the event they failed to furnish slop for a large number of cattle.

An investigation of these cases led me to adopt the rule of fixing the producing capacity at fifteen quarts to the bushel of all distilleries using corn where they preferred a fermenting period of seventy-two hours. Distilleries working upon a fermenting period of forty-eight hours are surveyed upon a producing capacity of sixteen quarts to the bushel. This difference of a reduction of one quart at distilleries fermenting in seventy-two hours places them about upon an equal footing with distilleries surveyed at sixteen quarts with a fermenting period of forty-eight hours.

Having become satisfied that the surveyed capacity of the petitioners' distillery as accepted by them was in excess of what was a reasonable production for said distillery, but having no authority in law to abate a tax legally assessed, I came to the conclusion that their case was one that merited relief by legislation, and, as stated in said petition, I authorized the collector of their district to suspend the collection of the tax for a period of six months to enable the petitioners to appeal to Congress for relief. I am satisfied that they paid the taxes required by law upon the spirits produced by them, and the spirits so produced were sufficient in amount to protect them from an assessment for deficiency had the survey been made upon the basis of fifteen instead of sixteen quarts to the bushel.

I have therefore the honor to recommend the passage of the act in question.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

FRANK C. HOPKINS, Esq.,
Clerk Committee of Ways and Means,
House of Representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL H. KELLY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 394) to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry. It directs the Secretary of War to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly, deceased, upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, to show that he enlisted December 1, 1861, for three years, and was captured by the enemy, and died in prison, at Richmond, Virginia, while a prisoner, November —, 1863.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report, Mr. President.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. RANDOLPH on the 12th of March:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 394) to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry, together with the petition of Dillah Kelly, widow of Daniel H. Kelly, praying for the relief provided by the bill, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

This case was fully examined by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Forty-fourth Congress, first session, and a report made thereon by Mr. Logan, then chairman, as follows:

"Mr. Logan submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. No. 685:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Dillah Kelly, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report, which was submitted in the Forty-third Congress to the same petition, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill:

"[Senate report No. 378.—Forty-third Congress, first session.]

"May 22, 1874, ordered to be printed.

"Mr. Logan submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. No. 841:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom the petition of Dillah Kelly was referred, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

"This is the petition of Dillah Kelly, who claims to be the widow of Daniel H. Kelly, deceased, late a private of Company F, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteers. The evidence shows that deceased enlisted in the military service of the United States about December 1, 1861, at Concho's Gap, Tennessee, under Captain David Fry; that while on their way in Lee County, Virginia, the command was attacked by a large force of rebels, and after a hard fight, continuing from two o'clock till dark, the deceased, the captain, and several others were taken prisoners. The recruiting papers were in the hands of deceased, who had been made orderly sergeant, and, by direction of Captain Fry, were destroyed the night after their capture, on which account no return was ever made of the enlistment of deceased. The deceased was sent to the rebel prison at Richmond, where he died.

"The facts in this case are testified to by Captain Fry and one Thomas Davis, both of whom were taken prisoners with deceased. The particulars are stated minutely, and so clearly as to satisfy the committee of their truthfulness; and the signature of Captain Fry is verified by the War Department.

"The committee, being fully satisfied of the justness of this claim, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill."

A careful examination of the record and proofs filed in this case show that the favorable report heretofore made by Mr. Logan, quoted above, was proper and just, and that the relief sought ought to be granted.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at five o'clock and twenty-one minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 18, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

IMMIGRATION TAX.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to present joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York on the subject of the immigration tax and to have them referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. O'NEILL. I suppose that motions of this kind do not come in so as to interfere with the right to proceed to the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's remedy is to demand the regular order, if he does not wish anything to come before the regular order of business.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not wish to do that; I do not wish to be discourteous to other members, but I want to know if anything can prevent the unfinished business from coming up.

The SPEAKER. These requests are by unanimous consent, and do not interfere with the regular order of business.

The resolutions presented by Mr. Cox, of New York, were read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. They are as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK.

IN ASSEMBLY, Albany, April 5, 1878.

Resolved, (if the senate concur.) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States adverse to the right of the States to pass laws imposing per capita tax upon immigrants to provide for their support in cases of poverty or sickness, to urge upon Congress the necessity of some provision by Federal law to relieve this State from the burdens of a tax which it has been declared this State cannot pass in its own right without a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved. That a copy of this resolution, signed by the presiding officers of the Legislature, be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

By order:

J. W. HUSTED, Speaker.
EDWARD M. JOHNSON, Clerk.

IN SENATE, April 5, 1878.

Concurred in.
By order:

WILLIAM DORSHEIMER, President.
JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

ROBERT HABERSHAM ET AL.

Mr. HARTRIDGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4401) for the relief of Robert Habersham, George Patten, and John L. Villalonga, or their executors or administrators; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AMOS L. RHOADES.

Mr. KILLINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4402) granting a pension to Amos L. Rhoades; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF LAFOURCHE BAYOU.

Mr. ACKLEN by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4403) making an appropriation for the removal of the obstructions in Bayou Lafourche, in the State of Louisiana, and for the improvement of the navigation in said bayou; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF OBSTRUCTIONS IN CALCASIEU RIVER.

Mr. ACKLEN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4404) making an appropriation to provide additional means to complete the work of removing the obstructions to navigation in the Calcasieu River, in the State of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL B. BIRD.

Mr. ACKLEN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4405) for the relief of Samuel B. Bird, of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

J. H. SYPHER.

Mr. ACKLEN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4406) for the relief of J. H. Sypher, of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Elections, and ordered to be printed.

ANDREW IVORY.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4407) for the relief of Andrew Ivory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

T. H. CARPENTER.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4408) to restore the name of T. H. Carpenter to the Army and place him on the retired list; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL MILLER.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4409) granting a pension to Daniel Miller for the loss of a leg in driving an ambulance full of wounded soldiers from Alexandria to Washington March 4, 1864; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY LOHMAX.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4410) granting a pension to Henry Lohmax; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM BOWIE.

Mr. STARIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4411) granting a pension to William Bowie; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR EVENING SESSION.

Mr. BEEBE. I ask unanimous consent that the session of this evening be set apart for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, to which there is not a single objection.

The SPEAKER. The session of this evening has already been assigned for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. BEEBE. I understand that the Committee on Invalid Pensions are not ready.

Several MEMBERS. They will be.

The SPEAKER. The Calendar is ready. The Chair is not able to say whether the committee are ready.

Mr. JOYCE. The committee will be ready.

Mr. HANNA. I suggest that to-night, if there be additional time after all the pension bills are considered, the Committee of the Whole may consider other bills to which there is not a single objection.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I object.

WORKS OF ART, ETC., IMPORTED FOR EXHIBITION.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to report from the Committee of Ways and Means and have put on its passage now a bill to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for the encouragement of arts or sciences, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information, after which there will be opportunity for objection to its consideration.

The bill was read. It provides that all works of art, collections in illustration of the progress of the arts, science, or manufactures, photographs, works in terra cotta, parian, pottery, or porcelain, and artistic copies of antiques in metal or other material, imported in good faith for permanent exhibition at a fixed place by any society or institution established for the encouragement of the arts or sciences, and not intended for sale, and all like articles imported in good faith by any society or association for the purpose of erecting a public monument, and not for sale, shall be admitted free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The second section provides that all articles described in this act imported for and exhibited at the late international exhibition, upon which duties have been paid at the passage of this act, may be included within its provisions.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to know whether the things mentioned in this bill are the products of "pauper labor." If so I think I must object.

Mr. KELLEY. I cannot say. In submitting this bill, I am the organ of the Treasury Department and the Committee of Ways and Means. I desire that the gentleman from Georgia on my left [Mr. STEPHENS] may be heard in answer to the gentleman's question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will be heard for a moment before the regular order is demanded.

Mr. COX, of New York. Certainly a free-trade bill coming from Pennsylvania ought to be considered.

Mr. KELLEY. I think so.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] insist upon the call for the regular order?

Mr. REAGAN. I do.

Subsequently, Mr. REAGAN withdrew the call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the demand for the regular order, the effect of which was to prevent the consideration of the bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania from the Committee of Ways and Means. Is there further objection?

Mr. DURHAM. If there is going to be debate about it, I must object.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I want to say only three words.

Mr. DURHAM. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The right to object will be reserved until the gentleman from Georgia has made his statement.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as I know, has been prepared with a great deal of care. It is designed to remedy just such a state of things as occurred the other day with regard to the Society of St. George, in Philadelphia, where we paid back duties that had been paid on the importation of articles of art.

This bill has been prepared with the advice and consent of the Treasury Department. It requires a great deal of care to prepare bills of this kind. This has the sanction of that Department, and I trust the House will pass it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Yes, sir; I object.

Mr. DURHAM. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky on the conference report.

Mr. DURHAM. I will yield to my colleague on the committee from Georgia to explain in reference to the postal-car service.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to know whether the morning hour is not the first business this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. The regular order of business is being proceeded with, which is the conference report coming over from yesterday.

TEMPORARY CLERKS.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is almost useless for me, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. PAGE. I desire to know if after this matter is disposed of the morning hour will then be in order.

The SPEAKER. It will not, but the unfinished business which was yesterday interrupted by a higher question of privilege; that is, the conference report which is now before the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been before the House on previous occasions in conference reports, and it is almost useless for me to add anything to what I have already stated in regard to it. In the first conference the result of the examination of the papers demonstrated to everybody that the appropriation of $20,000 was based on an estimate for six months' service, three months and more of which had already expired, and therefore it is patent the claim is unfounded on the part of the conferees of the Senate that the adjustment of this sum to $10,000 is a concession of one-half. One-half of the time having expired already, it amounts as everybody will see to no concession at all, but, on the contrary, it is simply the allowance of the full amount of the estimate.

The committee feel it to be their duty, so far as the postal or any other service of the Government is concerned, the executive departments should follow legislation, and not precipitate or to drag it. The committee found in reference to this very postal-car service that during the last fiscal year, notwithstanding the withdrawal of these facilities on some of the lines, there had been an increase of somewhere in the neighborhood of five thousand miles per annum; that in the star service, while there had been an increase in the number of miles of railway transportation, in transportation there had been only about four thousand; so that this special service in reference to certain trunk lines has been pressed forward in this manner beyond the whole star service throughout the United States.

The committee felt it was the bounden duty of this House in some measure to restrain it. They were willing to make some concession to the Senate, as has been stated by my colleague on the committee, [Mr. DURHAM,] which I will not repeat. There would have been an agreement on the part of the conferees of the two Houses in relation to this matter but for disagreement in reference to other matters. I think it likely we shall be able to agree with the Senate conferees.

Mr. DURHAM. Does the gentleman from Ohio want to be heard?

Mr. FOSTER. I do.

Mr. DURHAM. How much time?

Mr. FOSTER. Five minutes.

Mr. DURHAM. I will yield ten minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. The committees of conference on this bill, I think, have had three sessions, perhaps only two; but this is the third report. They have disagreed, it seems, on two propositions only, one the forty-thousand-dollar amendment of the Senate for collectors, &c., and the other the twenty-thousand-dollar amendment of the Senate for railway post-office clerks. On that I understand the Senate is willing to reduce the sum to $10,000 and the House is willing to concede $5,000.

First, then, Mr. Speaker, in relation to $40,000 for collectors. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM,] although usually able, possessing a judicial mind, and eminently fair, seems unable in this case to comprehend the facts or the situation, and he alone of all the gentlemen who have considered it seems to maintain his position. He is exactly like that juryman who was associated with eleven contrary fellows. [Laughter.] Now the $40,000 is for collectors. It is not for special agents but for collectors, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue tells the House he needs the $40,000 for the proper conduct of his office, and that if we do not give it to him he does not propose to make a deficiency.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNNELL. There seems to be some conflict between the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Kentucky on that point. Will the gentleman read from the report of the Commissioner wherein he asks for that money? You say it is for the collectors.

Mr. FOSTER. It is for the collectors.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman from Kentucky says it is not.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to show that before I get through, and the gentleman from Kentucky will not dispute what I say.

The Commissioner asked, at the beginning of the session, for $40,000 for collectors. He asked for $20,000 for special agents, and we gave it to him. He asked for $150,000 for gaugers and storekeepers. Now, the confusion of the gentleman from Kentucky seems to arise in this: that the $40,000, he contends, is for special agents and not for collectors. But the Commissioner in every communication he has made to us has stated that the $40,000 is for collectors, "and so forth." And the gentleman seemed to lay great stress on the words "and so forth." The item reads:

For salaries and expenses of collectors, which includes the pay of deputy collectors and clerks, house rent, fuel, lights, and advertising.

That is what he means by "and so forth." Then another appropriation is:

For salaries and expenses of agents, surveyors, gaugers, storekeepers, and miscellaneous expenses.

The third is:

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws.

Mr. BLOUNT. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. FOSTER. From the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. These are three specific objects for which he has asked appropriations from Congress. For the two first, he says, "I will get along without the money if you do not give it to me; but it is worth thousands of dollars to the country to give it to me." The gentleman from Kentucky did not hesitate to give him the $20,000 for special agents; but he refuses to give him the $40,000 which he now contends is for the same purpose.

Mr. DURHAM. I want to correct my friend; for I did object to it very seriously, but yielded to the majority as regards the $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER. You did not object to it on the floor.

Mr. DURHAM. I did not, because I was acting under the instructions of the committee, and I will always do that.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not wish to do the gentleman any injustice. But he is wholly mistaken in the object and purpose of this $40,000. Now it remains for this House to say whether it is wise to give this office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue this $40,000 or not. He does not claim it upon the ground of a deficiency. For he tells us distinctly that he will manage his office with the money we have given him; but if we will give him $40,000 more he will turn large sums into the Treasury for it. Can this House afford to refuse to give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue this money upon such a statement as he has made to us?

Now it has nothing to do with "moonshiners." The gentleman voted for the "moonshiner" appropriation. He voted for these gentlemen who he says run around over the country picking up people at night who are not guilty. He voted for that proposition. But this is another and a distinct proposition. True, it is to prevent fraud, because the Commissioner needs this force to properly collect the whisky and tobacco taxes.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, after having this appropriation in the conference committee two or three times, it is time that it was ended. Let this House say now whether it will or will not give this $40,000 to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

On the other question there is $5,000 between the committee, and I presume they can fix that. If the House will say one way or the other I doubt not that will settle it.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to say just three words in response—

Mr. HALE. Will my colleague on the committee give me a few minutes?

Mr. DURHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. I have been looking over, Mr. Speaker, the appropriations for the internal revenue, and it seems to me that the gentleman from Kentucky is under a clear mistake as to the appropriation that is asked for here. There are three kinds of appropriation: first for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal revenue laws; second, for salaries and expenses of collectors; third, for salaries and expenses of gaugers, &c.

Now, the law does not allow any appropriation made for one class to be diverted to another. You cannot divert anything that is given for salaries and expenses, which is a distinctive appropriation, to pay for depredations or for special agents. And the committee knows that as well as any officer in the Government. Now the appropriation asked for is in this language:

For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue.

It seems to me that the gentleman from Kentucky, a very careful man on appropriations, has been misled by the letter which he has read from the Department—the letter which refers to this appropriation as enabling the Department to make the service more efficient and to collect the revenue better—and from that letter he has reasoned that the money is to be spent for special agents. Now the appropriation for collectors and the expenses of collectors is broad enough to cover the letter from the Department which the gentleman from Kentucky has read, and does not involve in it, as it seems to me, any idea that this is to be spent for special agents—for the moonshine hunters—but simply for the general expenses of the collection officers in order to make the service more efficient. I think the gentleman's mistake lies there.

Mr. DURHAM. Now, if my friend had referred to what had gone into the public prints, and I want to be careful what I say upon this subject, he would know that the argument had been made that this is a controversy between "moonshiners" and regular distillers.

Mr. HALE. Allow me to say that I have read every word of the debate in the Senate and have looked up the appropriations in regard to this service, but I am too hoarse this morning and cannot go into a discussion of the question as I would gladly do.

Mr. DURHAM. My friend from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] my colleague on the committee, read from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Why did he not refer to his letter of the 31st day of October and to his telegram of the 12th day of April? In his letter of the 31st day of October, asking for this appropriation, he uses this language:

I desire to call your attention especially to two items recommended to be appropriated for deficiencies in the internal-revenue service, to wit, $40,000 on account of salaries and expenses of collectors.

Then he goes on further and says:

The allowances to collectors that have been recommended to your approval have not created a deficiency nor will it create a deficiency in the appropriation, but the needs of the service are so urgent that I deem it for the best interests of the Government that this appropriation shall be made. It is intended merely for the purpose of suppressing frauds in the manufacture and sale of whisky and tobacco.

Now that is not the duty of the collectors.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not?

Mr. DURHAM. The duty of the collector is to collect the duties, but the Commissioner places a stress upon it that this appropriation is needed for a particular purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. The Revised Statutes require the collectors to prevent frauds.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand that, but the Commissioner places it upon the ground that he needs detectives.

Mr. FOSTER. It is just as much the duty of the collector to suppress fraud as to collect the revenue.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand that. But he does not place his request for this appropriation upon the ground that it is for collectors. He says in his dispatch to Mr. WINDOM:

In reply to your dispatch asking information as to the $40,000 for collectors, &c., I have to say that the present appropriation is virtually exhausted—

There is no deficiency there—no more of it being available for the employment of deputy collectors for the enforcement of the law against those engaged in the illicit manufacture of spirits and tobacco.

Why did he not say so in his report?

I hold in my hand the Blue Book. There is more in this thing of deputy collectors than gentlemen on both sides of the House think. I sat down this morning and made a few figures on the subject, and I do not wonder that some gentlemen squirm when you talk about deputy collectors in some districts. If you will turn to the sixty-ninth page of the Blue Book you will find the number of collectors there laid down, and under the law of the last Congress they have been reduced. Let me read some of them. For instance, I will take the gentleman's own State, Ohio: Ohio has nine collectors and fifty-four deputy collectors.

Mr. FOSTER. And that is not enough.

Mr. DURHAM. I know it is not in the gentleman's estimation. Perhaps he would have one in every town to electioneer for him. Perhaps that is what you would do, and perhaps I ought to let the cat out of the wallet a little and say that part of the object of this appropriation is to have deputy collectors scattered throughout the country to electioneer for members of Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman has no right to say that; he does injustice to himself in saying so.

Mr. DURHAM. I think so; I think that is the object of it.

Mr. FOSTER. On what authority does the gentleman make that assertion?

Mr. DURHAM. Because I am credibly informed that many of them do electioneer. This number is not necessary for the purpose of collecting the revenue. Take New York; it has twelve collection districts and one hundred and thirteen deputy collectors. The cost of your regular collector's force amounts to about $371,315 a year and your deputy collector's force costs about $1,024,280. I cannot give you the total number of deputy collectors employed throughout the United States, but there is a host of them.

I take these figures from the Blue Book. In my own State there are but six collection districts and there are thirty-nine deputy collectors. Iowa has four collectors and eighteen deputy collectors.

Tennessee has three collection districts and twenty-two deputy collectors; and, as I have said before, this is rather expensive.

We pay about $371,315 for collectors proper and for deputy collectors, &c., about $1,024,280; yet that does not account for the $1,500,000 appropriated by the act of last Congress.

Mr. PRICE. Does the gentleman think that eighteen deputy collectors are too many for a State that is over three hundred miles in length and two hundred in breadth?

Mr. DURHAM. I do.

Mr. PRICE. I only wanted your opinion. Some of us think very differently.

Mr. DURHAM. What has a man who owes revenue to do but to go to the collector and pay it? That is his duty under the law.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman certainly knows that there have to be deputy collectors in certain localities.

Mr. DURHAM. Why?

Mr. PRICE. When you have a territory three hundred miles in length and two hundred miles in width you cannot distribute deputy collectors so as to have them very close together?

Mr. DURHAM. Why is it necessary?

Mr. PRICE. Simply because you cannot cover the territory otherwise. And under the civil-service rules these deputies are not allowed to electioneer, you know.

Mr. DURHAM. No, I suppose not. Now, Mr. Speaker, when you look at the Blue Book you find that some of these deputy collectors receive the enormous sum of $100 annually. There is one in my town, I see, that receives this amount. Some receive $200, and from that up to $1,400. A few, I believe, get as much as $2,500 a year.

I do insist that the gentlemen have not responded to the argument I made upon the law of last Congress when we appropriated $1,800,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to make a reduction of 5 per cent. Instead of doing that, it will be found that, adding this appropriation of $40,000, there has been an addition of 5 per cent.

I now demand the previous question upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield to me a few moments?

Mr. DURHAM. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised at the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM.] Yesterday he deprecated bringing politics into this question, but to-day he does so himself. Now, since it has come to this, I wish to say that in our committee-room, upon the consideration of an appropriation for special agents, a prominent gentleman of his own politics (I will not say it was the gentleman himself) said, "I object to it because we do not appoint the agents." That is the objection that was made.

Now there are fifty-four special agents in Ohio. That is one for every fifty thousand people. It is one for five hundred grog-shops. Is that too much? I say to the gentleman in all candor that, so far as my personal knowledge goes, we have not a sufficient number of these deputy collectors, and that an increase of their number would increase largely the revenues.

One other remark. The gentleman admits that he has "moonshiners" in his own district. He is the advocate of "moonshining" by his course on this floor. He is to-day, if I understand his course aright, bidding for the votes of the "moonshiners" in his district, and is therefore opposing appropriations for putting them down. That is all that I can make out of it.

Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman has said that the object of this appropriation is not to stop "moonshining." That is the consistency of his argument.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is making a speech for the "moonshiners" and not for this House. I say it is within the knowledge of every candid man here that the force of deputy collectors all over this country has been reduced to the lowest possible minimum. I believe, as I believe in my existence, that an increase of this force would largely increase the revenues of the country.

We have a Commissioner who is above suspicion. He has offered to throw open all his books to the gentleman from Kentucky, to exhibit every item of expenditure. He has assured us that this appropriation is necessary for the efficiency of the service. Now, when a tried and trustworthy officer like this one says to us, "I can increase the revenues of the Government largely if you will give me this money," it is for the House to say whether he shall have it or not.

Mr. DURHAM. I am very sorry my friend from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] has got "off his eggs" this morning. He seems to make a personal attack upon me.

Mr. FOSTER. What did you do upon me?

Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman charges that I am defending "moonshiners." I hurl back the charge in the teeth of the gentleman as not true.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh! that is good plantation manners. We have had all we want of that.

Mr. DURHAM. When the gentleman learns manners himself, I will observe them.

Mr. FOSTER. I warn the gentleman that plantation manners are "played out" here.

Mr. DURHAM. I call the gentleman to order. Whenever he charges me with wishing to protect "moonshiners," or anybody else who is violating the law, I say it is not true. But, at the same time, I say I will never put into the hands of any officer of our Departments money to be used for electioneering purposes or for the purpose of sending around midnight marauders to drag honest men from their beds, take them before the courts, and rob them of their last dollar. The gentleman from Ohio has no right to say that I am defending "moonshiners." The gentleman's own argument that this appropriation was not for the purpose of suppressing such frauds upon the revenue should have stopped him from making such a charge upon me. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. DURHAM. Will the Chair please state the effect of this vote?

The SPEAKER. The effect of adopting the report of the committee of conference will be to bring the two Houses to an agreement except on the seventh and eighth amendments; and the Chair presumes that if the report be adopted the gentleman from Kentucky will then ask for a further conference with the Senate.

Mr. DURHAM. That is my intention.

The SPEAKER. Pending which the Chair has notice that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] will move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. SAMPSON. Will not the motion to recede take precedence?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that the effect of adopting this report will be to bring the two Houses to an agreement on this bill, except as to the seventh and eighth amendments.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not object to that.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DURHAM. I now move for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses which remain unadjusted.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] gave notice some days ago he would move to recede and agree to the amendments of the Senate disagreed to by the House.

Mr. DURHAM. Does the gentleman from Iowa intend to include both amendments?

Mr. SAMPSON. I do.

Mr. DURHAM. What will be the effect of that motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same. If that motion be agreed to it will pass the bill.

Mr. SAMPSON. I ask for a division of the vote on the two amendments.

The SPEAKER. They will be reported separately.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment numbered 7: For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, $40,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding from the disagreement of the House to that amendment of the Senate and agreeing to the same.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 101.

So the House refused to recede.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the action of the House is to insist upon its disagreement to that Senate amendment.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment numbered 8: For railway mail agents and postal clerks, $20,000.

Mr. SAMPSON. I move to recede from our disagreement to that amendment. I understand the conferees have agreed to that already.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not entirely.

Mr. SAMPSON. I believe there is a prospect of an agreement.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 98.

Mr. BLOUNT demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DURHAM and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 111.

Mr. CONGER. As this is on the post-office appropriation bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 117, nays 125, not voting 49; as follows:

Mr. LYNDE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. TURNER. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. MCGOWAN. I do not know what his sentiments are in regard to this amendment, but as it seems to be regarded as a political question I withhold my vote, Mr. MCGOWAN not being present.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. QUINN.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague, Mr. FREEMAN, is paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. If Mr. FREEMAN were here he would vote "ay."

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to recede from its disagreement; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DURHAM. I now move that the House agree to the confer-once asked for on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 536) for the relief of W. C. Snyder, of Illinois;

An act (H. R. No. 2291) for the relief of Thomas W. Collier; and

An act (H. R. No. 3712) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Kansas, in the State of Missouri.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] asks unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CONGER. I think we had better go on with the regular business.

Mr. MONROE. This is a little matter—

Mr. CONGER. There will be time for the consideration of the "little matter" after we settle the question of final adjournment. Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. MONROE. At two o'clock, as I understand, another matter comes up which consumes the rest of the day. I desire permission to say to my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that this is a matter to which I think unanimous consent would be given so soon as it is stated.

Mr. CONGER. If it is so unimportant it need not disturb the regular business of the House.

Mr. MONROE. On the contrary, although a little matter, it is so important and useful I think every member will approve it the moment it is explained.

Mr. CONGER. Let us go on with the regular business.

Several members called for the regular order.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] to reconsider the vote by which the House on yesterday refused to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means the resolution of the Senate fixing the time for the final adjournment of this session of Congress, as follows:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday, June 10, 1878, at twelve o'clock noon.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 125, not voting 52; as follows:

Mr. FORT. My colleague from Illinois, Mr. BOYD, is detained in his room by sickness. If he were here he would vote "ay," being in favor of an early adjournment.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleagues from Illinois, Mr. TIPTON and Mr. TOWNSEND, are paired. Mr. TIPTON would vote "ay."

Mr. COBB. My colleague from Indiana, Mr. HAMILTON, is confined to bed by sickness. If he were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. TURNER. I am paired with Mr. MCGOWAN, of Michigan. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. FREEMAN, is paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. If present, Mr. FREEMAN would vote "ay" and I suppose Mr. CALDWELL would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 148) to confirm the term, for the period of seventeen years from the date of its original grant, of the patent of Thomas A. Weston;

A bill (S. No. 258) to restore to the State of Florida jurisdiction over lands reserved for a dock-yard in the county of Escambia in the said State;

A bill (S. No. 259) to revive and extend the provisions of an act approved June 8, 1872, granting the right of way through the public lands of the United States to the Pensacola and Louisville Railroad Company of Alabama;

A bill (S. No. 330) explanatory of section 1889 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to ratify and confirm territorial legislation, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 365) for the relief of Francis Gilbeau;

A bill (S. No. 396) extending the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agricultural and the mechanical arts," to the State of Colorado;

A bill (S. No. 490) to authorize the appointment of commissioners to determine claims and for other purposes, in the Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas;

A bill (S. No. 908) for the relief of George R. Dennis, of Maryland; and

A bill (S. No. 1045) to provide for the administration of the oath of office to collectors and other officers of customs in the district of Alaska.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1411) to prevent the sale of policy on lottery tickets in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1432) to provide for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1412) to prevent depredations upon property in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2257) to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation, the submission, and opening of bids for contracts under the War Department.

APPOINTMENT OF A COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER announced as the conference committee on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 3102) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and making an appropriation for the same; also making appropriations for detecting trespass on public lands and for bringing into market public lands in certain States, and for other purposes, Mr. DURHAM of Kentucky, Mr. BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. BAKER of Indiana.

Mr. ELLIS rose.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. ELLIS. I am willing to do so.

Mr. O'NEILL. I object, if an objection will prevent the yielding.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman from Louisiana yields to me in order that we may dispose of the pending question to-day.

Mr. O'NEILL. I object, if one objection will prevent his yielding.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WOOD. I shall not insist, of course, but I supposed that it would be the wish of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to dispose of this question.

Mr. O'NEILL. I propose that we proceed to the order set for this time.

The SPEAKER. The House, by unanimous consent, fixed two o'clock to-day to hear the memorial exercises as to the death of the late member from Louisiana, Mr. J. EDWARDS LEONARD.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am sure nobody will object.

Mr. WOOD. I desired to dispose of this matter during the day.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope the House will proceed with the order as fixed by unanimous consent.

DEATH OF J. EDWARDS LEONARD.

Mr. ELLIS. In accordance with the announcement made, I desire now to call up the resolutions in regard to my late colleague, Mr. J. EDWARDS LEONARD, and I ask that the resolutions be read.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That this House has learned with deep regret of the death of Hon. J. EDWARDS LEONARD, a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the House do now suspend the consideration of all other business, in order to pay appropriate respect to the memory of the lamented deceased.

Resolved, That in token of regret the members of this House do wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House do communicate these resolutions to the Senate of the United States.

Resolved, That out of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, again we are in the midst of one of those solemn pauses occasioned by the delivery of the death-blow dealt suddenly and swiftly in our midst. Again has the impressive warning come to us that "in the midst of life we are in death."

Scarcely have two moons waxed and waned since JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD sat here in our midst, gifted, cultured, of most honorable birth, and with highly beating heart and bright anticipations of a future wherein illustrious deeds and honors richly won should fill up the perfect measure of a useful and an honorable life; to-day he lies in the cemetery of his native village, upon one of the green hills of Pennsylvania, and though the tender grass is carpeting the mold above him and the returned robin laughs and sings by his grave, yet he awakes not to these touches and voices of springing nature. The silver cord is loosened, the golden bowl is broken, and they that look out of the windows are darkened.

He left us upon a mission in which there were the most beautiful and holy anticipations that can animate the human heart. A beautiful vision had passed before him, enshrining within herself all that he deemed most lovely and beautiful in woman, and had left the witchery of love's spell upon his heart. She was a child of the far south. She lived on that beautiful island that is so surrounded by poetry and by romance, where the very branches of the trees seem vocal and laden with music from the songs of the thousand strange, bright birds, and where the low-hung lamps of the stars chase away the vain shadows of the night, and where winter never comes. He went to interweave with his life the beautiful life of this bright creation. He left us with anticipations as bright as those stars and with love's melody in his heart as sweet as the minstrelsy of the birds. The beautiful anticipations are but the memories of a dream. Instead of the bridal wreath, the gay music, and the merry tread of feet, mourners go about the streets and there are the dark habiliments of the grave. He sought a bride and found but the cold embrace of death.

How mysterious are the councils of Death. How strangely doth he select those whom he calls to his silent realms. That which we call death we regard as the natural end of a fully completed life. It is but natural for the old in years to pass away. Like the full-blown leaf that has lived and fluttered away its spring and summer, and filled the period of its existence and mission, and falls when autumn has draped it in gorgeous funeral robes, like the ripe fruit in its season, so the old naturally pass away to the realms of the dead. But for the young, the gifted, the promising, how sad, how unnatural, how strange, how mysterious.

It is not my purpose to-day, Mr. Speaker, to enter into a detailed account of the life of my lamented colleague. The usual biographical sketch suitable on occasions of this kind will be voiced by one who represents the district where Judge LEONARD was born. It is for me as his colleague, as his personal friend, (for although we differed in politics his magnanimity, his honesty, his purity of character and of soul had won for him my disinterested and devoted friendship,) simply to state what I knew of him since his advent in Louisiana, and my estimation and analysis of his character.

A few years ago he came there. He came at a time when wrong and crime and shame perpetrated by those who claimed affiliation with a great political party had rendered the very name of that party odious to all the honest people of the State. He was a republican in politics. He was a national republican, because he believed that the principles and the mission of that great party were right. Amid all the corruption of those infamous days when stranger greed and venal ignorance reigned he moved with hands unstained and with unsoiled skirts. He came there no "political tramp," no adventurer seeking to profit from the spoils of a wronged and outraged people. He came there honestly, with his mind cultured, with his fortune, with his intellect, and with his honest heart and brave hands to help our people to build up their waste places, to make for himself a home and friends and a grave among our people. Behind her tears he saw that Louisiana could smile. Beyond the dark veil of the present he saw the magnificent possibilities of the State. Beyond the clouds of sorrow and of suffering he saw the light of better, brighter days. He saw that with peace restored, with honest government again in the grasp of that people, with the right to govern themselves once more restored, no poet's dream could outrun the magnificent and splendid future of that State. He heard the voice of destiny calling to Louisiana from the future. He looked to her teeming soil where staples and fruits and flowers sprang so beautifully and so naturally as almost to beggar the heathen's dream of the garden of the Hesperides. He saw her bright, broad rivers whose highways are capable of bearing the argosies of commerce of the whole world. He saw her natural situation and advantages; and he knew that there was a great future for that State. He came there honestly for the purpose of helping us to achieve that future.

As I said, no suspicion of dishonesty, no rumor of dishonor, no taint of corruption ever coupled him with the bad men, the most infamous that ever cursed and blighted a State, nor had he ever part or lot in that harpy feast, where the foul Stymphalian birds of politics, with insatiate appetite and noisome wing and horrid croak, gathered to their infernal orgies over the spoils of a stricken, helpless, and friendless State. No, sir, he was not one of them. He bought real estate, and thus identifying himself completely and perfectly with our Commonwealth he began the practice of law and coupled with his professional duties the labors of the planter. In both he was successful. Coming at a time when, as I said, the deeds of those bad men had brought the name of the republican party very low in that State, he, professing to be a republican, was looked upon at first with suspicion and coldness. But not long was such the case. The people of that State saw that he was honest. They not only saw the polished exterior of the gentleman, but they soon learned that he was indeed a gentleman. Friends gathered about him; and clients, regardless of politics, entrusted him with their business interests. He was elected Commonwealth's attorney; and for the term of four years he performed the duties of that high station with signal dignity and ability. He was appointed to fill a vacancy upon the supreme bench of the State; and though his term of service was very brief yet his opinions in cases won for him the respect and confidence of the bench and bar. Soon afterward he was nominated by the republicans for Congress in his district, and in November, 1876, was elected, and at the extra session in October he took his seat here.

Of his congressional career, Mr. Speaker, it is needless for me to speak now. It is familiar to us all. Suffice it to say that in the very opening days of the session, upon some questions of privilege pertaining to the organization of this House, Judge LEONARD made several speeches which at once told us that he was a lawyer of ability, a correct logician, and an orator of considerable power, and among the younger members he at once took high and prominent rank.

In analyzing Judge LEONARD's character I am struck and impressed with the singular absolute honesty of his nature. It was simple, pure, unadulterated honesty. It was not that conventional honesty which satisfies itself and is satisfied with the mere payment of debts or the mere fulfillment of obligations. It went beyond that; it was theoretical as well as practical honesty. A singular instance of the extreme honesty of his nature I recollect now. On one occasion the Speaker was absent and had designated my friend from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] to occupy the chair. The illustrious gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] had moved some resolution and it was carried by a vote of the House. The Speaker, in perfect accordance with parliamentary usage, without waiting for the gentleman from Georgia to put the motion to reconsider and to lay on the table, as usual anticipated that motion and put it and declared it carried. It struck Judge LEONARD strangely, being unfamiliar with the usage and not finding it in the rules; it struck him strangely; it jarred harshly against that simple and straightforward honesty of his nature that the Speaker should anticipate and put a motion which was never actually moved by any one; and he rose and asked how it was. And when the parliamentary usage was explained to him and he was declared out of order, he was yet not satisfied, and when the Speaker of the House returned he again called up the question and again had the usage explained. It was not captiousness, it was not a desire to be disagreeable, it was not a desire to make "much ado about nothing" that prompted my lamented friend's course in this matter, but the usage appeared in conflict with those simple and direct principles of honesty with which his great soul was imbued.

There was another feature of his character which won for him my profoundest friendship—it was his great magnanimity of soul. His was a soul great enough to take the circumstances of the birth, of the education, of the surroundings of one who differed from him and attribute to him perfect honesty and perfect purity of motive. Often have I conversed with him about the issues growing out of the late war. He was northern by birth, northern by education, and most sincerely did he sympathize with the cause of the Union during the war. Too young to have been in the Army, he had watched with boyish enthusiasm and boyish eagerness the great smoke-covered fields of battle; and it was natural his heart should beat high and his soul be filled with joy and pride when, finally, above the dust of war the flag of the Union unfolded the sheen of its stars in the clear and perpetual light of victory. And yet I know he was magnanimous enough to look at us of the South, to consider the circumstances of birth, the circumstances of education, and I know he was honest enough to attribute perfect honesty and sincerity and purity of motive to us.

He never abated, indeed, one jot or one tittle of that patriotic duty which we all owe to our Government. Born in a locality which has been hallowed by scenes and associations of the Revolution—within four miles of the battle-field of Brandywine, where Washington contended with his undisciplined yeomanry against the steady valor of British soldiers; not far from Valley Forge, where the great heart of Pater Patriæ broke and bled over the sufferings of his compatriots—hearing often in his childhood the tales of those times, living amid the scenes where these grand memories marshaled and thronged about him, no wonder his soul was imbued with lofty love for his country and most beautiful veneration for the great men, the strong men, the suffering men who won for us the priceless boon of liberty.

While he was charitable to the South, while he was charitable to the men of the South, he detested those who taught that gospel of hate which political apostles seemed never to tire of teaching, and his voice was ever for peace and charity and forgiveness. I remember well in discussing a speech which had been made, one which sought to arouse all this bitterness again in which the dead were dragged from their graves, in which the tears of widows were made to flow again and the cries of orphans to be again heard—I remember almost his conversation. He said, "Why do they not let these memories sleep? Why cannot men of the North and men of the South look at each other in the light of charity, and attribute honesty and purity of purpose to each other, evidenced as it was by so much of valor, by so much of sacrifice? For me, I would scorn the people of the South if they did not love the memories of their great men, if they did not cherish the valor of their great armies." And he said, and I never shall forget the feeling and emphasis with which he quoted it, "When I stand by graves like Lee's and McPherson's, like Albert Sidney Johnson's or Thomas's, I would feel the same spirit upon me which animated Scotland's great bard when above two of Engand's proudest graves, the graves of rival statesmen, he sang:

Drop upon Fox's grave the tear,
'Twill trickle to his rival's bier;
O'er Pitt's the mournful requiem sound,
And Fox's shall the notes rebound.

The solemn echo seems to cry,—
"Here let their discord with them die.
Speak not for those a separate doom
Whom fate made brothers in the tomb;
Ere search the land of living men,
Where wilt thou find their like again?"

Ah, Mr. Speaker, I would to God that sentiments like these animated the breast of every man called to the councils of our common country. Judge LEONARD has left as a rich legacy this magnanimity of soul, for it was one of the chiefest and greatest features of his character. He carried it even in the walks of private life. I remember when he went away he was paired with my colleague, Mr. ACKLEN. He was detained longer than he anticipated, and while in Cuba he bethought him that he was perhaps interfering with the discharge of Mr. ACKLEN's duties and holding him to the pair too long; and in the very last letter he ever wrote to me, a letter received on the very day when the telegraph brought us the sad intelligence of his death, he said:

Tell Mr. ACKLEN that I have been detained longer than I anticipated, and I do not feel it due to him or just to him that he should be bound any longer by the pair. Tell him that I will return as soon as possible, and that he may consider the pair as at an end and vote as he wishes.

Mr. Speaker, though not long in its public councils, Judge LEONARD has left to his country and to this House a legacy of a virtuous and upright example and of a life around which there are clustered very many beautiful and hallowed memories.

Ah, a voice does speak from his grave to-day; the voice of peace, the voice of conciliation. I remember in 1861, just when the faces of the American people were growing dark in the scowl of that swiftly-gathering war storm, an old man who had been broken by the storms of state and had for a very long time represented the genius and eloquence of statesmanship of Kentucky in the national councils went down to the Congressional Garden, and just inside the gate, on the left-hand side of the east gate as you enter, he planted an acorn which he had brought from Kentucky; and he planted it in the name of the spirit of union and harmony and peace. The storm came on. The acorn was beneath the ground. The storm raged and beat upon all our land. The acorn, under the beautiful and mysterious operations of nature, was dying that it might live in a newer and a brighter creation. The storm passed away and the oak tree grew up and waves its arms to-day in the soft spring air, drinking in the sunlight, and defying the storm. He who marks its wavings to the kisses of the breeze or he who stands beneath its shadow with a knowledge of its history must find the spirits of peace and union all about it in accord with the noble wish of the great-hearted Kentuckian who planted it there.

Ah, sir, the spirit of conciliation, the spirit of peace and harmony dwells about the grave of JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD to-day. It speaks trumpet-tongued to us, and tells us, men of the North and men of the South, "Cease, cease the proclamation of this everlasting gospel of hate; unite hands and unite hearts that the arch of the Union may be cemented and grow stonger and stonger till it shall be beyond the power of anarchy, beyond the crumbling touch of time and of change." It says to us, let all these bitter buried memories be still; walk in the ways of peace, and cease to revile, to persecute, and to hate. Shall we not hearken to that voice and heed its warnings? And if it shall bear to us the lesson of charity; if it shall teach us the lesson of forgiveness; if it shall make us remember that the time will come, as come it will with all of us, when this earthly life is about to be swallowed up by the advancing waves of death, and the trembling heart-beats of nature's dissolution knocking at the door of eternity shall ask for the last sublimest light we shall ever receive; and if it teach us that in that solemn hour we shall shudder at the memory of our hates and dwell with delight upon the recollection of our loves and charities—ay, if this voice that I seem to hear shall teach us these things, then that grave on the green Pennsylvania hill-side shall become a shrine toward which patient and pious feet shall bend and where Americans may sit to learn the sweet lessons of charity and the teachings of gentle peace.

And if in his life Judge LEONARD taught these lessons, and if they are yet heard from his grave, what indeed should be his epitaph? Should it not be those memorable words which fell so sweetly upon the ears of the listening twelve as they sat on the mountain-side from the loving lips of Him "who spake as never man spake?"

Blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God.

[Applause.]

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, the late Hon. JOHN E. LEONARD, the subject of to-day's memorial exercises, was an entire stranger to me until the commencement of the extra session of the Forty-fifth Congress in October, 1877. I had never seen nor held any communication with him before that date. Knowing that I represented the district in Pennsylvania in which he was born and in which his father's family resided, he sought me, and from that period opened an acquaintance which, warmed by frequent intercourse and by review of persons, scenes, and incidents prized by and pleasant to both of us, expanded into a cherished friendship. Those who had been his people in youth had become my people of the present and the home that was his home of yore had become my home of to-day. The germs thus planted were nurtured by his sterling qualities of head and heart and grew into bonds of close fellowship that were strong and would have been lasting had not the relentless scythe of Death, with sudden stroke, severed them forever.

JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD was born in Kennett Township, Chester County, Pennsylvania, near the village of Fairville, on the 23d day of September, 1845, and was the only child of John E. and Mary H. Leonard.

His ancestry dates back to the early settlers of Chester and Delaware Counties; and Hon. John Edwards (great uncle of the deceased and after whom he was named) was a member of this House and died about 1842, during his term of service. Deprived by death of a mother's watchful care when five years old, his paternal grandmother faithfully supplied, as nearly as could be, her place; and between the deceased and this relative the most affectionate regard existed, which he was always eager to express by loving remembrances till the date of her death in November, 1876. His first school was the Fairville Academy of his native village; and here he evinced a natural inclination of mind toward studious pursuits. He was prominent in organizing debating societies, and surprised both teachers and hearers by his gifts of oratory at this early age. He endeavored to become acquainted with the history of political events transpiring, read and admired the speeches of Clay, Webster, and other prominent men of the day, and preferred the companionship of books and the occupation of study to either the employment or the sports that usually afford congenial work and pleasant pastime to the farmer's boy.

In August, 1860, he entered Phillips Exeter Academy, in New Hampshire, to prepare for college. There, after three years of study, he was admitted to the freshman class at Harvard, in July, 1863, and during the first term of the year attained the first place. A protracted attack of severe fever, from which he narrowly escaped with life, interrupted his course, but notwithstanding he applied himself assiduously during vacation, and was prepared to join his class at the commencement of the sophomore year.

From this date until he graduated, in 1867, his time during the intervals in college duties was occupied in teaching a private school in Massachusetts, in a visit to England, Ireland, and France, which he improved by delivering several lectures in the first two countries, on "The life and character of Abraham Lincoln" and on "Ireland and the Fenians," and by frequent correspondence to American journals. His stay in London was marked by the forming of a strong intimacy between himself and the then United States minister at the Court of St. James, Mr. Adams. But these apparent digressions never interfered with the performance of his full measure of duty as a student, for he was always the equal of any among and generally in advance of his classmates. At commencement, in 1867, he was chosen by his fellows for class orator, and by the faculty to deliver the Latin thesis.

He graduated from Harvard, in July, 1867, and for two years thereafter remained in Europe, pursuing his studies at the University of Innsbruck, in Austria, and at Heidelberg, in Germany; and from the latter institution he received the degree of doctor of laws. After an extended tour through the continent, familiarizing himself with the languages of the different countries, and a course at the University of Paris, where he also received a degree, with especial reference to acquiring a knowledge of the Code Napoleon, he returned to his native land in 1869. Then followed a term in the Law School at Harvard and admission to practice in the courts of Massachusetts; soon after, a change of purpose and in 1870 his removal to and settlement in Lake Providence, Louisiana.

Of his manhood's career in that new home, of his private worth and exalted public station, it will be for those who have better knowledge and more eloquent voice to speak in eulogy. His legal learning, rich store of scholarly attainments, and forensic ability were evidenced on this floor in his brief service, noticeably in the contested-election cases from the fourth and tenth districts in the State which he in part represented.

He gave further evidence of his powers in the composition of a volume of poems, published in New Orleans, in 1871, pure and beautiful in conception and graceful in expression, embracing translations from the French and German, and in a carefully prepared Digest of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in Louisiana Cases, with an appendix, containing a short treatise on the jurisdiction and practice of the Federal courts, compiled in 1875.

Rarely have the prizes of science, of literature, and of popular favor been gathered in such profusion by one so young; and truly his past and present gave promise of a glorious future.

Mr. Speaker, JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD was more than a scholar and a statesman:

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

To manly presence were added gentle manners, candor, and a hatred of all dissimulation and meanness. His nature was sensitive, touched keenly by any violence to his own and watchful to avoid any wound to the feelings of others. These traits of true manhood came by inheritance from the stalwart virtue, tolerant spirit, and elevated moral tone of his ancestry. Born and nurtured in childhood in the pure atmosphere of Chester County, one of the first settlements of William Penn and his followers, among a people ever in the vanguard in the cause of truth, freedom of speech, and opinion, educational progress, and unrestricted civil and religious liberty; always alive to succor and defend the weak and oppressed, and equally earnest to denounce wrong and expose deceit, the principles of right and philanthropy became instilled in his mind as naturally as he inhaled the clear air of his native hills.

JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD exemplified these principles in his intercourse with his fellow-men and won their respect and esteem.

Mr. Speaker, in this desert of political life in which we are thrown together, where differences of opinion and diversity of interests necessarily tend to produce acrimonious feelings and fierce struggles for supremacy, he is not truly great who is the leader in debate or wins

"the applause of listening senates" by his eloquence. No! rather is he greater who cheers with kindly word his stranger and weaker brother, or, giving tolerant ear to his humbler opinions, offers the opportune work of encouragement. To be thus considerate and kind was one of the conspicuous traits of our deceased friend.

The life of Mr. LEONARD was not an aimless one, neither was his brilliant career the result of chance or accident. He was laudably ambitious, and from the beginning laid down a course of lofty purpose. In the class oration delivered in 1867 at Harvard he said:

Our lives are as yet in our hands. We can be what we will, the miserable misanthrope, the schemer, the nobody, the philanthropist. We cannot afford to look about us and watch for some caravan moving to El Dorado; we cannot afford to say "There is time enough;" least of all can we afford to distrust our abilities before we have given them a trial. Let us rather feel that he who is in the lists of life before us must sharpen his lance by the midnight lamp, must bind his girdle about him and his foot in the stirrup before the herald calls the morn.

But, Mr. Speaker, into this short life, amid its many golden lines of high achievements, were interwoven the dark threads of sadness. In 1874 he married an estimable lady, resident of Saint Paul, in the State of Minnesota. A brief married life of three years was terminated by the death of his wife, leaving to his fatherly care two tender children, now absent in a foreign land, in all probability unaware of their latest loss, and possibly too young to realize the depth of bereavement that is centered in complete orphanage.

And who shall draw the saddening picture of his last hours, clothed in romance unrelated and in mystery unrevealed? In a stranger land, away from all he loved, the unexpected blow falling while the heart beat high and warm with youth and hope, the radiant present mingling with the illumined promise of the time to come, and both fading into the darkening cloud of death. But to him that hour was not wholly darkened; for, as the earthly prizes and possessions were passing away, there came visions from "the other shore" like those pictured in the words prized by the honored Vice-President, who died in this Capitol:

The eye that shuts in a dying hour,
Will open the next in bliss;
The welcome will sound in the heavenly world,
Ere the farewell is hushed in this.

We pass from the clasp of mourning friends
To the arms of the loved and lost;
And those smiling faces will greet us there,
Which on earth were valued most.

And thus the eventful life of JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD ended in Havana on March 15, 1878.

Mr. Speaker, the committee, following the order of this body, bore his mortal remains to the place of his birth, in Chester County, where they were received with unfeigned sorrow by friends, less ostentatious, it may be, but as true as any he had ever met; and there, on a somber Sunday afternoon, in the beautiful cemetery of Oaklands, surrounded by the weeping father, who had lavished the proofs of affection year by year on his only child and gloried at the proud place he had won; by the grieving schoolmates of his early days; by the neighbors from town and country, who gathered reflected honor from his advancement as one of themselves; by the Senators and Representatives delegated to present the nation's mourning offering in the sad rites—there, as the winds sang requiem dirges through the trees, we laid him in his last rest, in a spot as bright and fair as any he has seen through many lands, and where a true-hearted people will preserve in ever-green remembrance the name of the honest, the pure, and the good. And there let him rest in peace, his epitaph inscribed with the words of his own poem:

They tell me when the solemn hour
Was nigh, when coursed the blood with feeble pace,
Beneath the fell Destroyer's power,
A smile came o'er thy face.

And when the chilly hand of Death
Was on thy brow, and life's last feeble rill
Was frozen with his icy breath,
That sweet smile lingered still.

As when the sunlight quits the earth,
And leaves its traces on the faded day,
So, when thy bright soul gained its birth,
It kissed thy mortal clay.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, the restless, busy scenes of life are almost daily interrupted by the solemn funeral procession; and a heart may be never so light, yet it instinctively shudders at the sight of the hearse and the thought of the cold, cheerless tomb. At this time this body is called upon to lay aside business and dedicate the hour to the memory of one of its departed members, Hon. JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD, of Louisiana. How fitting to the occasion it is to place in the nation's archives tender recollections of a faithful officer!

A few short weeks ago we parted with Judge LEONARD, then in the full vigor of manhood, in the flood-tide of health, and seemingly abounding in the ambitions of life. As we shook his hand for the brief separation none of us would have selected him from among us as the first to pay the great penalty of life. Here are men, ripe with years, whose allotted time at farthest is but short, and with accustomed human foresight one of these would have been selected by conjecture rather than one of the youngest. But such is not the subtle, mysterious way of Providence.

The poet writes:

Behold there, Death!
Throned on his tomb—entombed in his throne:
Just as he ceased he rests for aye; his scythe
Still wet out of its bloody swath, one
Hand tottering sustains: The other strikes
The cold drops from his bony brow. His Moldy breath tainteth all air.

Mr. Speaker, how uncertain is life! How frail the thread upon which it hangs! How little we know of the future! The dark arm of Death, with suspended sword, rests above our pathway, and we know its fall is sure; but when? We know not. "Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." With this Divine caution all mankind must be content.

With these considerations pressing upon us and the reverberations of the death-knell which summoned Judge LEONARD into the great eternity beyond still lingering in our ears, let us proceed to pay our last earthly tribute of respect to the memory of the dead.

The memory and monuments of good men
Are more than lives.

To die both good and young are nature's curses,
As the world says; ask truth, they are bounteous blessings;
For them we reach at heaven, in our full virtues,
And fix ourselves new stars crown'd with our goodness.

My acquaintance with Judge LEONARD began with the opening of the special session of this Congress. We were never on intimate terms of friendship, though our personal relations were often quite close and our meetings frequent. He impressed me from the beginning as a man of more than ordinary merit, a man of fixed determination and active purposes, intent on making the world the better for his having lived in it. He was a graduate of one of the oldest educational institutions of our country, to be a graduate of which is of itself imperishable fame; but added to this he finished his education in the older countries of the world, thus adding to his great acquirements obtained at home the many accomplishments only obtainable by personal discipline under the tutelage of the teachers of the Old World. He was a ripe scholar, a man of learning in his profession, and possessed of a broad, comprehensive understanding. His gentlemanly bearing won for him friends in every circle. His equipoise and equanimity in society made him gentle, easy, and graceful, and in conversation he was fluent, interesting, and affable.

As a debater he was succinct and positive; as a speaker, earnest and impressive. He entered into discussions rarely, but when he did all were convinced of the sincerity of his opinions and the honesty of his convictions. He was independent in thought and action. Even in party struggles on this floor he sometimes acted independent of party dictation and advocated his opinions freed from party views. He had an independent fortune, one which placed him beyond the necessity of hard labor, yet he chose industry, and followed it as matter of choice. He was a true type of the American youth, for he broke away from the home of his boyhood and the ties of kindred, and wandered far to the South, where he cast his fortunes among a strange people, but still clinging to and advocating the political principles of youth and standing by the predilections of his maturer years. He won the respect of the race of his color, though opposed largely by them in political sentiment. He invested a large portion of his fortune in the soil of his adopted State (Louisiana) and set himself assiduously at work to build up her industries and quicken her prostrated energies. He believed in the principles of the republican party, but scorned the idea of asserting them merely for place and power. He was opposed to what is popularly known as "irresponsible governments" at the South, and believed that the true interest of his adopted State demanded that she should be represented in office by her representative men.

Early in life he was bereft of the companion of his youth, and left with two little children—the fruits of his early love—to care for, to nurture and educate; deprived of a mother's care and affection. He held official positions because of his standing in life and his eminent fitness for the duties imposed. They were not his from search or effort, but came to him because of his abilities and political relations; and whether as a private citizen, judge, or Congressman, he always commanded the respect due a true, worthy, and well-educated gentleman.

Thus feebly have I spoken of a few of Judge LEONARD's many virtues. I must needs leave the rest. They will not perish, for—

Virtue sole survives,
Immortal, never-failing friend of man,
His guide to happiness on high.

Mr. Speaker, my delicate task is nearly completed. Judge LEONARD's death was as untimely as it was unexpected. Much has been said of his mission to the "strange land" where he died. Without particularizing, it is perhaps enough to say, and enough to know, that his business was of the most honorable character. Here let the curtain drop, and let it shut out from the world's gaze its results. Perhaps the thread of romance which seems to permeate the last act of the drama may survive. Life in many respects is a romance. It is the cloud-land of life's sky; it is the imagery which lies just beyond reality; it is the golden border on life's shadows; it wanders by the side of fancy and adds impulse to all joys.

By direction of the House, and on the 31st of last month, a committee of Senators and Members followed the remains of Judge LEONARD from his father's house, in West Chester, Pennsylvania, to the quiet cemetery adjoining. His aged and venerable father, bowed with grief and stricken with sorrow, joined the mournful procession, and beheld his only son, the pride of his life, the main stay of old age, precede him to the grave. There, all that is mortal of our fellow-member now lies—there, by the side of his ancestors and friends who have gone before. There, the wild birds will sing their beautiful songs unheard by him. There, the myrtle and eglantine will shed their sweet perfumes over him. There, the pine and the cypress will chant their melancholy requiems in response to the wind's soft touch. Mingling with evening's gentle twilight, the notes of the whippoorwill will not fall upon his ear. The storms will not touch him; the wintry blast will not reach him; the ivy and the evergreen will not cheer him nor the moan of his children disturb him. He rests on.

After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well.

Friend, brother, patriot, statesman, farewell!

Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the North-wind's breath,
And stars to set;—but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been so well said on the pending resolutions, and of what is still to be said by gentlemen of larger and better acquaintance with the subject of the resolutions than I enjoyed, my observations shall be brief.

JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD, we learn from the record, was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, September 22, 1845; hence he was in his thirty-third year. He studied in early youth at Phillips Exeter Academy, New Hampshire. He graduated at Harvard College in 1867. He studied the civil law in Germany and received the degree of doctor of laws from the University at Heidelberg. Upon the completion of his studies, he repaired to Louisiana and began the practice of law in the thirteenth judicial district of that State. He held the office of district attorney and also that of judge of the Louisiana supreme court. I have never heard it intimated that he did not discharge the duties of any and every station honorably and well. He was afterward elected to the Forty-fifth Congress as a republican. Coming from a State whose existence since the war has been blackened and blighted by a condition of political degeneracy unequalled before in the history of mankind, he brought with him, so far as I have been able to learn, the respect and full confidence of all who knew him in either public or private life. And now that Louisiana has resumed her ancient standing as an equal among the sovereign States of a restored Union, now that her rights and prerogatives under the Constitution there are none to gainsay, it is pleasing to realize that Mr. LEONARD had no responsibility for the weight that dragged her down to the depths of desperation and despair and stood no obstacle in the way of the endeavor which inspired her resurrection into new life. Coming, Mr. Speaker, from a State the title to whose majorities for aspirants, ranging from constable to President, was the subject of angry and bitter contest, it is gratifying to those of us who knew and liked him here to remember that he brought with him to this House the certificates of both the rival governors of his State and presented himself for admission with a right to what he claimed unquestioned, unquestionable, and complete. I do not allude to these things for the sake of adverting on this melancholy occasion to topics of a political kind. I do it for the reason that, as a democrat and as a man, in the fact that the deceased, as a republican, passed through the fierce decade of Louisiana politics, beginning with 1867, and came out of it with high public trusts, conceded to be his by honorable acquirement, commanding the united respect of all his people without regard to party, I find a tribute to his character and his good name of which it would not be justice to rob his memory.

Mr. Speaker, I had no acquaintance with Mr. LEONARD until he took the oath of office at the bar of this House as a Representative in the American Congress. I was not aware that harm had befallen him or his until from the same bar on the 15th of March I heard the announcement of his death on that morning in the city of Havana. Only a few days before that intelligence reached us I saw him at the Riggs House on the eve of his departure for Cuba. He was then in active, vigorous life, and I do not doubt in perfect health. No tidings of his illness reached us. In a letter addressed to a friend and colleague in the House he said: "I will be with you in a week." But ere that week had passed he surrendered his life to the God who gave it, and the return, which he was evidently striving to hasten, to the associations and labors incident to official station here was destined never to be. He had made friendship with comrades whom he was to meet no more. He had undertaken duties which other hands must now perform. His eyes were turned homeward and his fare engaged, but accident prevented the ship Columbus from sailing, and he was to look no more upon his native land forever and forever.

Of the cause which took him to Havana I know nothing except that his mission was personal to himself. Rumors about it have been afloat and to-day we have heard their verification from honorable, reliable lips. Of the beauty and poetry and romance of life which they portray, I have not the time to speak. But they demonstrate the fact that he was a brave, high-minded, chivalrous, devoted man. One of his colleagues and a most worthy member of this House said to me since his death: "Mr. KENNA, he could not have been made the door of evil deeds." I was impressed by the remark, for it accorded with my own opinion, formed from our associations on this floor. I found him a frank, honest, intelligent, sincere, generous man. Ready at all times to maintain his convictions, they were at no time indelicately thrust forward. Conscious that honest merit would find its just place in public esteem, he sought no personal advertisement. He was active in his application to duty, earnest and energetic in debate, persistent in the maintenance of his ideas of propriety and of right, and, withal, a worthy and valuable member of this House. He died at the age of thirty-two years and less than six months.

Mr. Speaker, in the cutting off of one in the prime and vigor of early manhood, with a life only half spent, the glory of achievement arising in beauteous visions of a future that is not for him, there is something which makes an impression different from that which comes from the departure of one in the fullness of his years. I do not mean that the power of choice would enable us to determine that age and experience could be better surrendered than youth and promise. The need of such a decision has been wisely spared us by an all-seeing, beneficent Providence. Nor would I be understood to intimate a want of regard for those who have realized the full measure of three score and ten. There is an attraction about the silvery frosts of seventy winters which the yellow sands of thirty summers cannot possess. There is something akin to another world in a head that is already shrouded in white, and hence the mystic veneration for gray hairs which has become prominent among the acknowledged virtues of mankind. But when death invades the ranks of fresh maturity and snatches the fruit that is ripening there, he seems to come before his time and to gather to-day the harvests of the morrow. Such a visitation seems a denial rather than the end of life.

But, sir, as it is with the deceased so must it be, sooner or later, with you and with me. His death has made in this House, as it has made in the family circle, a vacant chair. Others, too, have had their places here and are gone. Distinguished men have presided for a season over the deliberations of this body. They also have nearly all departed. The time will come when the voice which so ably and acceptably controls this House will be hushed, and the ranks which are so busy about us will be thinned until the last shall have rendered his final account. Day by day the inexorable reaper whispers in our ears:

Men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever.

There is a lesson for young and old in all this. It is that we shall so live, so meet the responsibilities which confront and surround us, so discharge the duties which our respective stations impose, so dedicate ourselves to the service of our country and of Heaven, that when the earth shall reach forth her arms to receive us, all we are and have been and hope to be shall not be laid with the flesh beneath the sod. Our national situation invites earnest action, patriotic endeavor. Strong hands are idle, brave hearts are sorrowing, the tender and the helpless are in distress. The demand of the hour is solemn; the welfare of millions is in our keeping. May the God of nations so direct the councils of this Congress, of which our lamented comrade formed a part, that its labors shall redound to the benefit of mankind when you and I shall have passed away.

Mr. COVERT. A sudden and an awful silence in the midst of sound! Quick darkness in the place of midday sunlight! The ripple of joyous laughter broken at once by the sharp moan of anguish! These are but symbols of that distinct contrast, that sharply-defined change so often presented to our startled senses when life goes quickly out and when death comes swiftly in! Not when the head is silvered and the eye grown dim. Not when the feeble steps have grown weary by the wayside. Not when the tired heart has carried within it the gathered burden of lengthened years. Not then does this change seem so painfully, so startlingly distinct. It is then but the slow and measured creeping in of silence upon sound. It is but the gradual darkening of the shadows. There is due space and proper pause between the smile of joy and the tear of sorrow. But when the icy touch of death is placed swiftly upon a warm and bounding pulse; when the light goes out forever from eyes not dim with age; when a young heart not yet filled with all life's full experiences ceases longer to beat, then it is that you and I stand dumb and awe-stricken in the presence of the mighty alchemist who has wrought this sudden and this startling change.

When the Forty-fifth Congress met within this Chamber at the beginning of the special session, the observer, looking down upon those assembled here, saw represented upon this floor various types of manhood.

There were those among us who had passed the "three score years and ten" allotted to mankind for active labor, but who had been sent hither to give to the council of the nation the benefit of their rich and ripe experience. Had death come to one of these, the fathers of our council, it would have seemed perhaps but the sad payment at its full maturity of the last great debt of nature.

There were those here in active middle life, who had been commissioned by their constituencies to represent them upon this floor for their known and present capacity and power. Had death come to one of these, our active workers, it would have seemed perhaps but a briefly anticipated payment of the life-debt back again to the Great Loaner. There were those here who were yet in their earlier manhood—who had been thus quickly advanced, not alone for what they had accomplished, but for what it was hoped they would yet achieve in the wider field of action afforded at the capital of the nation.

None would have uttered the prophecy that the first voice to be silenced in this Chamber, the first seat to be vacated by death, would have been from among this circle of the junior members of this body—the voice and the chair of him whose untimely end we mourn to-day.

After the just and fitting and feeling eulogy which has been pronounced by the gentleman from Louisiana—after the sadly kind words which have been uttered by those who knew our departed fellow-member longer and better than I—it may be deemed unnecessary that I should detain this House while I attempt to speak, however briefly, in commemoration of his life and services. While any attempted tribute of mine may not be and is not needed, it will not, I know, be deemed ungracious; for although my acquaintanceship with Judge LEONARD began only with the commencement of this Congress, I enjoyed more than usual opportunities for meeting and knowing him outside of this Chamber, in those pleasantest of all relations—social and home life. It is mainly from this stand-point that I desire to speak. Others have told us the story of his short but busy life, and have paid fitting tribute to his conceded ability. We have heard how carefully and how fully he was fitted by the learning of the schools to take advanced position in his profession, and how abundantly he succeeded as the result of this preparation. Called very early to assume important positions of trust and honor—made prosecuting officer in the State of his adoption at an exceedingly early age, and filling these positions with distinguished ability, he was sent here at the last congressional election to represent an important district in the State of Louisiana. It is given to but few thus to play important parts upon the world's great stage so well and so perfectly as he within the compass of the comparatively few years of our late friend's life-time. In his private life I believe him to have been without reproach. It is the testimony of all who knew him socially that he was what I in all my intercourse with him ever found him to be—an affable, genial, generous gentleman. Always mindful of the feelings and opinions of others, he was tolerant and considerate. Though fortune had been kind to him in a marked degree, he was not unduly moved by her favors. Though the world's applause had sounded loudly in his ear, he was not thereby made deaf to the demands of those smaller duties whose patient performance fills and rounds out a perfect life. Such I believe to have been the character of him who came with us at the commencement of our session—who has gone from us before its close.

Though the middle aisle of this Chamber separates the members of the House who differ in political sentiment, no space divides those upon this floor who recognize in each other chivalric action, true manhood, and conscientious devotion to duty. These were the qualities which adorned the character of our associate when living—these the traits which provoke just tribute from both sides of this Chamber when we mourn him dead.

That our late associate filled lightly and easily, and as one born to power, the various positions of honor conferred upon him, can afford perhaps but little consolation in this sad hour to those who loved him best and who were bound to him by the ties of blood and kindred. Ever since the world began its people have at seasons mourned the loss of the great and good, those alike eminent for ability and beloved for gentleness and worth. Public proclamations have been made; bells have tolled; the insignia of mourning have draped the churches and the public places in every land where tribute has ever been paid to the memory of departed greatness. The ink has scarcely dried upon the official announcements, the last sad echoes of the bells have but died upon the air, the badges of mourning have but met the moistened eye—when others have assumed the vacant places and have taken the symbols of power from the dead, cold hands of greatness.

But a few short months ago a crown across the water was for a brief moment laid aside. Kingly power itself yielded to the foe, stealthy and silent, which crept even to the throne and carried Royalty captive to the great beyond. The act, if not the cry, was: "The King is dead—long live the King!" The tolling of the bells turned to chiming, and the people of Italy welcomed a new monarch even while they wept the old.

But a few short weeks ago the eyes of the most exalted of contemporaneous churchmen were closed in that same long sleep which had given rest to other prelates, in their times as exalted as he. In thousands of churches the sorrow-notes of stricken peoples were wafted from continent to continent and upward even to the very skies. The solemn requiems had but ended, the universal mourning had not ceased, when a sad-faced council selected a successor to fill the high station and discharge the sacred duties of him who had gone from earth forever.

And so with all who fill public places, be they high or be they low: they live, they die, and are replaced by others.

The world's necessities, and even Heaven's teachings are that, spite of mourning and of tears, the world's needs be supplied and Heaven's demands fulfilled.

It is not greatness simply to have held important trusts. Greatness lies in the faithful performance of all duties committed to us. That man is not truly great who does not display homely, honest nobility in the smaller affairs of life—in his daily intercourse with his fellow-men.

"Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

I indulge the belief that to the sorrow-stricken father and to the heavy-hearted kindred of our late associate the fact that his son and their kinsman was respected for his manly qualities and loved for his virtues, will be a kindlier and more grateful message than any statement coming from us, however emphatic, of our admiration for his ability, our appreciation of his mental power.

The record tells us of our associate's death. A slab in the Congressional Cemetery will bear sad testimony that another Representative has been stricken down while in the public service. And yet for us, and for all who knew him, he still lives in the lessons which his life and which his death have furnished.

At this hour, as we pause to do honor to his memory, as we try—tenderly as we may—to convey to the stricken hearts of those who mourn him most our appreciation of their loss—our sympathy in their sorrow—let us endeavor in all sincerity, in all trustfulness, to believe with them in the truth of the inspired sentiment:

"There is no Death! What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but the prelude to that life elysian,
Whose portals we call Death!"

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, there have been few, if any, Congresses since the foundation of the Government that were not called upon to pay mournful tributes to the memory of some of their number. Death follows in this mortal existence as resultant from life itself. The fact that we live furnishes incontestable evidence that we must die. There is no condition or rank that can place us beyond the reach of the inevitable. It comes alike to all: the aged and the young, the learned and the unlearned, the millionaire and the pauper, the ruler and the subject, the believer and the atheist; all must succumb to the scythe of this insatiable reaper. Thus it confronts us in public and private life alike. It has now come into this Hall and taken one from among us who had given promise of a bright and hopeful future.

At the opening session of the present Congress we were brought face to face with many new members, sent up from all parts of this great Republic. None furnished a more interesting subject for study than JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD, whose memory we cherish and whose early demise we deplore. Before I had acquaintance with or even heard him in debate I concluded, from his fine, classic features and bright, intellectual cast of countenance, that he was the possessor of a breadth of mind which indicated, I supposed, more than ordinary ability and talent. In this particular, judgment was not at fault, for in addition to the natural endowments with which he impressed me, he was liberally educated both at home and abroad. His accomplishments were the evidences that he improved his opportunities for learning. He was a fine Greek and Latin scholar, and stood highest in his classes while at Harvard.

He could read and write the modern languages with a proficiency and facility that clearly showed he had mastered them all. As a graduate of the University of Heidelberg, Germany, he delivered in German the class oration, and from the University of Paris he finally graduated with the delivery in French of the customary valedictory. Some of his theses are, I am told, among the choicest productions of his scholastic career.

Thus it will be seen that he was in a large degree richly endowed with those potent agencies that were well calculated to fit him for an extended sphere of usefulness had he been spared to his country. For one of his age he was conceded to be an excellent lawyer, at one time being one of the presiding judges on the bench of the supreme court of his adopted State. He was appointed to that exalted position on the recommendation of numerous members of the Louisiana bar, irrespective of party. This, of itself, is one of the best and strongest evidences of the esteem in which he was held, and of the value and estimate placed on his ability as a gentleman of attainments as well as a lawyer of professional repute.

Though young in national legislation, he was nevertheless fully equipped from the armory of a well-stored mind which made him equal to any emergency that arose or task assumed. I should say that he was a man of strong convictions, and when impressed with a sense of right not easily turned aside from a leading purpose. If my memory is not at fault, he never participated in this Chamber in debate but on two or three occasions, and on each of these the right of a member's seat on this floor was involved. The last speech made here by the deceased was on the 20th of February, seven days previous to his obtaining an indefinite leave of absence. On this date he gave utterance to the following somewhat remarkable and truly significant expressions. He said:

Mr. Speaker, I have thought it but fair that I should take some part in this case, because it comes from the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and with whose laws and customs I am to some extent familiar. But I promise the House, I promise the judges of this grave and dignified court that if they will but listen to me for a few moments—say half an hour at the very most—it shall be a long, long while before I shall trouble them in another case of contested election.

Subsequent events have attached an almost prophetic significance to those last words uttered by the deceased. Sir, it will indeed "be a long, long while before" we shall hear his voice again. Yes, nevermore; in this Hall—

So wise so young, they say, do n'er live long.

Judge LEONARD was born on the 22d of September, 1845, at West Chester, Pennsylvania. He was the fond and only child of his parents, in whom they had lodged much hope and anticipated comfort for declining years. His mother has long since passed away, and his untimely taking off is indeed an irreparable loss and a great calamity and bereavement to his fond and doting father. The deceased was ever a welcome guest among his neighbors and associates, his society affording something more than casual entertainment; there was information to be gained wherever true culture was appreciated.

From what I have learned he became fully identified with the people and interests of Louisiana, being a property-holder as well as an official incumbent, a planter as well as a lawyer. In the capacity of district attorney, a position which he once held, it is worthy of note to say that he never used his official position for the purpose of persecuting and oppressing any citizen, let his station have been high or low. Apparently his great aim was to impress and maintain the dignity and at the same time vindicate the majesty of the law without doing detriment to the rights or immunities of the humblest citizen. It can in truth be said of him, that in his official capacities he never failed to "temper justice with mercy."

Sir, the memory of Judge LEONARD will surely be cherished and gratefully remembered by a confiding constituency, his colleagues and his friends.

Mr. Speaker, the circumstances and incidents intimately associated with his death partake in large degree of romance as well as regret. When I read the sad news of the morning that had come the night before, under the waters and over the wires from the Isle of Cuba, my heart sank within me with sad and inexpressible astonishment. He was folded in the arms of death far away from his native land, his kinsmen, and familiar acquaintances, but yet comparatively near to one whom he truly and fondly adored, and the depths of whose affection for him no one will ever be able to fathom. Yes; for him it might be said:

Pity for thee shall weep her fountains dry,
Mercy for thee shall bankrupt all her store;
Valor shall pluck a garland from on high—
And Honor twine the wreath thy temples o'er.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have no systematic phrases to utter about our deceased friend. "Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh." When I heard the words that JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD was deceased I could hardly realize their truth. As I look around this Chamber and see the venerable heads of our colleagues who in the course of nature ought to have gone before him, I hesitate to believe the young member from Louisiana is dead.

Sir, in the hurly-burly of public life, amid the jostling cares and interests of this Chamber, how hard it is, after a lapse of time, to pause because the heavy hand of Heaven has been upon us! The grim monster, Death, has entered this Hall through an avenue least to be expected.

Yet a few days more, thee
An all-beholding sun will see no more
In all his course.

The mystery of the taking off of one of the youngest of our number while venerable colleagues full of years and honors survive is to us past finding out. For one so young, so promising for usefulness to his country, to die on the threshold of a public career is sad, sad indeed. Oh! death in any form is terrible!

The tear,
The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier;
And all we know, or dream, or fear
Of agony, are thine.

The deceased was to me a stranger until I came here as a member-elect at the opening of this Congress. I met him then for the first time. Circumstances soon brought us into intimate acquaintance. Frank, generous, confiding, intercourse taught me the sterling, good qualities of his character. I met him often in the social circle and in the anxieties and perplexities of political strife. In the brief career since our session began, in October last, I knew no member of this House more intimately than our lamented friend. He honored me on more than one occasion with his confidence on matters of public and private concern of the greatest delicacy. Sir, comely in appearance, courteous in his demeanor, cultivated and sprightly in intellect, our young associate was well fitted for a public career—for the employments of the statesmen. A graduate of Harvard, he received there that elementary education and mental discipline giving a sure foundation for an imposing superstructure of intellectual refinement, vigor, and profundity. Early seeking the educational opportunities of Heidelberg and continental Europe, he acquired those accomplishments so rare and yet so attractive and useful in our American public life. A native of the great State I love so much and aid to represent here, our deceased friend, when he had completed his professional education and was admitted to the bar, looked to new fields for labor and opportunities in the battle of life. The war was over, and Louisiana with her rare resources and romantic history presented to him an arena for future usefulness and fame. Making his home in that far-off State, then disturbed by the turbulence of the times, Mr. LEONARD sought only that success in his professional business career which industry, integrity, and merit will always acquire. Living as a northern man amid the conflicts and animosities of recent Louisiana politics, how honorable to his memory is the kind and generous tribute just uttered by his colleague, Mr. ELLIS. Sir, all concede the deceased was well fitted for public life. With a mind cultivated and an ambition for honorable distinction, there was promise in his career. His intellect was deep enough to grasp principles and broad enough to comprehend the relations of public affairs, and fertile enough to suggest and devise measures. Time would have developed him into greater prominence in this Chamber. Having convictions of his own, he was positive yet moderate in their utterance. No offensive display of learning or education, no pedantry, no dogmatic prejudices, deformed the character of him at whose grave we stand.

The rude, stern elements of character so well suited for successful conflicts in pioneer life he did not possess. He did not seem to develop that adventurous spirit so necessary to build up new States. His was rather the conservative character that would safely keep and justly administer what was already achieved. The loss of such a one from our political circle is a public calamity. In this country, sir, we want to invite into public life young men with the varied acquirements, the spotless integrity, and honorable ambition our young associate possessed. May I hope that the sincere tribute rendered by all to-day to the excellent qualities, those attributes of statesmanship this young Representative appeared to possess, may stimulate other young men of our country to go and do likewise. When public station and legislative life in America cease to have attractions for such as he, farewell, and a long farewell, to honorable ambition in our Republic.

While our young friend was fitted for a useful career in the National Congress, yet the sedate duties of high judicial station were more attractive to him. After he had been elected to this Congress by a majority conceded by his opponent at the election of 1876, a vacancy by death occurred on the supreme bench of Louisiana. He was appointed to this vacancy, and immediately assumed his duties. They were most congenial to him. His fitness by intellectual training and the justness and equanimity of his disposition were recognized, I am informed, by the bar of the State. With true judicial dignity he could tread the walks of such a station. None better than he could become "a just judge." I have read somewhere that the remark, a judicial officer is invested with the ermine, though fabulous is yet eloquently significant. It is a tradition in natural history that the creature called ermine is keenly sensitive to its bodily cleanliness; any taint or defilement of its snow-white fur paralyzes it and makes it powerless for retreat. The hunters knowing this, pursuing it, spread mire and filth on the pass leading to its haunts; finding entrance there impossible without soiling its spotless coat, it falls readily a prey to the pursuer. He who sits in judgment upon his fellows, who discharges the functions of the judge, should be as sensitive to defilement as the ermine with which he is invested.

I know our deceased associate rose to the height of the great argument when he sat as a judge and when he came here to make laws for the people. I speak not from conjecture, sir; it is a matter of history that in the early sittings of this Congress it was designed by some members on the other side of this Chamber to offer a resolution indorsing the action of President Hayes in his treatment of Louisiana which culminated in the overthrow of the Packard government, and the consequent destruction of the supreme court of which Judge LEONARD was a member. While it was thought by many such a resolution was only for political effect, yet the deceased, knowing the particularity of one of our rules, which prohibits a member from voting on any subject in which he is interested, feared he could not conscientiously vote on the resolution. He had been a member of that government, and any expression of opinion by him about the action of the National Administration in relation to it, while it would have no practical effect, he apprehended, would be improper. He hesitated to vote, and early one morning he called at my room to consult and take my opinion on the subject. How seriously and prudently he talked of the high and impartial duty of the Representative in Congress! He wanted to be just to the country, just to himself, just to his office. The contingency, however, never arose which required him to vote on this question. I could multiply instances of his pure character. I shall intrude on this solemnity but a moment longer. Our young associate, Mr. Speaker, then, is no more forever among us. In my mountain home, on a temporary absence from here, while in the very crisis of the trial of an important case, an associate counsel handed me the announcement in the morning paper of your presentation, Mr. Speaker, of the intelligence of Judge LEONARD's sudden death and the adjournment of this House. Shocked with sadness, the duty of the hour would only permit me a hasty word of sympathy, which I now more deliberately express.

With him all is over. In the bustle of life, engaged with present cares, we will pass on, and the green grass will grow over the new grave of him we now commemorate; but, sir, two children are left behind to seek, when in more mature years, for the character of their father. Should we meet them as we wander through life, it will be a cheerful pleasure to pause and say to them, We knew your father; he fell on the threshold of an honorable career; begin where he left off; fulfill his promise and all will be well. I have done. I can say of him who is the subject of this ceremony, as was said of one of Count's greatest characters, "I knew the man and do honor his memory."

Mr. CUTLER. Mr. Speaker, among the many new members that appeared at the opening of the extra session of the Forty-fifth Congress, none possessed a finer physique or gave greater promise of a long life of usefulness and honor than did JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD, whose sudden death the Congress mourns to-day.

I was attracted to him at the first, and it was my good fortune to make the acquaintance of the deceased at an early day following the organization of the House, and such acquaintance ripened into a warm and generous friendship, and the favorable impression that I had formed of him upon his first appearance in Congress was more than justified by reason of our friendly relations.

The unfortunate complications resulting from the political situation of the State of Louisiana made it incumbent upon the deceased, who held the only seat in this House as a republican from that State unquestioned and unchallenged, that he should take an active part at an early day in the discussion involving the right of a Representative from that State to retain his seat.

At the outset of the discussion I was impressed with the honesty of his statements, together with the strong conviction of right that characterized the advocacy of the propositions he maintained. His every action appeared to be governed by a keen sense of justice; his impulse to do that which was justified by conscience, make no allegation but what was warranted by the evidence, and draw no deduction or conclusion but what could be defended by the facts and law.

I recall with much pleasure in the discussion of the California case, Wigginton and Pacheco, a remark that he made to me just prior to his argument:

You are one that believes that election cases are not political, but strictly judicial, and in that view you are not supported by the majority of either of the parties, but I confess to great sympathy with the views that you entertain, and in this case I am compelled to disagree with my party, and I hold the opinion that neither Wigginton nor Pacheco are entitled to a seat, and I trust you will listen to my remarks, for I think you will arrive at the same conclusion.

I listened to his speech with great interest and close attention, as in fact I do to every argument in which election cases are discussed, for there are no matters presented to the consideration and decision of this House involving greater interests, higher privileges, or more far-reaching in their results than the question touching the right of the member to represent his district, for it affects not only each and every citizen in the district, but it equally affects the sovereignty of the State as well as the General Government. For what impartial judge can, without surprise and feeling of alarm, listen to the announcement heretofore made by members upon this floor in the final adjudication of election cases: "Upon all political questions I am paired with A. B. Upon this question, if he were present, he would vote ay and I would vote no;" or vice versa. And yet the record of past sessions affords frequent evidence of this state of things, and well may a lover of his country despair of the future of the Republic and the patriotic citizen lose confidence in its perpetuity unless election cases are decided judicially and in accordance with the strict rules of law and evidence, ignoring and losing sight of the question of political expediency or political results.

And, Mr. Speaker, I cannot but digress for the moment to express the hope that some plan will yet be devised, some legislation secured, by which the legality of the member's right to a seat in this body when contested shall be settled by the courts of the State and the Congress admit such Representative whose right to the seat shall have been determined by the proper court of the State, thus relieving the candidates from great vexation and trouble, the Government from great expense, and giving the district its legal Representative at the organization of each Congress.

I gave close attention to that speech of my friend; and, while I could not agree with his conclusions, I could not but admire his independence, when he said during the course of that debate:

As I understand the Constitution of my country the House of Representatives is now sitting as a court of justice and each member of this House is a judge acting under the sanction of his official oath. And am I to be told that it is my duty in such a case to cast my vote as a judge with my party because, forsooth, the vote which I shall thus cast will be advantageous to me and to others of the same political proclivities? Sir, if so foul a doctrine as that is to be applied in a court of justice, let the meanness of the deed at least be acknowledged and understood. There is no necessity of adding hypocrisy to villainy. If the judges of this court are to vote according to their party proclivities, let us have an end of all this farce of a trial and judgment.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I listened to another speech of my friend, delivered but a short time before he bid us "good by" and we returned him our "Godspeed," and I extract the following from it; it was his last speech in this House, and that too in an election case from Louisiana, Acklen vs. Darrall:

Mr. Speaker, I have thought it but fair that I should take some part in this case because it comes from the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and with whose laws and customs I am to some extent familiar. But I promise the House, I promise the judges of this grave and dignified court that if they will but listen to me for a few moments, say half an hour at the very most, it shall be a long, long time before I shall trouble them in another case of contested election.

One may almost wonder if in this he saw the end. Was it prophetic?

How sad the reflection, that at so early a day following that promise and pledge he should be summoned before a higher court and before a just Judge—a Judge that never errs, and there he is making a plea, not for another, but a personal plea in his own behalf, in a court in which the only rule is even and exact justice, in which the Judge is justice personified, where every act, word, and deed must have been in strict accord with "right principle and conscience" to secure His approval.

It is not for me to enter the domestic circle, or lift the veil that now envelops a sorrowing family or stricken constituency. My mission is complete, my duty performed, when I place a chaplet upon the grave of my friend and speak of him as I knew him—a brave man, a warm friend, a true citizen, a fearless legislator, a faithful Representative, one who had not only the courage of his convictions but also the courage of maintaining and defending them. As a legislator he brought to the performance of his duties a cultivated mind, with experience, knowledge, and observation, that bid fair to be of great value to his colleagues, advantage to his constituency and State, and honor to his country.

But these halls shall echo his footsteps no more; his voice no longer fall upon our ears; his counsel no longer be sought, and the years of usefulness and honor that had been hoped for him, and predicted of him by a loving constituency and admiring friends, have been suddenly cut off, and we gaze upon that vacant seat in this Chamber and exclaim:

Man proposes, but God disposes.

And nought is left for us, as we drop a tear of sorrow, but to cherish his memory and emulate his virtues, and to remember that life is—

Like the snowflake on the river,
A moment seen, then gone forever, and that our end and object in life should be to perform the duty of life well, and to that end select and choose those paths that will lead us to the performance of all our public duties in accordance with "right principle and conscience," looking forward to that realization so beautifully expressed:

Would'st have a friend, would'st know what friend is best;
Have God thy friend, who passeth all the rest.

And then shall we have reached that point where as citizens we shall be patriotic; as friends, true; as legislators, fearless and brave; faithful to the high trusts confided to our keeping, and governed by no motive other than to be just to ourselves and true to our country.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker: The Hon. JOHN E. LEONARD, whose life and death we now commemorate, was born at West Chester, in the State of Pennsylvania, on the twenty-second day of September, eighteen hundred and forty-five. He became a student in Phillips Exeter Academy, at Exeter, in the State of New Hampshire, in eighteen hundred and sixty, that he might complete his preparation for the University at Cambridge, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. This was his record at the academy: he was good in all his studies and always did his work in all branches thoroughly and well. Though not ranking with the very highest, he was deficient in no study. He possessed a mind remarkably well balanced for one so young. His social qualities were such as to commend him to the favor of his teachers and associates as a high-minded, honorable, generous boy. In addition to the above record, communicated to me by the principal of the academy, the following honorable mention is added: "The impression that he made here is still distinct in the memory of those who knew him." The social, moral, and intellectual qualities which he had and exercised during his course at this Rugby of New England, still keep fresh the impression he there made. These qualities, therefore, must have been well and harmoniously developed.

He entered the university at Cambridge in eighteen hundred and sixty-three and graduated with honor in eighteen hundred and sixty-seven. It is said of him here that he was a bright, ready scholar, with the faculty of acquiring rapidly and then making the most advantageous use of his acquisitions. His standing on the rank-list was very high in his freshman and senior years. He was popular among his fellow-students, and in the senior year was chosen class orator. He showed while in college that faculty for writing and speaking which doubtless helped him to his early success in his profession and in public life. His parts were good and they were available for ready use. He had a just measure of confidence in himself. He had energy and an honorable ambition.

Thus, at the preparatory school at Exeter, where Webster and Everett and hundreds of the most eminent lawyers, jurists, divines, statesmen and scholars of the last and the present century, drank with delight their first draughts at the Pierian spring, and at Harvard, the most famous seat of learning in the New World, whose triennial attests its great service to all departments of higher education, he cheerfully submitted himself to all the discipline which these institutions could give him.

After his graduation from Harvard, he became a student of law in the university at Heidelberg, in Germany, a university founded in the fourteenth century, rich in libraries and widely renowned for the exact and profound learning of its professors. At the close of his studies there, he received the decree of doctor of laws. Returning to the United States, he settled in the State of Louisiana and commenced the practice of law in the thirteenth judicial district. He rose rapidly in his profession, and was soon made district attorney. In eighteen hundred and seventy-six, he was appointed associate justice of the supreme court of the State. The same year he became the republican candidate for Congress in the fifth district, and was elected a member of the Forty-Fifth Congress. These honors he attained at the age of thirty-one.

In eighteen hundred and seventy-two, Judge LEONARD was married to Miss Ella Burbank, a woman of rare beauty and refinement, the daughter of Hon. James C. Burbank, of Saint Paul, Minnesota. She died in December, eighteen hundred and seventy-five, leaving two children, sons, who are now in Europe under the care of their maternal grandmother.

On the fifteenth of last October, the subject of our eulogies became our fellow-member in this House, well prepared by natural and acquired powers and graces, to take and hold here an honorable position. On a leave of absence from the House, he left Washington during the closing days of February and reached the Island of Cuba March fourth. He died at Havana on the fifteenth of the month, when he had been from his seat but two weeks.

This is a simple and unadorned recital of the chief incidents in the life of him we now seek to honor. We saw him here take his stand at the starting-place. We cannot tell how well he would have run the race of public life; how rich the garlands which would have wreathed his brow, had death allowed him to reach the goal. We can only say he had the force and vigor of youth; he had the culture of the schools. The severer studies had wrought out the elements of the mental panoply with which he should battle for the victory, and these, the classics had polished and bound together as with hooks of gold. Still the brightness of his armor did not blind the angel of death. He espied him on the placid waters in the bay of the Queen City of the green Isle of the Antilles, with Morro and La Cabaña castles looking down upon him as he was nearing the steamer which should take him to his native land.

Mr. Speaker, these ceremonies are evidence that the condition, the situation of man in life, furnish no law to death. It appears when and how it pleases. It neither fears the mighty nor respects the lowly.

The glories of our blood and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate;
Death lays his icy hands on kings.

The beauty of health or of youth cannot keep it back. The most beneficent life, the choicest spirit, give to death no concern and put off its approach not an hour. It has no regard for tears and heeds not the pleadings of affection.

It is an enemy as impartial as it is universal. The great life purpose; the grandest mission in the service of humanity; the rarest personal virtues; vast acquisitions in learning, in wealth, in the means for happiness and usefulness; deeply cherished hopes, and the most noble endeavors turn not aside this great enemy of the race. It but utters the decree, "Dust to dust, ashes to ashes," and moves on in its work.

The exultant heart of the devout astronomer ceases to beat by the coming of death, just as the long-looked-for and predicted planet approaches the spot in the heavens where he has long held the faithful telescope. Death will not permit him to give a name to this newly discovered member in the stellar family of God. The mariner through many storms has brought the richly laden ship within sight of the destined haven, and yet he falls at his post when his voice might well-nigh reach the objects of his pride and his love. The man who for years, amid painful toils, has planted the seeds of truth within the realms of error, must close his eyes and yield up his spirit when the delightful fruitage is just ready to strike his vision and its transporting sweetness fill his soul.

Death gives no time for the adjustment of accounts or the correction of records. The man who for a whole life-time has been justly esteemed the embodiment of integrity, surrenders to death on the very day when he is prepared to dissipate the charges of dishonesty which had come upon him by some error in calculation or in statement. Man is overtaken by this fell foe when the reasons for some course of action, some absence from home or from business, are known to himself alone. Death gives no time for explanations, no opportunity to scatter the clouds which rest above him and which, because of his taking off, will never quit his name. The good ruler of a great nation, who has, through a long and direful war, clung fast to her changing fortunes, dies just when the air begins to move by the first shouts of final victory.

Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the North-wind's breath,
And stars to set:—but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!

Mr. ELLIS. I ask for a vote on the resolutions.

The question being taken, the resolutions were unanimously adopted; and in accordance with the last resolution, the House (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BISBEE: The petition of the late receiver and register of the United States land office, at Saint Augustine, Florida, for compensation for services rendered—to the Committee of Claims.

Also, the petition of merchants, manufacturers, and other citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, against the passage of the pending tariff bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. PATTERSON, of New York: Resolutions of the Legislature of New York, asking for legislation that will relieve the State from the burdens of a tax to support immigrant paupers—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. RANDOLPH: Papers relating to the claim of Thomas Fain, of Sullivan County, Tennessee—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. SHALLENBERGER: The petition of 90 merchants and manufacturers of Philadelphia, against the passage of the pending tariff bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. STONE, of Iowa: The petition of Henry Lohmar, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TUCKER: Resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Allegheny County, Virginia, favoring the passage of the Texas Pacific Railroad bill—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Also, the petition of citizens of Buckingham County, Virginia, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. WIGGINTON: Joint resolution of the Legislature of California, favoring the establishment of a post-route from Fresno, via Liberty, to Waltham Cañon, in Fresno County, California—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 19, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

GEORGE WILLIAMS.

Mr. GARTH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4412) for the relief of George Williams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A VESSEL.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce without amendment and with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 120) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the Canadian-built propeller East, by the name of Kent.

It is important that the bill should pass at this season of the year if at all; and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JAMES,] if any facts are to be stated, will make an explanation.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which there will be opportunity for objection.

The Clerk read the bill. The preamble recites that the Canadian-built propeller East has been condemned and sold pursuant to a decree of the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York, in admiralty, and was purchased at the sale and is now owned, by George D. Seymour, Isaac L. Seymour, and George Hall, citizens of the United States, residing at the city of Ogdensburg, State of New York: the bill therefore directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register or enrollment to the said Canadian-built propeller East, owned by the said George D. Seymour, Isaac L. Seymour, and George Hall, by the name of the Kent, to which the name of said propeller East is hereby changed.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read the report of the committee, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, having had under consideration Senate bill No. 120, to change the name of the propeller East to that of Kent, and to authorize the issue to her of an American register, report back the same with the recommendation that the same do pass. The committee respectfully report the following facts as a basis of their recommendation:

The propeller East, named in this bill, was built at Montreal, Canada, in 1864; is of the capacity of two hundred and nineteen tons; used principally for carrying freight, with accommodations for a limited number of passengers; and in 1876 was rated by the board of underwriters as B 1. In March, 1877, said vessel was properly and carefully examined and surveyed and found to be sound, staunch, and seaworthy. That said vessel has an excellent engine of great power, and both her engine and boiler are in good condition.

That said propeller, in the season of 1875, while navigating the Saint Lawrence River, collided with the steam-tug Joe Mac and sank said tug in ninety feet of water.

In the year 1876, said propeller East being within the jurisdiction of the United States, the owners of the tug Joe Mac caused said propeller to be seized by proceedings in admiralty in the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York; that subsequently libels were filed against said propeller; that said cause, on behalf of the owners of said tug, was contested; that a decision was rendered by said court in favor of said owners, and a decree of condemnation and sale of said propeller duly entered. In virtue of process duly issued upon said decree the United States marshal, on the 5th of May, 1877, sold at public auction said propeller, and she was struck off to the owners of said tug as the highest bidders, and a bill of sale from said United States marshal, duly recorded, was by him delivered to said purchasers, together with the possession of the said vessel. The purchasers of said propeller are American citizens, engaged in the business of freighting on the Saint Lawrence River, touching at both American and Canadian ports and coasting on the American side, and desire to use said propeller in their said business.

As American citizens they cannot own and operate in Canada a vessel with a Canadian register, nor can they coast in American waters with a vessel with such a register.

Hence the said owners ask that the name of said vessel be changed and granted an American register, as without such register said propeller is nearly valueless.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JAMES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 535) for the relief of the executors of the estate of John S. Miller, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4242) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill (H. R. No. 3739) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 3394) to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry;

A bill (S. No. 187) authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to rehear the application of Stephen V. Benét for patent for cartridges; and

A bill (S. No. 20) authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has just sent back a House bill to prevent the introduction of infectious diseases into the United States with two small verbal amendments which do not change the sense of the provisions of the bill. I ask consent to take it up and concur in those amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking from the Speaker's table a bill (H. R. No. 3739) to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, so that the verbal Senate amendments may be concurred in?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The first amendment is to insert after the words "United States," in line 10 of section 1, the words "into or through the jurisdiction of which said vessel or vehicle may pass, or to which it is destined," so as to make the section read:

That no vessel or vehicle coming from any foreign port or country where any contagious or infectious disease may exist, and no vessel or vehicle conveying any person or persons, merchandise, or animals affected with any infectious or contagious disease, shall enter any port of the United States or pass the boundary line between the United States and any foreign country, contrary to the quarantine laws of any one of said United States, into or through the jurisdiction of which said vessel or vehicle may pass, or to which it is destined, or except in the manner and subject to the regulations to be prescribed as hereinafter provided.

The next amendment is in line 8, section 2, to strike out "inform" and insert "give information thereof to;" and in line 10, after the word "service," to insert out the word "thereof," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. That whenever any infectious or contagious disease shall appear in any foreign port or country, and whenever any vessel shall leave any infected foreign port, or having on board goods or passengers coming from any place or district infected with cholera or yellow fever, shall leave any foreign port, bound for any port in the United States, the consular officer, or other representative of the United States at or nearest such foreign port, shall immediately give information thereof to the supervising surgeon-general of the marine-hospital service, and shall report to him the name, the date of departure, and the port of destination of such vessel; and shall also make the same report to the health officer of the port of destination in the United States; and the consular officers of the United States shall make weekly reports to him of the sanitary condition of the ports at which they are respectively stationed; and the said surgeon-general of the marine-hospital service shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be charged with the execution of the provisions of this act, and shall frame all needful rules and regulations for that purpose, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President; but such rules and regulations shall not conflict with or impair any sanitary or quarantine laws or regulations of any State or municipal authorities now existing, or which may hereafter be enacted."

Mr. HARTRIDGE. I move to concur in those amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HARTRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FULL WEIGHT OF COAL.

Mr. WRIGHT, by unanimous consent, presented the following petition; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia:

Resolved, That Maple Council No. 3, of the District of Columbia, Sovereigns of Industry, representing four hundred and four families in said District, does hereby respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to enact such a law as will insure full weight to purchasers of coal, and compel coal dealers to send the certificate of a properly appointed Government weigher with every load of coal delivered.

D. B. GALLATIN,
Secretary pro tempore.

NATHAN UDELL.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope by unanimous consent I will be permitted to make a report from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Mr. WOOD. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. SAMPSON. I now call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 698 granting a pension to Nathan Udell was laid upon the table, and I do so for the purpose of having that bill, on which an adverse report was made, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is the gentleman's right.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and then, on motion of Mr. SAMPSON, the bill and accompanying report were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE APPROPRIATION.

Mr. SINGLETON. I hope I may have unanimous consent at this time to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4222) to provide for deficiency in appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, and to put it on its passage, so as to keep the Printing Office in operation. It is a unanimous report, appropriating $200,000. I have a letter from the Public Printer that unless the appropriation is made he will have to stop the printing of blanks and everything else.

Mr. WOOD. If there be unanimous consent I do not object, but I do not wish the regular order to be set aside.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of that bill, and to bring it before the House for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill, which was read, appropriates $200,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the current fiscal year.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES W. COOMBS.

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service directs me to report back two resolutions for the payment of the men known as the cloak-room men, and to place them upon the roll of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Does the report provide for the payment of the pages on the floor who have not yet been paid?

Mr. HARRISON. The committee report back these two resolutions which were referred to that committee. The one in reference to the pages has not been referred to that committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That Charles W. Coombs, who has been employed in the folding-room of the House as document messenger since the 1st day of January last and has performed necessary and valuable service, be paid for said services hitherto at the rate of $100 per month, and that he be paid hereafter for the remainder of the current fiscal year on the roll of the folding-room of the House at the rate of $1,200 a year.

Mr. YOUNG. I object to the consideration of that resolution at present.

Mr. WOOD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. The other resolution is not objected to.

Mr. YOUNG. I object to both of them.

WORKS OF ART, ETC., IMPORTED FOR EXHIBITION.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield a moment that I may report from the Committee on Ways and Means the bill which I submitted yesterday, a bill to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for the encouragement of arts or sciences, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOOD. I will yield for that if it passes by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand there will be no objection to the bill. The gentleman who made the objection yesterday has withdrawn it.

The bill was read. It provides that all works of art, collections in illustration of the progress of the arts, science, or manufactures, photographs, works in terra cotta, parian, pottery, or porcelain, and artistic copies of antiques in metal or other material, imported in good faith for permanent exhibition at a fixed place by any society or institution established for the encouragement of the arts or science, and not intended for sale, and all like articles imported in good faith by any society or association for the purpose of erecting a public monument, and not for sale, shall be admitted free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The second section provides that all articles described in this act imported for and exhibited at the late international exhibition, upon which duties have not been paid at the passage of this act, may be included within its provisions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection; and the bill (H. R. No. 4413) was read three times, and passed.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to refer to the Committee of Ways and Means the resolution of the Senate providing for the adjournment sine die of both branches of Congress on the 10th day of June next.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider, there were—ayes 105, noes 94.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD. I now withdraw the motion to refer to the Committee of Ways and Means and move to postpone the further consideration of the Senate resolution till Wednesday the 15th of May after the morning hour; and on that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to ask the Chair a question. If the motion be agreed to will it have the effect of making this a special order for the day named?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged question and as such would come up on that day. To-day the question had in a measure a triple privilege, being a motion to reconsider, being a question of final adjournment, and also coming up as unfinished business.

Mr. BEEBE. As I understand it, it will be a matter of privilege on the day named for any gentleman then to call it up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be a matter of privilege for any gentleman to call it up, and if the House concurred it would come up.

Mr. O'NEILL. Would this come up irrespective of the morning hour as a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to postpone.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 129, nays 113, not voting 49; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:
Mr. LYND. I am paired with my colleague from Wisconsin, Mr. WILLIAMS. If he were here, I would vote "ay" and Mr. WILLIAMS would vote "no."

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire. Mr. DEAN, of Massachusetts, is paired with Mr. PEDDIE, of New Jersey. If present, Mr. DEAN would vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague from New York, Mr. VEEDER, is detained at home by very serious illness.

Mr. HOUSE. My colleague from Tennessee, Mr. ATKINS, is still detained at his room by sickness. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. FORNEY. I am paired with Mr. WAIT. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. WARD. I am paired with Mr. AIKEN, of South Carolina. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. COLE. I am paired with my colleague from Missouri, Mr. BLAND. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. QUINN. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. HANNA. I am paired for to-day with my colleague from Indiana, Mr. HAMILTON, who is detained in his room by sickness. If he were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. FORT. My colleague from Illinois, Mr. BOYD, is detained at his room by sickness. If he were here, he would vote "no."

Mr. STARIN. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. VEEDER. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. MCKENZIE. My colleague from Kentucky, Mr. CARLISLE, is detained at his room by sickness.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleagues from Illinois, Mr. TIPTON, and Mr. TOWNSEND are paired. If present, Mr. TIPTON would vote "no" and Mr. TOWNSEND would vote "ay."

Mr. HARRISON. I am paired with my colleague from Illinois, Mr. BRENTANO. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. JORGENSEN. I desire to announce that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. PRIDEMORE.

Mr. PEDDIE. I am paired with Mr. DEAN. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. WOOD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 1411) to prevent the sale of policy or lottery tickets in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1432) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia.

SCHÜTZEN-VEREIN.

The SPEAKER. The communication which will now be read was received by the Chair, and the Chair thinks it proper to lay it before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, April, 1878.

The third national shooting festival of the Sharpshooters Union of the United States of North America will be held at the park in Union Hill, New Jersey, from the 16th to the 24th of June next.

You and the honorable body over which you have the honor to preside, are most cordially invited to be present on that occasion. It is earnestly hoped that if your official duties will permit you to attend, that you will kindly signify to us your acceptance.

Most respectfully,

GEORGE AERY,

President.

J. H. BEHRENS,

Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

RATES OF DUTY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to the resolution of the House of the 13th instant, transmitting a detailed statement of the articles enumerated in the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to impose duties upon foreign imports, &c., showing in parallel columns the rates of duty proposed therein and the present rates of duty, and the quantities and values of the imported commodities which entered into consumption in the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and the amount of duties thereon at the rates enumerated in said bill; also, a statement showing what articles now dutiable are restored to the free list and what articles now on the free list are made dutiable by said bill; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN AND ASSISTANT SURVEYOR ARCHIBALD B. CAMPBELL.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of the Judge-Advocate-General's report upon the case of Captain and Assistant Surgeon Archibald B. Campbell of the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JAMES G. WILLIAMS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting information relative to the claim of James G. Williams; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SURVEY OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the House calling for information relative to public surveys and transmitting the report of Professor Hayden upon the subject-matter of said resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ISSUES OF ARMS TO THE TERRITORIES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Chief of Ordnance on House resolution No. 153, providing for the issue of arms to the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CLERICAL FORCE IN WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the reports of the chiefs of bureaus in the War Department relative to the clerical force; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

IMPORTED WINES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a communication from the Chamber of Commerce of Bordeaux, France, on the subject of imposing an increase of duties on French wines imported into the United States; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

L. M. BAKER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the claim of L. M. Baker; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. WAIT, for ten days, on account of important business;
To Mr. SCALES, until the 1st of May.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. THROCKMORTON, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Mrs. Mary E. Campbell, no adverse report having been made thereon.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. BURCHARD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend the laws relating to internal revenue; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BURCHARD. I would like to have the bill made a special order in the House at some fixed date. I will state that it relates to the administration of the internal-revenue department, and not to the rates of taxation.

Mr. CONGER. Before the gentleman enters into any discussion upon this bill I desire to reserve all points of order.

Mr. BURCHARD. This bill substantially as reported was prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] indicate some motion, that the question may be submitted to the House?

Mr. BURCHARD. I ask, then, unanimous consent that this bill be set for consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the 1st day of May, not to antagonize pending orders or appropriation bills.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Does this bill refer at all to reduction or increase of taxation?

Mr. BURCHARD. It does not, except some provisions which operate as a relief from pending assessments. It does not change rates of taxation.

Mr. WOOD. I suggest to my colleague on the same committee [Mr. BURCHARD] that he except such reports as may be made from the Committee of Ways and Means. There may be important reports within a few days.

Mr. BURCHARD. I have no objection, of course, to that exception. I ask that, subject to these exceptions, the bill be made a special order in the House as in Committee of the Whole for the 1st of May immediately after the reading of the Journal and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. After the morning hour.

Mr. BURCHARD. Subject to pending orders and to appropriation bills and to reports from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WOOD. Reports that may be made as well as reports already submitted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the order will be made. There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CUSTOMS OFFICERS IN ALASKA.

Mr. KNOTT. By direction of the Committee on the Judiciary I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and put on its passage the bill (S. No. 1045) to provide for the administration of the oath of office to collectors and other officers of the customs in the district of Alaska.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time. It provides that until the formal organization of the Territory of Alaska, the oath of office required by law to be taken by a collector or other officer of the customs in Alaska, may be taken before the judge of any circuit or district courts of the United States.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM P. BURWELL.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the petition and papers of William P. Burwell, of Virginia, now on the table of the House, be recommitted to the Committee of Claims. That committee has no objection to such action.

The SPEAKER. In what situation are the papers?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The case was reported adversely by the Committee of Claims; but they are willing to rehear it. I therefore desire to have the papers recommitted.

There being no objection, the petition and papers were recommitted to the Committee of Claims.

RICHARD F. BRYAN.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2882) for the relief of Richard F. Bryan, and the same was recommitted to the Committee of Claims, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

HORACE K. DRAKE & CO.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, (by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4415) for the relief of Horace K. Drake & Co., or assigns; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT and others called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins, at eighteen minutes past one o'clock; and the committees will be called for reports of a private nature. The call rests with the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. MILLS. Would it be in order to move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It would not be.

DAVID B. M'COMB.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 913) to authorize a change of date in the commission of Chief Engineer David B. McComb, United States Navy; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES WEIR GRAYDON.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1252) to authorize the President of the United States to place the name of James Weir Graydon, United States Navy, on the lieutenants' list in such place as to make his date and rank correspond with the date of his enlistment in the volunteer Army of the United States; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALBEMARLE AND CHESAPEAKE CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 18) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

T. B. M. MASON.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York, also, from the same committee, reported back a joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) authorizing Lieutenant T. B. M. Mason, United States Navy, to accept a medal conferred by the King of Italy for extinguishing a fire on a powder-ship.

The joint resolution, which was read, authorizes Lieutenant Theodor B. M. Mason, of the United States Navy, to accept a silver medal, tendered him by the King of Italy, in appreciation of services rendered by him to the Italian bark Delaide, in rescuing said vessel from fire in the harbor of Callao, Peru, June 25, 1874.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF CAPTAIN J. G. TODD.

Mr. KIMMEL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1127, a bill (H. R. No. 4416) referring the claim of the legal representatives of the late Captain J. G. Todd, of Texas, to the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, refers the claim of the legal representatives of the late Captain J. G. Todd, of Texas, to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the same to judgment with right of appeal as in other cases, provided that said suit be instituted within twelve months from the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KIMMEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

U. U. DOTY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported adversely on the petition of U. U. Doty, asking compensation for the use by the United States of his invention in torpedoes and torpedo machinery; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. C. VAN CORT.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Mrs. C. Van Cort, asking compensation for use by the United States of her invention in torpedoes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SECOR & CO., AND PERRINE, SECOR & CO.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back adversely the petition and statement of Secor & Co., and Perrine, Secor & Co.; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANNA moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATHANIEL M'KAY.

Mr. HANNA also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1969) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANNA moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REANEY, SON & ARCHBOLD.

Mr. HANNA also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 3137) for the relief of Reaney, Son & Archbold; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANNA moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DONALD M'KAY.

Mr. HANNA also, from the same committee, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 3128) for the relief of Donald McKay; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANNA moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IRON-CLAD CONTRACTORS.

Mr. HANNA also, from the same committee, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 1264) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HANNA moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMANDER BUSHROD B. TAYLOR, ETC.

Mr. HANNA also, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HANNA. I am directed by a majority of the Committee on Naval Affairs to report this joint resolution, and as the accompanying report has not yet been printed, and action is desired this morning, perhaps I had better state the points of the report.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to organize a board of three officers, not below the grade of rear-admiral, who shall examine into the cases of Commander Bushrod B. Taylor, and such other officers of the Navy as did not have opportunity to appear in person before the board created by virtue of joint resolution of July 1, 1870, as may deem themselves unjustly passed over by the promotions made in conformity with the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, and such officers shall have the right to appear in person and present to such board their cause of grievance. The board so organized shall report their conclusions to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall report the same to Congress.

Mr. HANNA. The members of the House will bear in mind that in 1866 Congress passed an act defining the number of officers in the Navy and fixing their grade. One provision of that act made it the duty of the Secretary in appointing the officers to have due regard for their battle records. In pursuance of that statute the then Secretary named the persons whom he constituted the various naval officers. There were divers complaints made by reason of the action of the Secretary of the Navy. In 1870 to remedy these complaints Congress passed a resolution creating a board of three naval officers to examine into all the cases where there were complaints and to report to Congress whether or not there was just cause of grievance. That board convened and examined the various cases presented, and as to some of them reported that the officers complaining had been unjustly passed over.

Commander Taylor at the time of the passage of this resolution and at the time that board convened belonged to the Asiatic squadron. A majority of the naval commanders are of opinion that it was the right of these officers to appear in person before this board and present their case. Commander Taylor did not arrive in the United States until after that board had practically adjourned. He obtained leave of absence for the purpose of appearing in person before the board. Your committee did not undertake to say that the action of that board would have been different if he had thus appeared; but your committee are of the opinion, that is, the majority of the committee are of opinion, that it was his legal right to appear in person and present his cause of grievance.

Now, the resolution which the majority of the committee directed me to report is simply this: that as regards such officers as desired to appear in person before the board and who by reason of no fault of theirs were prevented from appearing, a new board for the relief of such cases shall be convened. There are a few other cases besides Commander Taylor's in this condition, at least two others, and the object of this resolution is to create a new board composed of officers of the same rank who may afford relief in the cases of officers who did not have an opportunity to appear in person and present their case. That is the real object and purpose of the resolution and a majority of the committee deem that but an act of justice in the premises.

The SPEAKER. What action does the gentleman desire on the resolution?

Mr. HANNA. I wish to ask the previous question upon its passage after the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] has been heard.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I regret to state that I was not able to concur with the majority of the committee in making this report. My observation has been and is that nothing has occasioned more heart-burning and discord in the Navy than the act to which reference has been made. Probably at the time of its passage it may have been called for in the interest of meritorious officers. Yet it has been from the date of its passage down to the present moment a subject of complaint among naval officers, and to-day the men who were distinguished by the administration of Mr. Lincoln and who were distinguished by succeeding administrations for meritorious and gallant services rendered during the recent war are in a position, if this resolution passes, to have that distinction disturbed by the action of a reviewing board.

I stand here to-day, Mr. Speaker, ready to render tribute to the men who performed gallant and distinguished service and who have been noted and marked and promoted for that service. I do not like to see the distinction they have received disturbed. Having made this statement I shall not further antagonize the action of my committee.

Mr. HANNA. I desire to make but one suggestion. There is nothing, either in the object or the purpose or in what will be the practical effect of the adoption of this resolution, I think, to interfere with the rank of other officers. It simply enables this gallant officer to have the same right meted out to him that was meted out to others; and I think this fair and right.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HANNA moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMANDER EDWARD B. M'CREA.

Mr. HANNA. I am also instructed by the majority of the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the memorial of Commander Edward B. M'Crea, United States Navy, similar to the one just reported upon, and to move that it be laid on the table, and the accompanying report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMANDER HENRY ERBEN.

Mr. HANNA. I am also instructed by the majority of the Committee on Naval Affairs to make a favorable report on the memorial of Henry Erben, commander, United States Navy, stating that in his case the provisions of joint resolution No. 93, approved July 1, 1870, have not been complied with and asking relief in the premises; and I move that it be laid on the table, and the report printed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The report is a favorable one, and states that the case is covered like the foregoing by the resolution which has just been adopted.

The memorial was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ELIAS D. BRUNER.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1248) for the relief of Elias D. Bruner; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that the accompanying report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

QUARANTINE HOSPITAL, HAMPTON ROADS, VIRGINIA.

Mr. MORSE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4417) to provide for the establishment of a quarantine hospital in Hampton Roads, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL T. ANDERSON.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 145) for the relief of the administrator of Samuel T. Anderson, of Baltimore; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. D. GRAHAM.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1404) for the relief of J. D. Graham; which was laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WARD MARSTON.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, also from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Lieutenant-Colonel Ward Marston, of the United States Marine Corps, to be promoted to the rank of colonel and to be retired with the pay of that rank; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN D. M'GILL.

Mr. HARMER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4418) for the relief of John D. McGill; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PETER MEAGHER.

Mr. HARMER also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4419) for the relief of Peter Meagher; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ISABELLA R. M'GUNNIGLE.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2211) for the relief of Isabella R. McGunnigle; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 86) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THORNTON A. JENKINS.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2315) for the relief of Thornton A. Jenkins; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2314) for the relief of Thornton A. Jenkins, a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, on the retired list; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. ODELL.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of J. Odell, a "pay clerk" in the United States Navy, asking to be retired by having extended to him the provisions of the acts of Congress approved December 21, 1861, and March 3, 1873; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HORACE E. MULAN.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3254, a bill (H. R. No. 4420) to restore Horace E. Mulan to his original position on the active list as a lieutenant-commander in the Navy of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask that the bill be considered at this time. The bill was read. It provides that the action of the board by which Lieutenant-Commander Horace E. Mulan was examined for promotion be set aside and declared null and void, and that he be restored to his original position on the active list as a lieutenant-commander; and it authorizes and directs the President of the United States to organize a naval examining board for the examination of Horace E. Mulan, late a lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy, and if said Mulan should establish to the satisfaction of said board his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all his duties at sea, then the President is authorized to nominate, and by and with the consent of the Senate to appoint, the said Horace E. Mulan a commander on the active list of the United States Navy next on the list after Fredric Rodgers, and to take rank from the date on which he was entitled to such promotion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER-GENERAL, FRENCH EXPOSITION.

Mr. MONROE. The Committee on Foreign Affairs have instructed me to report a joint resolution, which I ask may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the President in appointing an assistant commissioner-general to the international industrial exposition to be held in Paris in 1878, with the powers and duties prescribed by the second section of the joint resolution of Congress in relation to said exposition, approved December 15, 1877, may select such assistant commissioner-general from the country at large, and not be restricted in such selection to States from which no one of the additional commissioners provided for in said resolution is appointed.

The SPEAKER. This is a public resolution. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to report it at the present time.

Mr. MONROE. I am aware that this is not strictly a private measure, although it relates to the appointment of a single officer. I beg permission to state in one word the object of the provision, after which I think no objection will be offered.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. MONROE. My explanation will occupy but a moment, and then I think there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] withdraw his objection so as to allow an explanation?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. MONROE. I have here a letter from the Secretary of State, which explains the whole matter. I would like to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects absolutely to the reporting of the joint resolution, it being public in its nature.

REBECCA AND AUGUSTA MILLER.

Mr. MACKEY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 870) granting a pension to Rebecca and Augusta Miller, daughters of Brigadier-General James Miller, of the war of 1812.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Rebecca and Augusta Miller, daughters of James Miller, a brigadier-general in the war of 1812, and to pay them a pension of $15 each per month.

Mr. MACKEY. I call for the reading of the report, which explains the character of this claim.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, to which was referred Senate bill No. 870, granting a pension to Rebecca and Augusta Miller, daughters of Brigadier-General James Miller, of the war of 1812, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

It is of evidence that the father of the petitioners was appointed by President Jefferson a major of the Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, on the 3d of March, 1809, the same taking rank from the 8th day of July, 1808. He was an active and efficient officer during the Indian wars, and during the war of 1812 was one of the bravest and most gallant officers in the military service of the Government. At the battles of Brownstown, Fort George, Fort Erie, and at Niagara, where he made one of the most desperate charges on record, he won distinguished honors. After the battle of Niagara he was promoted to the rank of a brigadier-general, and on the 3d day of November, 1814, Congress awarded him a gold medal and the unanimous thanks of that body.

The State of New York presented him a sword, which bears the following inscription: "Presented by His Excellency Daniel D. Tompkins, governor of the State of New York, pursuant to resolutions of the senate and assembly of said State, to Brigadier-General James Miller, as a testimony of gratitude for his services and admiration of his gallant conduct."

Governor Tompkins in presenting this testimonial said: "Before the late war and in its early stages it was your lot to contend with the merciless savage foe. Your activity, enterprise, and undaunted courage are as conspicuous in that service as in the more recent scenes of civilized warfare in which you bore so memorable a part. The charges at Brownstown and Bridge-water and the assault on the enemy's lines at Erie will bear comparison with the most splendid achievements of history, as instances not only of the most consummate skill, but of the most sublime and elevated personal courage. These deeds have crowned you and your companions with unfading laurels, have shed a luster upon the American Army, and added as well to the integrity and strength of the Union as to our national influence and glory abroad."

It is also in evidence that the petitioners are now in a state of destitution and without support of a character to provide means for their daily wants; that they inherited but little property from their father; that they are now residing on a farm in Temple, New Hampshire, which is in such a dilapidated condition as to take away almost their entire support. The present governor of the State of New Hampshire, His Excellency R. F. Prescott, certifies to these facts, and states further in their behalf that they have delayed to the last moment to make any request for a pension, and that the greatest necessity now compels them. The following is a quotation from his petition in their behalf:

"They feel that their claims upon the liberality of the country are well founded."

Their father's services in the war of 1812 were faithful, arduous, and unremitting. He was always at his post of duty, and he was never sufficiently remunerated for the great dangers and hardships that he endured. We most sincerely recommend to Congress the careful consideration of the request of these ladies. It is in fact but paying a debt long since contracted, but nevertheless binding on a nation always ready to reward all valuable services and proud of her sons when they perform such deeds of gallantry and heroism as were performed by the father of these petitioners."

This petition is also endorsed by Hon. E. A. Straw, James A. Weston, P. C. Cheney, Justin R. Smyth, J. Goodwin, and Walter Harriman, all ex-governors of the State of New Hampshire; also by L. E. Sargent, chief justice of the supreme court of that State; Daniel Clark, late United States Senator; E. N. Bell, late Member of Congress; Henry K. Oliver, mayor of Salem, Massachusetts; Hon. John L. Chamberlain, of Maine, and 7 other prominent citizens of the State of New Hampshire.

In addition to the foregoing, His Excellency, Hon. L. Robinson, governor of the State of New York, petitions in the most earnest and impressive terms the Congress of the United States to grant the claimants the pensions prayed for, relating the heroic services of their father and their present destitute condition.

The petitioners, Rebecca and Augusta Miller, state that they nursed and attended their father all through the years of his decrepitude and decay, and that now, aged and afflicted, (one of them with chronic rheumatism,) they are in such disabled condition as to be unable by labor to sustain themselves. They therefore, in consideration of the eminent services of their father, pray that a pension may be granted them.

The committee, recognizing the distinguished services of Brigadier-General James Miller, the father of the petitioners, and taking into consideration the fact that he never while living received from the Government a pension or other remuneration for those services, other than the salary attached to his position, and likewise the present destitute condition of his daughters, believe that a pension should be granted them, and therefore report favorably upon such bill, No. 870, and return the same to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MACKEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM BLANCETT.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1616) granting a pension to William Blancett, of Patrick County, Virginia, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DAVID MITCHELL AND MARY FULLER.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2293) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the names of David Mitchell and Mary Fuller; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MACKEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL A. GIBBEY.

Mr. NORCROSS. The Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and the War of 1812, have directed me to move that they be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3322) granting a pension to Daniel A. Gibbey, a soldier of the war of 1812, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

LAURA SEAMAN.

Mr. KIMMEL, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 705) granting a pension to Laura Seaman, widow of Elric Seaman, a soldier in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. KIMMEL, from the same committee, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3052) granting a pension to Jane Moore, widow of Stephen H. Moore, captain of First Baltimore Volunteers in the war of 1812; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1344) granting a pension to Bright Byrd, a soldier in the North Carolina Volunteers in the war of 1812.

Mr. KIMMEL moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills were laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. RICE, of Ohio, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4312) granting pensions to teamsters and Indians who were in the service of the United States in the war of 1812, and to widows who were remarried; and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

MARTHA J. ROBINSON.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 471) granting a pension to Martha J. Robinson, widow of James H. Robinson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

OLIVER H. IRONS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 636) granting a pension to Oliver H. Irons, late sergeant Company D, Twenty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

AUGUST MELLON.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 990 a bill (H. R. No. 4421) granting a pension to August Mellon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back adversely in the following cases; and the same were laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 991) granting a pension to William Buckley, private Company C, Fiftieth Ohio Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1362) granting an increase of pension to William D. Coughlin.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE FRITZ.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 3440) granting a pension to George Fritz, First Regiment United States Dragoons; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARIA L. MAXWELL.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 2289) granting a pension to Maria L. Maxwell, widow of William C. Maxwell, Company D, Twelfth Ohio Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN HALEY.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 1959) granting a pension to John Haley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARCELLUS WILSON.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3605) restoring the name of Marcellus Wilson, of the Regiment of Mounted Riflemen in the Mexican war, to the pension-roll, with an amendment; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying favorable report, ordered to be printed.

PENSION FOR LIEUTENANT-COMMANDERS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2721, a bill (H. R. No. 4422) to provide a pension for lieutenant-commanders in the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask for action on this bill at the present time, and when it is understood I do not think there will be a single objection to it. The only amendment proposed to section 4695, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States is to insert after the words "lieutenant commanding" the words "lieutenant-commander." There was no such rank as lieutenant-commander at the time this section was enacted into law. Shortly after the passage of the present pension law that rank was created, and this bill simply provides for the insertion of the words "lieutenant-commander" after the words "lieutenant commanding" in that law.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 4695, title 57, of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 4695. The pension for total disability shall be as follows, namely: For lieutenant-colonel and all officers of higher rank in the military service and in the Marine Corps, and for captain, and all officers of higher rank, commander, surgeon, paymaster, and chief engineer, respectively ranking with commander by law, lieutenant-commanding, lieutenant-commander, and master commanding, in the naval service, $30 per month; for major in the military service and in the Marine Corps, and lieutenant, surgeon, paymaster, and chief engineer, respectively ranking with lieutenant by law, and passed assistant surgeon in the naval service, $25 per month; for captain in the military service and in the Marine Corps, chaplain in the Army, and provost-marshal, professor of mathematics, master, assistant surgeon, assistant paymaster, and chaplain in the naval service, $20 per month; for first lieutenant in the military service and in the Marine Corps, acting assistant or contract surgeon, and deputy provost-marshal, $17 per month; for second lieutenant in the military service and in the Marine Corps, first assistant engineer, ensign, and pilot in the naval service, and enrolling-officer, $15 per month; for cadet-midshipman, passed midshipman, midshipman, clerk of admirals and paymasters and of other officers commanding vessels, second and third assistant engineer, master's mate, and all warrant-officers in the naval service, $10 per month; and for all other persons whose rank or office is not mentioned in this section, $8 per month; and the masters, pilots, engineers, sailors, and crews upon the gun-boats and war vessels shall be entitled to receive the pension allowed herein to those of like rank in the naval service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL ASHBY.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions. I happened not to be in the hall when the committee was called.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2455) granting a pension to Daniel Ashby; and the same was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL JAMES SHIELDS.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 931) granting a pension to James Shields.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Shields, late a brigadier-general of the United States Army, at the rate of $50 per month, said pension to be in lieu of that which he now receives.

Mr. MILLS. Is it in order to move an amendment to that bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MILLS. Then I move to strike out "$50" and insert in lieu thereof "$100."

Mr. DUNNELL. I object to the passage of the bill now.

The SPEAKER. On what ground?

Mr. DUNNELL. I make the point that it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I submit that the objection of the gentleman comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The bill was before the House; and being before the House, it was open to amendment, and an amendment had been submitted. The Chair thinks the point is made too late.

The amendment of Mr. MILLS was adopted.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I move to amend by changing the word "Army" to "Volunteers;" so that it will read "late a brigadier-general of the United States Volunteers."

Mr. WALSH. The volunteers were the Army.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. There is no objection to the amendment of the gentleman; but I submit that the United States Volunteers when they were acting as soldiers were the United States Army.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. My colleague and myself cannot differ about the fact. The technical fact is fixed in our legislation, and whether he likes it or not I think the fact should be recognized.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. We make no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALSH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JACOB F. RUTH.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3059) granting a pension to Jacob F. Ruth, late private Company I, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery Volunteers; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MINOR HEIRS OF WILLIAM S. PRICE.

Mr. WALSH also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1435, a bill (H. R. No. 4423) granting a pension to the minor heirs of William S. Price, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN M'INTYRE.

Mr. MACKEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1946) granting a pension to John McIntyre; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS WHO HAVE LOST ONE HAND AND ONE FOOT.

Mr. MACKEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (H. R. No. 3081) amending chapter 73 of the act approved February 28, 1877, relating to the pensions of soldiers who have lost one hand and one foot.

The SPEAKER. This is a public bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he may report it at this time.

Mr. SINNICKSON. I must object, as there are other private bills to be reported.

SYVERT A. ANDERSON.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 734) granting a pension to Syvert A. Anderson; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DERRICK F. HAMLINK.

Mr. SINNICKSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 3305, a bill (H. R. No. 4424) granting a pension to Derrick F. Hamlink; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

HENRY W. HIGLEY.

Mr. SINNICKSON also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2351) granting a pension to Henry W. Higley, of Lena, Illinois; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. GOODE. Pending that motion I desire to submit a proposition that all general debate upon the pending bill, the bill in reference to the College of William and Mary, in Virginia, be limited to two hours.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest to the gentleman that that order had better not be made just now. The committee can rise and get an order from the House closing debate whenever it deems it necessary. There are several gentlemen who still desire to speak.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia is in order.

Mr. CONGER. I know it is, but I hope he will not make that motion now.

Mr. GOODE. I desire to say that one day has already been occupied in the discussion of this bill.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has occupied his time.

Mr. GOODE. Yes, and other gentlemen have occupied theirs. I propose that there shall be fair play in the matter, and that an equal division be made between the opponents and the friends of the measure.

Mr. CONGER. The committee reporting the bill have consumed a large portion of the time, and, if the motion now made by the gentleman from Virginia be agreed to, no opportunity will be given to other gentlemen who desire to speak.

Mr. GOODE. There are gentlemen on the committee who I have no doubt will give part of their time to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. But they have already divided that amount of time.

Mr. GOODE. Well, I do not want the measure discussed here so that it will never be voted upon. We have had one day's debate already, and it seems to me that a body like this after two days' discussion might be presumed to know something of the merits of the bill. The gentleman from Michigan has had ample opportunity heretofore to ventilate other questions; and I think we might vote upon this bill, even if unfortunately he should be cut off.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that the gentleman had better not press his attempt to shut off debate on this proposition.

Mr. MILLS. It is pressed by other gentlemen who desire to see some other claims on the Private Calendar acted on. We cannot afford to allow the whole time given to the Private Calendar to be engrossed by a single bill.

Mr. CONGER. I wish I knew that that is the objection to further debate upon this bill.

Mr. GOODE. I have been appealed to by gentlemen on this side to limit debate to one hour; but I thought that two hours ought to be given.

Mr. REED. The whole truth about this thing had better be known.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE,] that when the House next resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar all debate upon the unfinished business be closed in two hours.

Mr. HANNA. I move to amend by inserting "three hours."

Mr. BRIGHT. The time to be divided equally.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "three hours" and inserting "four hours."

Mr. CONGER. I supposed that I had the floor for the next hour. I had, according to the rules, but a gentleman of the committee claims that he had the floor for the next hour, and it would be unbecoming in me to claim the floor as against a gentleman of the committee, especially as I understand he is upon the same side on which I desire to occupy the attention of the House. Now if only two hours be given I cannot have the time I desire for myself and some others to whom I have promised a portion of an hour. I desire one hour that I may give a part of it to some gentlemen who have no other opportunity. Under the motion for two hours, if the time be equally divided, I should have no time at all.

Mr. GOODE. A number of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber desire also to speak, and if this arrangement is entered into it is proposed that one hour be divided among four or five gentlemen. I submit that some arrangement of the same kind might be made on the other side.

Mr. CONGER. It cannot be arranged, because the gentleman who is entitled to the next hour can have it in spite of any arrangement that the House may make.

Mr. GOODE. I am willing, if it will accommodate gentlemen on the other side, to say "two hours and a half." It seems to me that is ample.

Mr. CONGER. I desire half an hour and perhaps more myself, and I trust that the House will be willing to give me my hour.

Mr. GOODE. Well, if we cannot agree we must take the sense of the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I have submitted a motion to allow four hours for this debate. I desire to speak upon this measure, which is of some importance, and I am to have a portion of the time of one of the members of the committee. I submit that if we do not have four hours gentlemen who wish to speak cannot be accommodated. I trust that the friends of the bill will agree to give four hours. We can get through to-day. I am willing to stay here until we get through.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, to amend the amendment of Mr. HANNA by fixing four hours instead of three, the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the House consent that three hours be given for this discussion, to be equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the measure.

The SPEAKER. That, as the Chair understands, is the pending motion.

The question being taken on the motion, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 60, noes 80.

Mr. CONGER. The friends of this measure have had two hours for discussion and this side has had but one.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] to limit debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending bill to two hours.

The question being put,

The SPEAKER said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays on this proposition. I would like to see whether this measure is to be forced through without proper discussion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GOODE. Will gentlemen on the other side accept an arrangement to allow two hours and a half for debate? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CONGER. Give us two hours and your side take one; that will make the time even, which is what we have asked.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 107, nays 94, not voting 90; as follows:

YEAS—107.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I desire to announce that I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan. I desire also to state that my colleague, Mr. BROGDEN, is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. FORT. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. BOYD, is detained at his room on account of sickness.

Mr. ELAM. My colleague, Mr. ELLIS, is paired for this day with Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. As this seems to be a political question, and as I am paired upon political questions with Mr. QUINN, of New York, I decline to vote.

Mr. PEDDIE. I desire to state that I am paired with Mr. DEAN. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. HUNGERFORD. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HART. Mr. MCKENZIE. My colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. POWERS. If Mr. CARLISLE were present he would vote "ay," and I presume Mr. POWERS would vote "no."

Mr. FORNEY. I am paired upon this question with Mr. WAIT, of Connecticut. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. BANKS, is paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. TIPTON, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. TOWNSEND.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. ROBERTS, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Upon this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BISBEE. If he were here, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I am paired upon this question with Mr. FREEMAN. If he were here, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. GOODE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. CONGER. And pending that motion I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. And pending that motion I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WOOD. I hope not.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move to take a recess until this evening.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order pending a motion to adjourn. If the motion to adjourn were agreed to it would cut off the evening session; but the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLIS] would not necessarily cut it off.

Mr. RIDDLE. I will state that I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] desires to go on with the post-office appropriation bill to-morrow.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 30, nays 172, not voting 89; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn over.

During the vote,
Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, said: I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. ELLSWORTH.

Mr. ELAM. My colleague, Mr. ELLIS, is paired with Mr. FOSTER for the remainder of this day.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. WALSH. My colleague, Mr. ROBERTS, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan.

Mr. FORNEY. I am paired with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BISBEE.

Mr. PEDDIE. I am paired with Mr. DEAN.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. BANKS, is paired on all questions with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WOOD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adjourn till Monday next; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays. It is time we want.

Mr. WOOD. I withdraw the proposition.

Mr. CONGER. Then I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays. [Laughter.]

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 535) for the relief of the executors of the estate of John S. Miller, deceased;

An act (H. R. No. 3739) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States; and

An act (H. R. No. 4242) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain.

Mr. BRAGG. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now pending.

The House divided; and there were yeas 10, nays not counted.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. HARRISON, for a few days; and
To Mr. FOSTER, until Monday next.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] also asks to be relieved from further service on the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3740) to provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for prior years, and for other purposes. If there be no objection, it will be ordered accordingly.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints Mr. HALE, of Maine, in place of Mr. FOSTER, of Ohio, as one of the conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 22, nays 169, not voting 100; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the vote,

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, said: I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. ELAM. My colleague, Mr. ELLIS, is paired with Mr. FOSTER for the rest of this day.

Mr. MCKENZIE. My colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. WALSH. My colleague, Mr. ROBERTS, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BISBEE.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. BANKS, is paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan.

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with Mr. ACKLEN.

Mr. PEDDIE. I am paired with Mr. DEAN.

Mr. FORNEY. I am paired with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. I am paired with Mr. GIBSON.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to move to reconsider the vote on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move, then, that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HENDEE. Will the gentleman yield to me to move that the House take a recess.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. HENDEE. Then I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENDEE. Will this business come up during the evening session or the District of Columbia business?

The SPEAKER. The House heretofore determined this evening's session should be devoted to District of Columbia business.

Mr. HENDEE. By unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to a suspension of the rules.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does it require unanimous consent to do away with the evening session?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the business ordered by unanimous consent to be done this evening is the same as though it were ordered under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is there any way of reaching the pension bills on the Calendar until the bill now pending is disposed of?

Mr. CONGER. Has the vote been announced on the motion for taking a recess?

The SPEAKER. The motion has not yet been voted upon. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] demanded the yeas and nays, and thirty-four gentlemen rose—not one-fifth of the last vote, and the Chair so stated.

Several MEMBERS. Count the other side.

The negative vote was taken; and there were 91 noes.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. What will be the business at the evening session?

The SPEAKER. District of Columbia business, as directed by an order of the House which was obtained by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDEE. If I may be allowed, I desire to make a statement in regard to the business for this evening. When on Monday I made the request for the evening session I stated it was for the consideration of several bills which had been prepared by the Committee for the District of Columbia, not including the bill providing a permanent form of government for the District, as that was of more importance and it would be taken up and disposed of before this evening. That bill was not disposed of, and the committee have had it under consideration and have agreed to amend it and report it as amended by striking out what was known as the property qualification both as to the commissioners and the council, and also striking out the requirement that the voters should have paid a poll-tax. The committee has also agreed to report the bill with an amendment which was offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] in regard to the interest. We supposed those were the main objections to the bill, and that if it had been as it is now proposed to be reported it would have passed. If there be no objection I shall ask the House this evening to consider that bill with the others.

Mr. STENGER. I object.

Mr. ITTNER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Vermont if the clause in regard to the ten years' qualification of the commissioners is modified.

Mr. HENDEE. It is not. I desire to be perfectly open and fair and that no advantage shall be taken of any one.

The SPEAKER. There is objection. The Chair thinks that under the circumstances the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDEE. Then the business of the evening session will be confined to such bills as the committee have agreed upon other than that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on taking the vote by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question recurred on Mr. HENDEE's motion that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock; and being taken, there were—ayes 97, noes 64.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been refused. It is competent to call for tellers.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GOODE and Mr. HENDEE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 74.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote, by unanimous consent leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. KEIFER, for one week after to-day, on account of important business;

To Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, until Wednesday next; and

To Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey, for four days from Monday next.

The result of the vote on Mr. HENDEE's motion was then announced; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The business of this evening, by direction of the House, will be exclusively confined to reports from the District of Columbia Committee, and during the evening the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. VANCE, will act as Speaker pro tempore.

The chair was taken by Mr. VANCE as Speaker pro tempore.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think for the first time in my life in this House I have risen to a personal matter. I find in the Star of this evening a statement made that I have verbally requested Mr. GLOVER, the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department to investigate the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House. There is not a syllable of truth in the statement, nor a scintilla nor a gleam of warrant for said allegation. First, I know nothing of the action of the Sergeant-at-Arms in the discharge of his duties that needs investigation; second, I have never had any conference whatever with Mr. GLOVER on the subject, nor have I directly or indirectly had any communication with him as to such matter.

I think it is due to the Sergeant-at-Arms to state this. If I myself was the only one involved I never would have noticed it; but as the statement reflects perhaps on the honesty, or the fidelity and honor of another, I at once and promptly give it this contradiction.

INSPECTION OF FLOUR.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4425) to alter and amend a law of the District of Columbia relative to the inspection of flour; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I ask for the present consideration of this bill.

The bill was read. It provides that section 6 of an act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, approved August 21, 1871, entitled "An act relating to inspection of flour," be amended so as to read:

That all and every barrel and half barrel of flour manufactured in the District, or brought to the same for sale, shall be subject to the examination of the inspector, by boring, searching, and trying it through with an instrument not exceeding five-eighths of an inch in diameter, to be provided by the inspector for that purpose, who shall afterward plug up the hole with a round plug made of soft wood, so as to prevent the entrance of water, and if the inspector shall judge the same to be merchantable according to the direction of this act he shall, at the time of inspecting, mark or brand on the head or quarter of every barrel and half barrel of flour, in letters one-half inch in length, the word "Georgetown," if inspected in Georgetown, and "Washington," if inspected in Washington, together with the word or words designating the degree of fineness which he shall, at the time of inspecting, determine said flour entitled to, with the exception of the degree of superfine, which he shall mark or brand over the quarter; and the several degrees in quality shall be distinguished as follows: family, extra, superfine, fine, and first middlings. And for the inspection of which the said inspector shall have and receive of the owner or agent of said flour, for each and every barrel and half barrel, one cent and one drawing of flour for all inspected in Washington or Georgetown; and every barrel or half barrel of flour which shall prove, on examination thereof, to be unmerchantable, according to the true intent and meaning of this act, the said inspector shall mark on the head or quarter with a broad arrow, and no barrel or half barrel of flour, not examined and branded by the inspector as aforesaid, shall be sold within the District, under penalty of $1 for each and every barrel or half barrel, to be paid by the person or persons so offending.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. Under the existing law the charge for inspection of flour is two cents in Washington and one cent in Georgetown. This law was passed when very little inspection was done in Washington, when nearly all the inspection took place in Georgetown. Since that time the business of inspection in the city of Washington has become quite as large as in Georgetown. This bill is reported in accordance with the petition of a very large number of citizens of Washington. I am told by persons familiar with the business that the compensation of the inspector from inspections in Washington if the rate be fixed at one cent as provided in this bill will amount to $2,000 a year; so that there is now no reason why the charge for inspection in Washington should not be the same as in Georgetown.

Mr. CONGER. Does this bill describe the qualities of the flour to be inspected?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. The bill provides that the quality shall be branded upon the barrel.

Mr. CONGER. But it does not provide what the quality shall amount to?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. It is an exact copy of the existing law, except that the charge of two cents in Washington is changed to one cent. It does not disturb the branding of grades at all. There is no change in that respect. The only change is in the charge for inspection.

Mr. CONGER. This, then, will prevent the sale of any flour not manufactured here?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. Oh, no. These brands of flour from other places are all inspected.

Mr. CONGER. Does this bill make any provision for the inspection of what is called in the West the "patent flour"—the flour manufactured by the "middlings-purifier" process—the new process?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. The only change which this bill makes is, as I have said, simply in the charge for inspection.

Mr. CONGER. Should not this bill, then, provide for this new kind of flour manufactured by the new process?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. My colleague means the Minnesota flour?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. We make no special provision for that at all.

Mr. CONGER. Then this would prevent the sale of that class of flour if it cannot be classified under one of the heads which the bill provides for. I understand that this bill prohibits the sale of any flour that cannot be classified under the terms of the bill. The gentleman is aware that flour made by the "middlings-purifier" process is a different kind of flour from that which has been used.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. So I suppose.

Mr. CONGER. I would ask the gentleman whether this bill is intended to prevent citizens of Washington and Georgetown from enjoying the use of this better class of western flour?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. Not at all. If they want to buy it they can do so.

Mr. CONGER. Then perhaps the bill ought to provide for this class of flour being sold here and not make it penal to sell it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. If my colleague wants to offer an amendment I will not object. The committee have taken the old law and modified it in respect to the charge for inspection. It has never contained any provision in regard to the class of flour the gentleman speaks of, and I do not know that it has ever reached this part of the country.

Mr. CONGER. If I understand the fact, when the old law was passed the Michigan white winter wheat and the flour manufactured by the "middlings-purifier" process were unknown in this part of the country. I hope my colleague will include in this bill flour made from Michigan and Minnesota wheat, and not impose a penalty for selling such flour in this city. As the gentleman knows, it would be better for the inhabitants here if they could have our flour.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I think it would be better for them to have the Minnesota flour, but the imitations made in Michigan have been failures, I believe. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DOG TAX.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I am instructed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to report back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 4055) to create a revenue in the District of Columbia by levying a tax upon all the dogs therein, to make such dogs personal property, and for other purposes, with amendments, and to ask for its consideration at the present time.

The bill, which was read, in its first section provides that there shall be levied a tax of $1.50 each per annum upon all dogs owned or kept in the District of Columbia; said tax to be collected as other taxes in said District are or may be collected.

The second section provides that it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes, upon receipt of said tax, to give to the person paying the same, for each dog so paid for, a suitable metallic tag, stamped with the year, showing that said tax has been duly paid; and he shall keep a record of all such payments, with the date thereof, and the name, color, and sex of such dog, and the name of the person claiming any dog so paid for; and a copy of such record, certified under the hand and official seal of the said collector, which shall be given to any person demanding the same, upon payment of twenty-five cents therefor, shall be prima facie evidence of such payment in any court of the District of Columbia.

The third section provides that the poundmaster of the District of Columbia shall, during the entire year, seize all dogs found running at large without the tax-tag, issued by the collector aforesaid, attached, and shall impound the same; and if, within twenty-four hours, the same are not redeemed, by the owners thereof, by the payment of $2, they shall be sold or destroyed, as the poundmaster may deem advisable; and any sale made by virtue hereof shall be deemed valid to all intents and purposes in all the courts of the District of Columbia.

The fourth section provides that any dog wearing the tax-tag hereinbefore provided for shall be permitted to run at large in the District of Columbia and shall be regarded as personal property in all the courts of said District; and any person injuring or destroying the same shall be liable to a civil action for damages, which, upon proof of said injuring or killing, may be awarded in a sum equal to the value usually put upon such property by persons buying and selling the same, subject to such modification as the particular circumstances of the case may make proper, and also shall be deemed to have committed a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $30, or, in default of payment thereof, to imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than thirty days.

The fifth section provides that any person owning any dog so recorded in the collector's office shall be liable in a civil action for any damage done by said dog to the full amount of the injury indicated.

The sixth section provides that it shall be the duty of any person owning or possessing a dog to place, or cause to be placed and kept, around the neck of such dog, a collar, on which shall be marked and engraved, in legible and durable characters, the name of the owner or possessor, and the letters "D. C.," and to which collar must be attached the insignia or tax-tag furnished by the District tax-collector, in accordance with the first and second sections of this law, under the penalty of not less than five nor more than ten dollars; and if any person shall put, or cause to be put, a collar, with the insignia or tax-tag, around the neck of any dog owned or possessed by any person or persons residing in the District, without having obtained a license for keeping such animal, he, she, or they shall forfeit and pay the sum of not less than five nor more than ten dollars for each and every offense.

The seventh section provides that whenever it shall be made to appear to the commissioners that there are good reasons for believing that any dog or dogs within the District are mad, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to issue a proclamation requiring that all dogs shall, for a period to be defined in the proclamation, wear good, substantial muzzles securely put on, so as to prevent them from biting or snapping; and any dog going at large during the period defined by the commissioners without such muzzle shall be taken by the poundmaster and impounded, subject to the provisions of section 3.

The eighth section provides that any person who shall remove, or cause to be removed, the collar and insignia or tax-tag from the neck of any dog, or entice any properly licensed dog into any inclosure for the purpose of taking off its collar or insignia, or shall for such purpose decoy or entice any animal out of the inclosure or house of its owner or possessor, or shall seize or molest any dog while held or led by any person, or shall bring any dog into the District for the purpose of taking up and killing or selling the same, shall forfeit and pay a sum of not less than five nor more than twenty dollars.

The ninth section provides that if any owner or possessor of a fierce or dangerous dog permit the same to go at large in the District of Columbia, to the danger or annoyance of the inhabitants, he shall forfeit and pay, for the first offense, a sum not exceeding $5; for the second offense, a sum not exceeding $10; for the third, a sum not exceeding $20; and upon a fourth conviction for the same offense, the commissioners shall immediately cause the dog, upon account of which the conviction takes place, to be slain and buried.

The tenth section provides that all acts or parts of acts now in force in the District of Columbia inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will now be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in section 1, line 3, by striking out $1.50 and inserting $2. On page 4, section 9, line 4, strike out all after the word "offense" to word "ten" in line 5, as follows: "A sum not exceeding $5; for the second offense, a sum not exceeding $10; so it will read, 'for the first offense $10; also, in line 6, strike out the word 'third' and insert the word 'second; also, in the same line, strike out the word 'fourth' and insert the word 'third.'"

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan whether he will not be willing to have that part of the bill amended which provides that a dog shall be killed if not called for in twenty-four hours. I confess I have a weakness and regard for some dogs, and I know some families who are as much attached to their dog as to a child. Now, if a dog accidentally strays, it will not cost the public much to keep it for another twenty-four hours. I ask the gentleman to amend that part of the bill by making it forty-eight hours.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I am willing to agree to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to report back to the House a resolution together with a report to a bill (H. R. No. 4425) relative to the Washington Market Company, and ask that the report be read and the bill put upon its passage.

The bill was read a first and second time.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill in extenso.

Mr. HENDEE. Has the bill been printed?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state to the gentleman from Vermont that the bill has been printed, but recommitted to the committee, and it has been amended by the committee in its unanimous action, and the amendments have been incorporated in the bill now being reported by the Clerk.

Mr. HENDEE. Is it a substitute?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The report will explain itself. This is in lieu of the bill already pending in the House.

Mr. HENDEE. What is the number of the original bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. House bill No. 4243.

The Clerk then read the bill, as follows:

A bill relative to the Washington Market Company.

Whereas by the twelfth section of the act passed May 20, 1870, to incorporate the Washington Market Company it is provided that if the corporation of the city of Washington shall, after a period of thirty years from the approval of said act, by a vote of the council thereof, express a desire to possess itself of the market buildings and grounds mentioned in said act, Congress may authorize the corporate authorities to take possession of the same upon payment to said market-house company of a sum of money equal to a fair and just valuation of the buildings and improvements then standing on said grounds, the mode and manner of ascertaining such valuation to be determined by Congress; and

Whereas said market company agrees that the provisions of this section of said act may now be taken advantage of by the District of Columbia, as if the thirty years had expired: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Montgomery Blair and Brevet Colonel Thomas L. Casey, U. S. A., and Return J. Meigs are hereby constituted arbitrators, and shall severally take an oath before one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia well and truly to discharge and perform the duties herein required of them, which oath shall be subscribed by said arbitrators, and made of record by the clerk of said court. In case of the death, refusal, or failure, from any cause, of either of said designated persons to act as arbitrator, the vacancy shall be filled by the remaining two, and should two or more of said designated arbitrators fail or refuse to serve, their places shall be filled by the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The compensation of the arbitrators shall be fixed by the court, not to exceed $500 each, to be paid by the District and the Washington Market Company in equal proportions.

Sec. 2. Said arbitrators, after having taken said oath, shall immediately give notice to the commissioners for said District and to the Washington Market Company of the time, place, and manner of their proceeding in the premises for the purpose aforesaid. Said notice shall be served at least three days prior to the day designated by said arbitrators for hearing said parties and commencing said inquiry; and said arbitrators shall have power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and to make all necessary and proper inquiry touching the value of the buildings and improvements made by said market company upon the land aforesaid; and any false swearing or affirmation on the part of any witness before said arbitrators shall be deemed and held to be perjury, and the person or persons who may be found guilty thereof shall be punished for such offense according to the provisions of existing laws relating to perjury in the District of Columbia.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of said arbitrators, and within thirty days after the commencement of the investigation aforesaid, after having made due inquiry in the premises touching the value of said buildings or improvements, to award the fair and just value thereof to the said market company, which award shall be in writing, signed and sealed by said arbitrators, and shall be executed in triplicate, one of which shall be transmitted to and filed in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, one to the commissioners for said District, and the other to said market company. And from and after the delivery of a copy of said award to said company, the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Company," approved May 20, 1870, be, and the same is, repealed for all purposes other than to close the affairs of said company.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, upon the transmission of said award to said court, forthwith to cause a suit in the nature of a bill in equity to be commenced therein in the name of the United States of America against the said market company, which suit shall have priority over all other cases; and upon the institution thereof the court shall direct a notice to be published for ten consecutive days in some newspaper printed in the city of Washington warning all stockholders, bondholders, and others having claims against said market company to appear within twenty days thereafter and present their respective claims upon said award; and the publication of this notice as aforesaid shall be sufficient to bring all parties in interest before the court for the purposes of said case; and upon the appearance or non-appearance of any or all of the aforesaid parties, at the expiration of the time limited by said notice, the court shall send the case to a master or auditor to state an account, and report the several claims of the parties aforesaid upon said award, and said master or auditor shall proceed to ascertain and report to the court:

First. The amount of all general or special taxes that may be outstanding and unpaid against said market company, or its grounds, buildings or improvements, with all penalties and arrears of interest thereon to the date of the report.

Second. The amount claimed by the District of Columbia to be due from said market company to said District under section 14 of said act incorporating said company, being the amount claimed in the suit now pending, and all additional claims under said section to the date of such report, with interest thereon.

Third. The amount of bonds of said company under its deed of trust of May 1, 1875, which are actually outstanding in the hands of bona fide holders for value, with the names and residences of such holders, and the amount of bonds held by each, and any arrears of interest due thereon to the date of the report.

Fourth. The amount of all other claims of creditors of said market company up to the date of the report, with the names, residences, and amount due each creditor.

Fifth. The amount of stock of said company actually outstanding in the hands of bona fide holders and owners for value, with the name and residence of each, and the amount of stock held and owned by each respectively.

Sec. 5. The report of the master or auditor as to all matters not excepted to within fifteen days from and after the date of filing the same shall be final and conclusive as to all matters stated therein, and the court shall enter a decree accordingly, which shall be final and binding on all stockholders, bondholders, and other parties interested; but if exceptions are taken within that time by parties interested therein to any matter embraced in it or excluded from it by said master or auditor, the same shall be duly heard and determined, subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. The claims of the District of Columbia embraced in the first and second classes of the report shall be considered as excepted to, and shall be heard and determined by the said court as aforesaid.

Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of the clerk of said court to transmit to said commissioners, upon the passage of the decree aforesaid, copies thereof, and of the report of said master or auditor, showing what claims have been allowed by said decree and what claims have been excepted to; and thereupon said commissioners shall proceed to pay the amount awarded by the arbitrators aforesaid (less a sum to be withheld sufficient to cover the claims excepted to as aforesaid) with interest from the date of the report of the master or auditor, to the holders of the claims not excepted to, giving preference, first, to general and special taxes, with interest according to report; and, secondly, the amount which may be due the District of Columbia from the said market company under section 14 of said act incorporating said company, being the amount claimed in the suit now pending to determine the same and all additional claims under said section to the date of said report, with interest thereon according to said report. The balance of said award, if insufficient to pay the other three classes of claims, shall be paid out by said commissioners according to the decision of the said court, which shall decide all questions of priority between them, and also any question of priority between the claims of the District under said section 14, and the bondholders of said company, if such question should arise, subject to the right of appeal as provided in section 5 of this act.

Sec. 7. Whenever any of the exceptions taken as aforesaid to any of the claims reported as aforesaid shall be disposed of by final decree, it shall be the duty of the clerk to transmit a certificate thereof to the said commissioners, who shall thereupon distribute the amount of the award liberated by such decree (with interest thereon from the date of the auditor's or master's report) to the party or parties entitled thereto, with the preferences and in the manner above provided; and like distributions may be made from time to time until the whole sum awarded is disposed of.

The claim of the District of Columbia under said section 14 of the act incorporating said company, and the taxes assessed against the front land claimed to have been transferred by said company to said District, being dependent upon the legal questions involved in the suit now pending in favor of said District against said company, action on any exceptions taken to said claim and taxes shall be suspended to abide the result of such litigation; and upon the final determination thereof judgment in accordance therewith shall be entered on said exceptions.

Sec. 8. To enable the commissioners of the District to pay the amount of the award aforesaid, they are authorized and required, from time to time when necessary, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to issue and dispose of coupon bonds of the District of Columbia, of such denominations as may be convenient, and for such gross sums as may be required, bearing interest at the rate of not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, the principal payable in thirty years from their date.

Sec. 9. On the last secular day of the month within which the award hereinbefore provided for shall be filed in the supreme court aforesaid, the commissioners of said District shall be, and they hereby are, authorized and empowered to take possession of the grounds described in the aforesaid act of incorporation and the buildings thereon, for the purposes of a public market, under such regulations as they may establish, and the revenues therefrom shall be applied only to the payment of the necessary and incidental expenses of conducting said market, and to the principal and interest of the bonds hereby authorized to be issued: Provided, That the rental of said stalls and property shall not be so reduced as not to pay the expenses of keeping said property in proper repair, and of insuring the same to not less than half its value, and to reimburse the District for the interest on the bonds issued to pay the sum awarded by said arbitrators, and also a sufficient amount to create a sinking fund to pay the debt upon maturity of said bonds: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to affect any suit or claim now pending for or against said market company, or any right or privilege already acquired by persons occupying stalls or stands in said market. But said commissioners shall have power, and they hereby are authorized, after hearing the parties in possession of such stalls or stands, to establish a reasonable rate of rental therefor, having reference to the interest of all parties concerned.

Sec. 10. In all the acts and duties hereinbefore required of the said arbitrators, a concurrence of two of them shall be sufficient.

Sec. 11. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same hereby are, repealed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now ask the Clerk to read the report filed by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee for the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a resolution of the House directing investigation into the conduct and management of the Washington Market Company, report the same back to the House with the following statement: A majority of the committee were convinced, from the inquiries made and the investigations had, that the said company had in several respects violated the provisions of the act of May 20, 1870, incorporating said company, and the committee had directed one of its members to introduce a bill directing the Attorney-General of the United States to institute legal proceedings to secure a judicial declaration of forfeiture of the franchises of said Washington Market Company and a reversion of said market property to the District of Columbia; that while said bill was under consideration a proposition was submitted upon which the company agreed to surrender the property to the authorities of the District of Columbia, which conditions are embraced in the bill herewith reported for the consideration of the House. As the adoption of this bill will secure the objects sought to be attained, it is not deemed necessary to report at length the result of the investigation made by the committee under the resolution referred to. Should the bill herewith reported become a law, the committee deem it unnecessary to proceed to the consideration of the bill heretofore introduced by Mr. BLACKBURN under direction of the committee.

HORACE DAVIS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves a transfer of property embracing nearly four acres of land on Pennsylvania avenue between Seventh and Ninth streets and Louisiana and Pennsylvania avenues on the north, through to B street on the south. If I may have the attention of the House for a few minutes I am satisfied I can present the facts involved in this measure, so they may all vote understandingly.

Some weeks or months ago a resolution was referred by this House to the Committee for the District of Columbia, directing them to make inquiry and investigation into the conduct and management of what is known as the Washington Market Company and to report to this House whether they had forfeited their franchise under their charter. The Washington Market Company, sir, holds this property to which I have alluded under a lease for ninety-nine years granted by Congress in 1870. While the investigation was being made by the Committee for the District of Columbia, inquiry having been pushed sufficiently far to satisfy that committee action should be taken in the premises, I was instructed by the committee to introduce a bill which has been printed and is now recommitted to the Committee for the District of Columbia, directing the Attorney-General of the United States to institute legal proceedings for the purpose of declaring a judicial forfeiture of this franchise, under the ninety-nine years' leasehold the company has for this property, and prescribing the way and manner in which the value of the improvements the company have put upon the property should be ascertained and settlement had with the company on equitable terms. While that bill was under consideration in the Committee for the District of Columbia, a proposition was submitted by the Washington Market Company which in the judgment of that committee (and I speak now for the committee unanimously) would have resulted, if adopted, in securing and attaining all the objects and purposes of the bill to which I have alluded. The result was that the bill that has just been reported to the House was agreed upon, agreed upon by every member of the Committee for the District of Columbia, and assented to by the representatives of all the interests involved in the Washington Market Company.

The provision of the bill succinctly and tersely stated is just this: the Washington Market Company agrees now to surrender the property to the District of Columbia, to give up its franchise, upon the appointment of a board of arbitrators to consist of three gentlemen who are named in the bill.

A MEMBER. Name them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Montgomery Blair, Colonel Casey of the Engineer Corps, at present Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and Mr. Return J. Meigs, are the three arbitrators named in the bill. From a long list presented upon the one side and the other these gentlemen were selected and were acceptable to all parties concerned on both sides.

The bill provides that these three arbitrators, after being duly sworn, shall proceed to value the improvements put upon this Government property by the Washington Market Company. From that award so made by these three arbitrators a sum shall be set aside and held in reserve to abide the result of a suit which is provided for in the bill, and which I may say to the House is already pending in the supreme court of the District here. The government—I mean the corporation of the District of Columbia—claims back taxes, both general and special, as due from the Washington Market Company. Under the act of incorporation passed in 1870, the Washington Market Company was to pay the sum of $25,000 annually, in the nature of ground rent, to the poor fund of the District of Columbia. By an arrangement had or attempted to be had between the Washington Market Company and the authorities of the District of Columbia, that yearly rental was reduced from $25,000 a year to $7,500 a year. In short the act of Congress was pro tanto nullified. The act of incorporation requiring the $25,000 a year ground rent was ignored and $7,500 was agreed upon by the authorities at that time of the District of Columbia in lieu thereof.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Did they have any discretion in the matter?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was asserted that they had not, and a suit is pending for the difference between the $7,500 and the $25,000 annual rent, as required by the terms of the act of incorporation.

Under the provisions of this bill the Washington Market Company agrees to abide the judgment of the court of last resort, the Supreme Court of the United States; and from the award made to it as the value of the improvements put upon this property by these three arbitrators are to be deducted all that shall be judicially ascertained and declared by the final judgment to be had in the Supreme Court of the United States as back taxes, both general and special and claims asserted by the District of Columbia and supported and found to be valid by the court for the deficit in ground rent. Whatever aggregate sum shall be found by judicial investigation to be due to the District of Columbia, either for general taxes, special taxes, or ground rent, is to be deducted from the award made by these arbitrators on behalf of the Washington Market Company. The residue, whatever that may be, is to be paid by the sale of bonds.

Mr. HUNTON. Delivery.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; the sale of bonds. And neither as to principal nor interest of these bonds does the Federal Treasury become in any wise responsible; but the District of Columbia is to issue its own bonds, bearing 6 per cent. interest, payable at the end of thirty years from the date of issue; and the revenues of this market company are devoted by the express provision and terms of the bill to the payment of the current necessary expenses for the conduct of the market. Provision is also made in the bill for its insurance; then for the meeting of the interest accruing upon the bonds and for setting apart a sum sufficient, in the nature of a sinking fund, to defray the principal at the date of maturity.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. I see by the original bill—I do not know whether it is so in the substitute or not—that these bonds are to be issued under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. It occurred to me that the Government incurs some liability. I understand now from the gentleman from Kentucky that the Government incurs no liability, directly or indirectly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am obliged to the gentleman for the question, for it affords me an opportunity to repeat what I regard as one of the most important features of the bill, that in no wise whatever, either as to principal or interest, does the Federal Government or its Treasury assume the slightest semblance of obligation. The revenues of the market company are expressly pledged to the meeting of the interest upon these bonds and the provision of a sinking fund sufficient to discharge at the expiration of thirty years the principal of the debt.

If it be the purpose of any member of the House to inquire as to what would be the probable or approximate amount of the award to be made, I answer in all candor that it can be but guesswork. But if I were called upon to hazard an opinion, I would suggest the sum of $300,000 or possibly $350,000 as the value of the improvements that the company have put upon this property. The property, as I said before, is well known doubtless to each and every member of this House. I presume that its value to-day in the open market would be almost if not quite a million of dollars; but from this award, thus approximately estimated, is to be deducted every claim that the District of Columbia has for back taxes, general and special, and for the difference between $7,500 rent paid by the company a year and the $25,000 annual rent as required by the provisions of its charter, should the court of last resort find that these claims on the part of the District are well sustained.

Mr. LATHROP. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly, sir.

Mr. LATHROP. Do I understand that this ground of the market company is the property of the General Government?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Most assuredly so; the title in fee of the property is in the Federal Government.

Mr. LATHROP. The land?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; the land.

Mr. LATHROP. I understand that this ground is under a lease of ninety-nine years.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not under a lease for ninety-nine years from now; but ninety-nine years from the 20th of May, 1870, when the charter was granted to this company.

Mr. LATHROP. That is what I understand; and in their charter it was provided that they should pay $25,000 a year to the poor fund of the District of Columbia. Now, what I want to know is if in this bill there is any provision continuing the payment of that sum to the poor?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The payment of $25,000 to the poor fund of the District of Columbia?

Mr. LATHROP. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is not, sir.

Mr. LATHROP. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky another question. Now, if this bill is passed and the other bill providing that the Federal Government shall pay one-half the expenses of the municipal government here, does not the General Government in fact contract a debt of $125,000 per year besides the current expenses of the Government?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer that question. Mr. Speaker, I think not. It is true that the fourteenth section of the act of May 20, 1870, required the payment of $25,000 annual rental from this market-house company to the poor fund of the District of Columbia. The Congress of the United States clearly manifested its purpose in the passage of that bill: to yield the use of this property for ninety-nine years for market purposes. This bill does not contain any provision requiring the payment from the revenues of this market-house to the poor fund of the District of Columbia, and the reason I will undertake to state as I go on in my remarks. First, the revenues of this market company are pledged to the payment of necessary expenses in the conduct of the market; second, it is required that the property shall be kept insured to a sum not less than 50 per cent. of its value; third, it is required that the interest accruing on the bonds issued shall be met by the revenues of the market-house; and, fourth, it is required that a certain percentage shall be paid each year into the sinking fund to meet the principal at the end of thirty years.

The revenue of this company to-day, as nearly as we can approximate it, amounts to $53,000 per annum and by the time that this market company shall meet these four requirements placed upon them, the current expenses, the insurance, the interest upon the bonds, and the sinking fund, it will be found, making a liberal estimate, that about $40,000 have been hypothecated.

This sum of $25,000 has never been paid into the poor fund of the District of Columbia from the passage of the act until now.

The Washington Market Company first secured an abatement upon the yearly rent from $25,000 to $20,000.

Mr. LATHROP. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LATHROP. Was the $25,000 more than a fair rental for the ground?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether it is or not. The committee reached no conclusion so far as I am concerned, and I am frank to answer that after the statement of men who controlled the business of the company and its stockholders and bondholders, I should not regard it as an exorbitant ground rent.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I ask the gentleman whether the Government is considered as liable if the revenues derived from the market-house do not meet the obligations of the market company?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer that if the revenues fail to meet the interest on the bond or the principal of bonded indebtedness, then even the Government is in no sense and in no wise can be made responsible for one dollar of this money. It is a transaction in which the Federal Treasury has no earthly concern. The bill is so drawn that I do not hesitate to assure this House that by no torture or strain of construction can the Federal Treasury be made responsible for one dollar either of interest or principal. On the contrary, such is the value of this property, such are its revenues, that these market-house bondholders admit that the bonds are worth par when put upon the market. I may go further; it was proposed in the committee to substitute a 3.65 bond bearing 3.65 per cent. interest, guaranteeing both interest and principal by the Government, and the Washington Market Company at once indicated its willingness to accept that adjustment; but the committee would not consent, and I shared the prejudice of the other gentlemen of the committee, and I say now that I do not mean to give my assent to the passage of any bill that would make the United States Government a partner in the conduct of any market-house or corporate improvement that might be turned over to the authorities of the District of Columbia, a thing in which the United States Government is not concerned.

Mr. POLLARD. My understanding is that the revenues of this market company are estimated at $53,000 per annum, and this bill provides for the disbursement of $40,000 per annum.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is an approximated estimate, and that I only state for myself.

Mr. POLLARD. What are we going to do with the other $15,000?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state that if there is any surplus revenue above $40,000, the amount by necessity goes into the sinking fund to discharge the bonded debt. The bill expressly provides that the revenues arising from this market-house shall be used for no other purpose on earth except to defray the current expenses, to provide for the insurance policy, and to pay the interest on the bonds to provide for the sinking fund to meet the principal. There is no other purpose to which it can be applied.

Now, then, I would reply still further by saying that the committee did not see that it was necessary to incorporate a provision straining this company to the utmost extent of its revenue in the shape of a contribution to the poor fund of the District of Columbia, because it appeared to the committee, upon the evidence before it, that it mattered but little whether or not the revenue of the company was devoted to the poor of the District of Columbia or applied for the discharge of the debt at the end of the thirty years. In our judgment, the commissioners of the District of Columbia could determine what amount should be absorbed in the reduction of rentals, and thereby secure a reduction in prices of the commodities sold at the market-house, and give the benefit to the citizens of Washington in cheap rates for their purchases.

Now, sir, I can recollect nothing in the bill that need be touched upon further, except that I may again assure the House that it is a matter in which the Federal Government has no part; that the Federal Government, except as it stands sponsor for the District of Columbia, can have no possible interest in it. It is a matter in which the Federal Government cannot be liable for one solitary dollar, no matter what action may be taken as to the application of the revenue and the discharge of the debt. It is a bill brought into this House supported by every member of the Committee for the District of Columbia. Those gentlemen who were most active in the prosecution of the investigation of the subject and pressing the bill directing the Attorney-General to institute legal procedure and to declare a legal forfeiture of the franchise are satisfied with the bill. It has accomplished every purpose that is desired and is upon the other hand supported by the stockholders and parties interested in this market company.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will not the result of this bill be to furnish the people of the District here with ground on which their market-house stands for a period of ninety-two years, while the Government of the United States has to pay half of the ordinary expenses of the government of the District of Columbia without getting a dollar in return for the possession of this property? In other words, whether or not the Government of the United States perhaps are not paying one-half of the burdens of this District, and is not actually paying the whole of it without getting a return in any shape?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the gentleman for that question, for it affords me an opportunity to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Government of the United States by solemn enactment has already vested not the title, but the use and occupation of this land for market purposes for a term of ninety-nine years. The Government did undertake to secure the payment of $25,000 a year to the poor fund of the District of Columbia, but it failed to secure it, and it is to-day, as I tell the House, receiving but $7,500 to this poor-fund contribution.

Now, so far from it being the case that the Government is to become the loser by reason of the relinquishment of its claim for this contribution to the poor fund, while under the provisions of the bill now pending to establish a permanent form of government it would become responsible for 50 per cent. of the amount necessary to support that fund, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to this fact: the Government is receiving to-day from this property but $7,500. The revenues of the property, as I have stated, amount to $53,000 a year. Hence the market company can pay the current expenses, estimating them at $18,000 a year, (which is the estimate given us by the gentlemen who are to-day in control of the company;) it can pay the insurance; it can pay the interest upon the bonds for this award; it can pay into the sinking fund a sum sufficient at the end of thirty years to discharge the principal of that debt, and yet it will have more, if not twice as much, surplus as it is to-day receiving as a contribution to that poor fund. But that of course reduces the expenditure of which the Government binds itself under the provisions of that general bill to bear 50 per cent.

But further, at the end of thirty years, when the last bond has been paid (and the sinking fund will provide a sufficiency to discharge the principal under the provisions of this bill within less than twenty years) the Government still stands there with more than sixty years to run on this lease, with the bonded debt discharged, with one million dollars' worth of property left unencumbered by a single dollar of debt, with a revenue of $53,000 a year to devote as Congress shall see fit to the support of either the sinking fund or any other fund of the District of Columbia, and thus lighten the burden of taxation that the Federal Government assumes under that 50 per cent. clause.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. That is the point I want to get at. I wish to learn whether these revenues, after the extinguishment of the debt, would not go to the benefit exclusively of the District in the payment, for instance, of the Government's quota of one-half of the District expenses.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Most assuredly not. The bill does not so provide. In this bill we simply undertake to provide for the present appropriation of these revenues; we describe the fund and the purpose to which the revenues shall for the present be appropriated, which is the extinguishment of the debt created by reason of this award. It is estimated (and I may assure the House that it is not regarded by the committee as an exorbitant estimate) that the revenues of this fund, instead of being $53,000, will amount before many years to $75,000 a year. At the end of thirty years under the provisions of this bill, if not at the end of twenty years, the fund arising each year from the sale of stalls in this market, ranging from something over $50,000 to $75,000 will be a net contribution made, not to the credit of the District of Columbia, but subject to the order of Congress, and to no other power. I believe that the passage of this bill will, within the time that is to elapse between this and the expiration of the lease for ninety-nine years, result in a net saving to the District of Columbia of not less than $500,000 or $600,000.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman be kind enough to indicate the section in which I may find the provision that the fund arising from the rent of this building shall on the extinguishment of the bonded debt be subject to such control as Congress may see fit to exercise?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not a copy of the bill before me; the only one I had I sent to the Clerk's desk. But I will say to the gentleman that the very section to which he is now looking and alluding is the one to which I refer in my statement that the revenues of this market property are pledged now, in the event of the passage of this bill, to no purpose in the world except the four purposes I have indicated. Whenever these four purposes have been accomplished, whenever that debt has been extinguished, (as it must of necessity be at the expiration of thirty years,) the revenues of this market stand subject to the order of Congress, are unappropriated. It is for Congress, then, in its pleasure or discretion to determine whether it will appropriate them to one fund or another. There is no obligation carrying the revenues of this market-house to the credit of the District of Columbia. On the contrary, the only provision on that subject in the bill is an express declaration that these revenues shall be devoted to no other purpose than those I have indicated: the payment of expenses, the payment of insurance, the meeting of interest, and the extinguishment of the principal on the debt.

Mr. BURCHARD. Does this bill affect in any way the title to the real estate?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The title in fee?

Mr. BURCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In no way whatever. It leaves that title absolute in the Federal Government, where it has ever been.

Mr. BURCHARD. I see that the ninth section gives possession to the District as soon as the award is made. That possession is to continue how long?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That possession, as I take it every lawyer here will concur with me in concluding, is to be terminated at the pleasure of Congress itself.

Mr. GARDNER. Now will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. In the first place, I understand from the gentleman that a lease for ninety-nine years was made by Congress to the Washington Market Company, and the object of this bill is to provide for the rescission of that lease so as to restore the property to the Government and release the lessees from further obligation with reference to it. The Government in doing this assumes, as I understand, in this bill the obligations, as well in bonds as in every other respect, that the market company has made. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will allow me, in answering his question I can correct him. In the act of May 20, 1870, as recited in the preamble to this bill, there is a provision that the District of Columbia, at the expiration of thirty years from the granting of that act of incorporation, shall under certain conditions possess itself of this market company's property.

Mr. GARDNER rose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will wait I will set him right. There is a provision in that act of May 20, 1870, which declares under certain conditions, at the expiration of thirty years—not the Government of the United States, but the District of Columbia, if it so desires, may possess itself of this property. That provision of the act of incorporation is recited and set forth in the preamble to this bill, whereby it is agreed by the Washington Market Company that period of thirty years shall now be anticipated and the District of Columbia shall possess itself of the property at this time; and anticipating the lapse of the period prescribed in the charter of thirty years, I say it is not the Government of the United States assuming any obligation that rests upon the Washington Market Company, but it is the District of Columbia, by consent of the Washington Market Company, taking advantage of the thirty years which, by the terms of the charter, were to expire before the District of Columbia might possess itself of this market property. I do not understand, and I do not think the gentleman, if he will consider that section in the act of incorporation, will any longer believe or suspect the Government of the United States by the passage of this bill assumes any obligation now resting on the market company.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me for a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. It is expressly provided that the sum fixed by these arbitrators is to be the only sum for which the District or any other government is to be responsible. That sum is to be divided among the creditors of the Washington Market Company and when thus divided those who do not get paid never will be paid because there will be no fund for them to be paid from. I believe I am right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTON. I think there is no assumption of debt on the part of the Government at all.

Mr. GARDNER. I confess I do not yet fully understand it. I wish to call the gentleman's attention again to it. Let me read from the preamble:

Whereas, by the twelfth section of the act passed May 20, 1870, to incorporate the Washington Market Company, it is provided that if the corporation of the city of Washington shall, after a period of thirty years from the approval of this act, by a vote of the councils thereof, express a desire to possess itself of the said market buildings and grounds, Congress may authorize the corporate authorities to take possession of the same upon the payment to the said market-house company of a sum of money equal to a fair and just valuation of the buildings and improvements then standing upon said grounds; and the mode and manner of ascertaining such valuation shall be determined by Congress.

That is the act to which the gentleman refers, which provides that Congress may provide the mode and manner by which this District may take possession of this market-house property on certain terms and conditions.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Which Congress is now asked to do in the passage of the bill the gentleman holds in his hand.

Mr. GARDNER. But the point I wish to call the gentleman's attention to is this: in this bill which is a rescission of a contract of lease between the Government and the Washington Market Company, by which the Washington Market Company are absolved from further obligation, and by the act of Congress alone they say the District of Columbia shall assume such and certain obligations, and I should like to know whether by that action Congress and the Government do not assume the obligation of that whole contract and bind them to every obligation they have made on their part?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am astonished at the gentleman. When the twelfth section of the act of incorporation especially provides at the expiration of thirty years Congress may provide the terms, according to limitations therein stated, upon which the District of Columbia may possess itself of this property, thereby canceling every obligation which the Washington Market Company owes to the District, the Government of the United States, or any other body or power—when that is the provision of the twelfth section, that upon the expiration of thirty years, Congress prescribing the terms, the District possessing itself of this property, the obligations on every hand shall cease and terminate, and when the Washington Market Company now comes forward and says, "I am willing to yield and anticipate the expiration of the term of thirty years; I am willing to allow you to take possession now instead of then," and when the Congress of the United States prescribes the terms and the District of Columbia expresses its purpose to possess itself of this property, and the intermediate period of thirty years has been waived on all hands, I cannot for the life of me see that any obligation can survive, either on the part of the Washington Market Company to the District of Columbia or the Federal Government or on the part of the Federal Government to the District of Columbia. It is a termination of the contract by mutual agreement all round.

Mr. DICKEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. DICKEY. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be an important bill, and as the substitute reported by the Committee for the District of Columbia contains a great many changes and amendments of the bill as printed, I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky the propriety of having the bill printed; and if he will yield I will make the motion for that purpose, so that when we have the bill up for action we may understand exactly what is the nature of its provisions. I confess I am unable to give an intelligent vote on this bill as it is now presented. I cannot ascertain from the bill as printed what the bill as presented by the committee does provide. I do not know whether this market company is insolvent, so that it is necessary to put its affairs in the hands of a receiver. I do not know whether the purpose is to relieve the market company from litigation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, neither the one thing nor the other has aught to do with this bill.

Mr. DICKEY. I wish to understand the provisions of the bill. I do not understand them now, and if the bill be postponed so that it can be printed we will then have an opportunity to understand it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I regret that the gentleman from Ohio cannot comprehend the provisions of the bill at least sufficiently well to satisfy him that neither the question of solvency or insolvency upon the part of the company nor the question of litigation in which it may be involved has had any connection whatever with the bill. The company is not insolvent, I apprehend; but that is a question with which we have had no concern and as to which we have made no inquiry. So far as litigation is concerned in which the company may be involved, there is an expressed provision in the bill that it shall not be interfered with.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly; this is an inquiring House.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask for information.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I shall be glad to furnish it if within my power.

Mr. FINLEY. As I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DICKEY] the bill now under consideration has been considerably altered and changed from the printed bill, and I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to pages 3, 4, and 5 of the printed bill, sections 4 and 5, and to make an inquiry as to whether there has been any change as to the point to which I wish to refer. The point is this: in section 4 of the printed bill it is provided that notice shall be published for ten consecutive days in some newspaper printed in the city of Washington, warning all stockholders, bondholders, and other creditors to appear within twenty days thereafter and present their respective claims upon the award. It is further provided that the publication of this notice shall be sufficient to bring the parties into court. In short, as here printed, the bill makes the notice not only constructive—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio what concern that is of ours? What interest has either the Government of the United States or the government of the District of Columbia in that section of the bill?

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will allow me I will come to the point as to which I desire to make an inquiry.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That provides for a settlement and a distribution of the award among the stockholders and bondholders of the Washington Market Company, in which neither the District of Columbia nor the United States nor anybody else can possibly have any concern.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand it provides more than that. I understand it provides for all classes of creditors. I understand now further that by section 4, after the expiration of those twenty days, the court certifies to the auditor and the auditor or master, as he is called, proceeds to make a report of a certain class of claims, including bonds and all other claims, and that, without an exception, within fifteen days of his making his report a judgment is entered against all claims of whatever class.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Again I reply, Mr. Speaker, that nobody on the face of the earth has any interest in that except the parties in interest in the Washington Market Company.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, I will ask the gentleman whether in the case of a party who has a claim against the market company and who may be absent in California, a notice published for ten days requiring him to appear twenty days thereafter—

Mr. BLACKBURN. And thirty days for the auditor to make his report in.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not understand that thirty days are given for the report of the auditor. Is that the fact?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The auditor cannot be limited. Does the gentleman expect an auditor to marshal these assets and make a report in ten minutes involving a distribution of an award of $300,000?

Mr. HUNTON. Let me suggest another thing. All the creditors of the market company, stockholders and bondholders and other creditors, were represented before the committee and assented to that provision of the bill. That provision as to the outside creditors was put in out of abundant caution, it being understood that there was very little outside debt owing by the company.

Mr. FINLEY. I was not quite through with what I wished to say. There is a difference between ten minutes and thirty days. I understand this bill makes no provision that the auditor should make his report within thirty days. It practically, then, provides that twenty and ten days or thirty or thirty-five days of constructive notice shall be given.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman's calculation is at fault. First, there is the ten days' notice. Then comes the twenty days. Then comes the fifteen days, within which exceptions shall be filed. And then comes the time that it is requisite for the auditor or master commissioner to have within which to make his report, and that is to be added.

Mr. FINLEY. The inquiry I rose to make is this: whether there has been any change in this bill—

Mr. BLACKBURN. In that regard?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There has not. I wish to add that, instead of its being thirty-five days or sixty days, as it would probably turn out to be, if the time were reduced to five days I apprehend no member of this House would have occasion to oppose this feature of the bill; because it is a matter in which neither the Federal Government nor the District of Columbia nor anybody else can possibly have an interest. It is a matter in which nobody can have any concern except it be the parties in interest in the company, and they have appeared, as has already been stated, before the committee and accepted the provision; and they stated that this mode of settlement was agreeable to them. But more than that, through abundant caution, in order to show that this bill has not been crudely put together, there is an independent provision in it that declares that the claims that are asserted by the District of Columbia for back taxes, whether special or general, and the claim asserted by the District of Columbia for this deficit in ground rent, shall be considered as excepted to and shall not be amenable to laches.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. How large are those claims?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In regard to that the Washington Market Company and myself would be widely at variance in our estimate.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. What do the committee estimate it at?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I speak for myself as a member of the committee, and I say that all claims that will be asserted by the District of Columbia in the shape of abatement against the award of these arbitrators will not amount to less than from $125,000 to $150,000. That is to be determined at last by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, and until that judgment is rendered the money awarded by these three arbitrators is not to be paid to the Washington Market Company, or a sum sufficient to meet these claims is to be held subject to the decision of the Supreme Court in reference to every claim asserted by the District of Columbia; and every claim thus asserted by the District of Columbia is expressly excepted to from the report of the master or auditor, no matter what the report may be.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman reporting this bill to the fact that in this notice which is very short—ten days' notice to appear within twenty days thereafter—there is no provision for minors, no provision to require appearance by order of the court as is almost always the case. A newspaper notice of ten days requiring all parties having claims against the company to appear and file them within twenty days, it being provided that whether they appear or do not appear the notice shall be considered absolute, I think is going further than has ever been done before. I call the attention of the gentleman to that.

I wish also to call his attention to another point. In the classification of these claims the amount of all general or special taxes that may be outstanding and unpaid against the company together with all penalties and arrears shall stand first. Next, all claims of the District of Columbia against the market company, which would include at least the $25,000 a year rental; and if the whole subsequent rental for the ninety-nine years is to be considered of any value, it would absorb a great deal more than any valuation provided for here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of course there could be no deficit for ground rent recovered against the company after the time at which the company surrendered the property under an agreement with the District.

Mr. CONGER. Let me proceed a moment to state the points to which I desire to call the gentleman's attention. The next class of persons to be provided for are the bondholders of the company.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman is again mistaken. If he will read further he will find that that has reference simply to marshaling the assets and claims. The bill expressly refuses to make any distinction or discrimination between bondholder, stockholder or creditor. It says that shall be determined by law.

Mr. CONGER. I am coming to that. That is the next class to be provided for.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not for payment however.

Mr. CONGER. No; in the assets.

Fourth. The amount of all other claims of creditors of said market company up to the date of the report.

Now that includes all those who do not hold bonds or have claims against the company under the previous heads. It includes all those who may own the floating indebtedness of this company for labor and for material. I turn now to the mode of payment. The first two classes, of awards of taxes and penalties—

Mr. BLACKBURN. And ground rent.

Mr. CONGER. Shall be paid first. Second, all claims of the company for the $25,000 a year which has not been paid, making nearly $200,000 if it is allowed. And in the remaining three classes of cases the priority of the payment shall be determined by the court. Now I claim that in such a bill as this the very first provision of it should be to secure to the laborers and to the men who have furnished materials upon the works of this company their pay in full.

I find that they are left to come in if the courts shall so decide.

Fifth. Now I think the bill is very imperfect in not giving a preference to the laboring-man; the men who have taken the most interest in the work, and who have furnished the material, and who have labored for the company, and who own the floating indebtedness of the company. I think they ought to be provided for; they are those least able to bear the loss.

Mr. BLACKBURN resumed the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I want to ask the gentleman a question. This whole discussion and the bill itself came to me tonight for the first time. I had not an opportunity to examine the papers, but I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, who has examined this question, whether the right of re-entry for non-payment of rents exists in the Government or in the District of Columbia, or both.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will permit me, I prefer first to answer the questions of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I prefer to answer the questions in rotation. To show how utterly untenable the objections of the gentleman from Michigan are, let me say, in the first place, to the objection which he makes about the want of notice, which was first made by the gentleman from Ohio, that it concerns nobody except the parties in interest, the Washington Market Company. This is a joint-stock company. It consists of stockholders and bondholders; and the stockholders and the bondholders are found almost invariably to be identical. They have met and passed upon this bill and found it entirely satisfactory, and agree to accept it and have signified their approval of its provisions.

Now as to the graduation of these claims, to which the gentleman from Michigan objects. He says that the laborers ought to be preferred. Does the law give them priority? If so, this bill leaves them with all the protection of the law. Does the gentleman mean to ask Congress to resolve itself into a judicial body and pass upon the priority of claims? It has been my object and it has been the object of the Committee for the District of Columbia to avoid the appearance of the exercise of judicial power in this bill. The bill directs the auditor or the master commissioner to marshal these claims for trial, not for payment. It makes an express provision as to how they are to be paid; and the gentleman from Michigan is mistaken in that matter, for the bill does not marshal the claims of the laborers in the fifth class, but in the fourth.

Mr. CONGER. That is what I said.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman said, if I am not mistaken, that the laborers were in the fifth class, but really the stockholders come in last. The bill merely directs the auditor or master commissioner to marshal the claims. The first, claims of the District of Columbia for back taxes and arrearages; the second, for rents unpaid. Then comes the third class, which is the bondholders. Then comes the fourth class, which embraces all their creditors. Then comes the fifth and the last class, which embraces none but the stockholders. But this is a mere marshaling of the classes of claims. The bill provides that the first and second classes of these claims from the District shall take priority over everything: ground rent and taxes. I imagine that no laborer would be able to enforce any claim against property of that kind. This bill provides that the question of priority between the laborers and the bondholders shall be determined by law. Congress is not a judicial body, and if any citizen has a claim under this bill he holds it under the law; and as a member of a legislative body I do not propose to engage in the exercise of judicial powers.

I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] that in the act of incorporation of May 20, 1870, several conditions were imposed upon this market company, which have been stated in detail. Among other things they were required to put up buildings on the plans and specifications which were presented at the Clerk's desk, in open House, and filed in the office of the Secretary of State. One of those conditions was that they should pay $25,000 per annum as ground rent. Another condition imposed upon them was that they were required to complete their building in two years. And then this further condition was imposed upon them: that in case of a failure or default of the Washington Market Company to comply with the provisions of the law the power was reserved to Congress to repeal or abrogate their franchise.

So that the question is settled. But whether it were so or not, I state that as to this bill there is no disagreement upon that point. The bill, as I have already stated, declares in the twelfth section that at the expiration of thirty years Congress may prescribe the terms upon which the District of Columbia may cancel the remaining sixty-six years of the lease and possess itself of the property.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I understood that from the gentleman's previous remarks.

Mr. BLACKBURN. So that under the express provision of the act of incorporation Congress reserved the power to alter, amend, modify, or repeal the charter.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I regret that I have not been able to examine the bill except for a few moments here this evening. Otherwise I would not be under the necessity of troubling the gentleman in charge of the bill by asking questions. Looking over the ninth section of the bill, I have seen nothing that specifies the manner in which the net revenues of the market company shall be applied after the extinguishment of the principal and interest of the bonded debt authorized to be issued by the District commissioners under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. It seems to me that, if the bonds issued by the District commissioners are paid out of the rents and profits, the District government thereby becomes equitably entitled to the buildings and improvements situated on this Government land, and that consequently the Government, unless it made some reservation, would be in such a situation as to be equitably estopped from disturbing the possession that had been acquired under these circumstances. It seems to me that perhaps the bill ought to contain some such provision as this.

Provided, That after the payment of the principal and the interest of the bonds herein authorized, the Government of the United States shall be entitled to receive such part of the net annual rents and receipts arising from said market-house property as the then assessed value of the real estate on which said market-house stands bears to the then assessed value of the buildings and improvements thereon: Provided, That said sum so received from the said rents and profits shall not be less than $25,000 in any one year.

In other words, from the time when the debt has been extinguished so that the District and the Government of the United States become in some sense owners in common of this property the Government of the United States, by an explicit reservation now made, ought to enjoy such proportion of the rents realized as the assessed value of the Government's real estate bears to the assessed value of the District's buildings and improvements. This is the point to which I wanted to call the gentleman's attention, to inquire whether or not it is covered by the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the gentleman from Indiana has at last abandoned the discussion within the realm of legal obligation, and now comes to the equitable features of the case. I say very frankly that speaking for myself I have not the slightest objection to ingrafting upon this section an amendment declaring that after the extinguishment of the bonded debt the net revenues of this market-house property shall be liable, not proportionally, not in moiety, but that the entire net revenues of this market-house property shall be subject to such disposition as Congress in its discretion may see proper to make. At the same time I would say, speaking from the stand-point of a lawyer, that such an amendment would in my judgment be surplusage, because I hold that whenever that debt is extinguished the limitation put by Congress in this bill upon the application of the revenues has expired, and it is for Congress to say again, as it now in this instance says for thirty years to come, to what purpose those revenues shall be applied.

But looking at the matter from the stand-point of equity, I can hardly concur with the gentleman from Indiana in thinking that the District of Columbia would become possessed of an equitable right to enjoy the net revenues of this property, because here stands the Government of the United States holding the title in fee to more than a half million dollars' worth of real estate in the heart of this city. Improvements and buildings have been put upon it. Now the Government of the United States says to the District of Columbia through this bill, "You may now take this property free of ground rent, free of any liability to the poor-fund or to the Federal Treasury; issue your bonds for the actual and ascertained value of the improvements which this joint-stock company have put upon the property; pledge the revenues of the property and no other revenues to the extinguishment of that debt." After this has been done, (which costs the District of Columbia not a solitary dollar, because I have said the revenues from this property are admitted on all hands to be amply sufficient and more than sufficient to discharge the liabilities within the time prescribed,) then how is the District of Columbia possessed of any equitable title? What dollar of money has she ever put into it? The United States Government is the owner of the fee of the real estate; a corporation has put improvements upon it; bonds have been issued resting solely upon the revenues of the property; those revenues have proved amply sufficient to meet and extinguish the debt by or before maturity; the government of the District of Columbia has not a dollar invested, and I cannot see where an equitable title would accrue.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Let me ask a question right here. If a private individual should transfer to you the title of certain property and give you the rents and profits of that property for thirty years for the purpose of meeting the amount that he had reserved to himself; if at the end of that time you had satisfied the indebtedness out of that property, would not the title be in you? This bill provides, as I understand, that the title to the improvements and buildings of this market company shall vest in the District commissioners, who, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall issue their bonds pledging the rents and profits of these buildings for the liquidation of the principal and interest of these bonds. Now, when the title to this property is at least equitably vested in the District government and when that government has issued its bonds, and out of the property the title of which is vested in it has discharged these obligations, how does it happen that in point of equity the District government at the end of that time has no equitable ownership in the property?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer the gentleman by saying he and I are arguing from different stand-points. I say the title never does pass and never has passed and never is to pass from the United States either to the Washington Market Company or to the District of Columbia, neither legally nor equitably. The title in fee is in the Government to-day and would have rested there undisturbed for ninety-nine years while the usufruct remained to the market company. I say further, taking the illustration the gentleman from Indiana offers me, if I am the owner in fee-simple of a landed estate and I convey to you under a leasehold, coupled with the condition you shall discharge certain incumbrances or debts from the rents, issues, and profits thereof at the end of the term of years for which I made the leasehold conveyance, the incumbrances having been lifted, the debt having been discharged according to contract, would the gentleman from Indiana undertake to oust me from the title in fee or set up an equitable title against me as owner? I apprehend not.

In summing up, Mr. Speaker, I have but this to say by way of recapitulation in a single sentence: the several features of the bill which have been inquired into—I will not say attacked—involve questions in which neither the Federal Government nor the District of Columbia can possibly have any concern. They are matters of detail as to the disbursement or distribution of an award which shall be made to the Washington Market Company according to the priority given and awarded by the court. And to that condition the stockholders and the bondholders have already officially assented. Secondly, the Federal Government, as I have said more than once, does not become in any contingency conceivable, by any torture or twist of construction, liable to the extent of a dollar either for principal or interest upon these bonds. Further than that, the District of Columbia is responsible upon the bonds issued resting and predicated simply upon the revenues of the property that is thus to be transferred to its possession. And lastly, I add, it is simply a question whether a leasehold of half a million dollars' worth of real estate, the fee-simple title to which rests in the Government, and absolute ownership of improvements in connection with the real estate probably worth six or seven hundred thousand dollars, upon agreement, all parties in interest assenting, to be turned over to the Government and back to the District at a cost probably less than $200,000 and every dollar of that to be paid out of the bonds which are to be met from the revenues and uses of the property itself—if that is not an advantageous transaction, then every member of the Committee for the District of Columbia has been grossly deceived.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. What amount of bonds and stock have been issued by the Washington Market Company?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have the figures in the committee-room. There has been $100,000—I cannot speak accurately, for I am speaking from memory.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Have they made a dividend on that stock?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Did the gentleman want an answer to his question?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am trying to give it. There have been $100,000 paid in on the capital stock. The capital stock was limited to one million of money. There has been 10 per cent. paid in. There have been bonds issued at various times. My recollection is that the aggregate of bonds issued by this company is either $120,000 or $160,000. The latter is my best recollection.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Now, I wish to know whether they paid any dividend on this stock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. They have, sir; but they have paid dividends only on the amount paid in. They have not paid dividends on the amount of the capital stock, but they have paid dividends on the one hundred thousand of stock, which was the amount actually paid in.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. How many dividends have been paid?

Mr. BLACKBURN. They have paid six annual dividends from 1870.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. What per cent?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Ten per cent. Those have been the dividends paid on the amount of stock paid in, that is on the $100,000.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman let me offer an amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. I move at the end of section 6 to add the following:

Provided, Priority shall be given to all claims for labor and material furnished for the improvement of such property to the said market company.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say, so far as I am concerned, I certainly have no objection to the adoption of that amendment. I am the introducer of a resolution directing an investigation into the affairs of this market company with a view of working a forfeiture of its charter. The RECORD shows I am the introducer of a bill which directs the Attorney-General of the United States to institute legal proceedings to declare that forfeiture. I am not here as the advocate of the Washington Market Company most assuredly; I trust I do not appear as its prosecutor; but I do say that while I recognize that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] can have no possible effect upon interests in which the Government or the District of Columbia are involved, it is a question between the stockholders and the bondholders and the general creditors, if there be any, of the company.

Mr. CONGER. And the laborers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection to that. I never believed it was safe for a legislative body to undertake to discharge judicial functions.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan would be unconstitutional? Is it in the power of this Congress, on a bill of this character, as to claims already existing against this corporation and its associates, to pass a feature of this kind? Can they do it without interfering with vested rights? It might be right to do it in an original act of incorporation, but at this stage I think it unwise.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have already indicated to the gentleman by my remarks that I concur with him in the opinion he has just expressed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am liable under the circumstances of this case, more liable than usually even, to be mistaken as to the real bearing of this bill and as to what are the real interests of the country and of the District of Columbia in regard to the matter presented in this bill. But this strikes me as undoubted in regard to the matter before us. The Government has a lien upon the property of this market-house, an indefeasible lien, and has a right to re-enter upon these grounds for the enforcement of rent. It strikes me further that the taxes against the market company are an undoubted lien upon the interests of the market company in the property and that there is not the remotest danger of either the District of Columbia or the Government losing a cent of these taxes, and the interest of the Government as to the rent and the interest of the District of Columbia as to the taxes is perfectly safe without this law, as it would be with it.

Now I look further, I do not know the exact amount of the debt of the District of Columbia. It is said to be about $25,000,000. We owe half of it; I will not say that we owe it, but we have half of it to pay. This District was improved largely at one time, and the people of the United States through Congress got up great excitement and destroyed the local Legislature and adopted a policy against local self-government in the District of Columbia which most egregiously failed by the action of the men who lived and owned property in the District of Columbia themselves.

But in any way suppose the people of the District of Columbia owe $12,500,000? This bill is going immediately to put upon the District of Columbia just so much more debt as the commissioners appointed under this bill shall create by their laws, and I am told that it is claimed that the buildings upon this land cost $400,000 or thereabouts; and I assure you, and I think the experience of members of the House will induce them to concur with me, that when a municipal corporation is going to pay or the Government is going to pay for property it is not appraised very low, and I have no doubt the amount will reach $400,000.

We are by this law to put a burden of $300,000 additional debt upon the District of Columbia. Now this District is our ward, and our ward is here every day asking help and relief at our hands, and if we place this debt upon it we shall have to carry it ourselves.

Now, I do not believe that there is any such intention on the part of the Committee for the District of Columbia, because I have no doubt that they have put this matter fairly before the House as it seems to them, but I am free to say that if I had been one of the Washington Market Company and I had undertaken an enterprise expensive almost beyond a possibility of return, I should be willing to let the Government take it off my hands and pay me for it, especially after I had year after year utterly refused to perform my part of the obligations under the contract, and therefore I do not doubt that the company would be willing to let this law be passed.

Sir, I think if I were rich and had the wealth of the Astors I should be willing to invest in this market company, and I think I could do so with utter safety. I do not know but what it is all right, but there are fingers about this matter that I have learned to suspect. I do not speak ironically and I have no doubt in my soul that I have seen the fingers of Joab in this matter or I thought I had. I myself shall vote, if I have a chance, to enforce the law on this defaulting company; that is my doctrine. They bargained with us and they have not kept their bargain, and instead of listening to the plausible suggestions from their friends, let them obey the law; that is the way it strikes me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that while I concur with him fully in the view that he has reached as to the failure of this company to comply with the conditions of its charter and as to the absolute propriety of enforcing the law against it, as illustrated in the bill now in print and recommitted to the Committee for the District of Columbia proposing a declaration of forfeiture of all the franchises of the company, I want to remind him that in one part of his calculations he seems to be in error. If the award is to be $300,000, the value of the company's improvements, as the gentleman from New York very properly and naturally surmises, the company would hardly be making money by a surrender of the property when they are receiving $53,000 of annual revenue now. Under such circumstances it seems to me this can hardly be considered an insolvent company.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I do not propose to surrender anything. I propose to walk up and take the property.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Well, I will join the gentleman from New York, and will be glad of his support, in passing the bill which is now before the House, unless this bill should meet the approval of Congress; for the report filed with this bill declares that only in the event of this bill becoming a law will it be deemed unnecessary to press the bill for the forfeiture of the franchises of the company. I believe myself that all the gentleman from New York has said by way of criticism upon the Washington Market Company for its failure to comply with its obligations has been deserved, and ever so much more that he did not say. But the Washington Market Company did not come here and ask for this bill. It was only when the other bill had been introduced here, instructing the Attorney-General to wrest this property from that company under a proceeding for forfeiture of charter, it was not until then that the company came before the committee and agreed, as a matter of compromise, to accept the bill now under consideration, which looks to the transfer of the property.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The adoption of the other alternative will save the District of Columbia from assuming the payment of a dollar; it will save the Government of the United States from assuming the payment of a dollar. All we have to do is to enforce our rights as against the company.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman will allow me to ask him a question. Admitting that this company, as he believes and as I assert, has justly and fairly forfeited its charter rights, would the gentleman from New York in declaring a forfeiture, whether by judicial procedure or by congressional enactment, wrench that property from them and take the improvements that they have put upon it without giving them just and fair compensation?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I will answer the gentleman. I would take it and hold it unless the company devised some way to bring me the money. I would not pay them for their wild expenditures.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me ask the gentleman in all kindness one other question.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In declaring by judicial process or by the exercise of the arbitrary power of Congress a forfeiture which, in my judgment as in the gentleman's, has been richly earned—in wrenching from the company these improvements, worth $300,000 according to his estimate, in which I am disposed to agree—would he make an appropriation from the Federal Treasury to provide for the interest that the widow and the orphan have in the shape of bonds or stock invested in the company?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Mr. Speaker, we are legislating all the time for "the widows and orphans." We have several members in this House (though I believe their seats are vacant just now) who sit up nights with those "widows and orphans." [Laughter.] I want to care for them. But suppose I am a poor man having only $5,000 which I lend upon a farm worth $10,000. The borrower does not pay me a dollar. The time comes when I must have my money. Now what is to be done? Am I to foreclose my mortgage, or am I compelled under some high sense of honor to say, "I will not foreclose; and inasmuch as I cannot raise money to pay the other $5,000, I will go without what I have loaned." Society must stand by the enforcement of laws. Occasionally property must be sold under a foreclosure. So far as this company is concerned it can pay. It is not poor men by any means that own the whole of this stock. There are plenty of rich men holding it; otherwise they could not hire Caleb Cushing to hang around here and draw bills and figure in regard to this matter. Caleb must have money. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the gentleman any hesitation in telling us whether the gentleman last named by himself is the "Joab" to whom he alluded a little while ago? [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. He is Caleb. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I confess that I sympathize somewhat with the fear expressed by my friend from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] in reference to there being some "Joab" lurking around this bill. I do not refer to any of the members of the committee or any members of the House; but I fear that there are powers outside that are not seen. With the view of preventing any improper advantage that might possibly be taken, I desire, if I should have an opportunity, to offer an amendment in the form of an independent section. I will read it now, in order to bring it to the attention of the House:

SEC. 11. That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed to limit or impair the right and power of the Government of the United States to alter, change, or amend the provisions of this act in any manner it may deem proper; nor shall this act be held or construed to limit or impair the right of the United States to control the renting and the profits and revenues arising from said market-house after the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds herein authorized.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana offer his amendment?

Mr. CONGER. That is not an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I ask that the amendment be again read. The amendment of Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, was again read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. So far as I may do so I cordially accept that amendment.

Now I wish to say I have no disposition to force this bill through or put it upon its passage if it is not the pleasure of the House. The District of Columbia Committee has but one day in each month, and the next day will be the third Monday of next month and that will be devoted to the bill to establish a permanent form of government. If I knew what the wish of the House was I would be glad to accommodate my motion to it, either to ask the consideration of this bill now or to ask the House to set some night during next week when the bill and amendments might be printed and come up and be discussed at any length. But in order to test the sense of the House, protesting I have no preference in the matter so far as I am concerned, I will ask the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. BURCHARD. Before the gentleman from Kentucky asks the previous question I desire to offer an amendment. In accordance with the suggestion made to limit the payment in the fourteenth section I propose to move an additional proviso to section 9, as follows:

Provided further, That as soon as the revenues arising under this act shall suffice to pay and discharge the bonds herein authorized to be issued the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall set apart annually the sum of $25,000 to be expended as required in section 14 of the act incorporating the Washington Market Company.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he does not think the object he seeks to accomplish by that amendment is better provided for by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BURCHARD. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana leaves it subject to future legislation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois would anticipate a contingency which cannot occur for thirty years to come.

Mr. BURCHARD. It may occur, because the revenues which may be set apart may suffice.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In twenty years?

Mr. BURCHARD. Before that time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But this would be legislation in anticipation of at least twenty years. I have no objection in the world except it looks as though it would be rather hazardous for us to anticipate in figures what amount of money could be spared from the revenues of this property twenty years hence in excess of the sum found necessary to pay its current expenses. That is my only objection.

Mr. BURCHARD. These revenues are to be applied to the payment of the necessary incidental expenses of conducting said market and to pay the principal and interest of the bonds herein authorized to be issued. They may pay the bonds in ten or fifteen years or any other time, but if the market company have possession and means sufficient I can see no objection to it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have stated the only objection I have to it.

Mr. BURCHARD. I hope the gentleman will allow my amendment to be offered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection, but I think the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana provides better for it.

Mr. BURCHARD. Let my amendment come in.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I demand the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will now be taken on the amendments in their order, and the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will first be read.

Mr. DICKEY. Is it in order to move that this bill and pending amendments be printed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not, as the previous question is operating.

The Clerk will now read the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "them," in line 21, section 6, add the following:

Provided priority shall be given to all claims for labor and material furnished for the improvement of such property to the said market company.

The House divided; and there were ayes 12, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is evidently rejected.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays. I want to find where the friends of the laboring-man are to-night.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 75.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays are not ordered, one-fifth of those present not having voted in the affirmative.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I do not like this bill, and I therefore raise the question that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No quorum is required on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. A quorum is not required on a call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope gentlemen will not insist any further. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is rejected.

Mr. HENDEE. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan does no harm, because the company does not owe a single cent which will be affected by it one way or the other.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I stated I had no objection to the amendment except that in my judgment it is unconstitutional; and I do not intend to vote for any amendment that in my judgment contravenes the Constitution.

Mr. HENDEE. I think the gentleman had better accept the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I cannot accept it.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman in his bill has already given priority to two classes of creditors. But it seems that in his judgment it is unconstitutional to give priority to the claims of the workmen.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If debate is in order I will say in reply to the gentleman as to that—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan has been rejected.

Mr. CONGER. The point was raised that a quorum did not vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. A quorum is not necessary to order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is next on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.]

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion that the House adjourn, it was not agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I believe there is no objection to the amendment which has just been reported.

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment, that of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

Mr. HANNA. This is a bill of some importance and there are very material amendments being offered. It seems to me that it would be wise and prudent to have a session of the House on Monday night for disposing of this bill.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a question of order. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HANNA. I am not debating. I merely wish to suggest that there be a session of the House on Monday night to dispose of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order, but it is competent for the gentleman to ask a parliamentary question.

Mr. HANNA. Then I make this parliamentary inquiry: would it be in order to move that Monday night be set apart for the further consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not; the previous question is operating.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

The amendment was read.

The question being taken on Mr. BURCHARD's amendment, there were—ayes 12, noes 54.

So (further count not being demanded) the amendment was not adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. The question was on the passage of the bill; and being taken, there were—ayes 53, noes 18.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I now raise the point that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As a parliamentary inquiry, I would ask whether the previous question, being in operation, if the House should now adjourn, this bill would not come up to-morrow morning as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that it would.

Mr. CONGER. As the session of the House to-night is held under a special order limiting the business to reports from the Committee for the District of Columbia it appears to me that this bill, if not disposed of to-night, would go over to the next day when District business would be in order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In view of the statement made by the Chair, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion of Mr. FRANKLIN was not agreed to.

The motion that the House adjourn was agreed to, ayes 52, noes not counted.

And accordingly (at ten o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: Resolutions of the Board of Marine Underwriters of Philadelphia, opposing the transfer of the live-saving service to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BAYNE: The petition of Daniel K. Morgan and 125 tin-plate workers, of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, for such adjustment of the duty on tin-plate as will give relief to that industry—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, papers relating to the pension claim of R. G. Crawford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to prevent the construction of bridges across navigable rivers that will interfere with navigation—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: The petition of citizens of Martinsburgh, Pennsylvania, for the extension of the national credit to aid in the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific Ocean—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. CANNON, of Utah: The petitions of the Society of Civil and Mining Engineers, of Utah Territory, and of citizens of said Territory engaged in mining, against the abolition of the office of surveyor-general in the States and Territories—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. CHALMERS: Resolutions of Phoenix Grange, Fayette, Mississippi, that greenbacks should be made legal tenders for all debts, public and private—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. COX, of New York: Resolutions of the Oswego (New York) Board of Trade, in opposition to transferring the life-saving service to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ELLIS: The petition of Henry Rehder, for relief—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of citizens of Erie County, Pennsylvania, against the passage of House bill No. 3689—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of men and women of Ohio, for the appointment of a commission to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GOODE: The petition of citizens of Virginia, for an appropriation for the establishment of automatic buoys—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts: The petition of ship-owners, merchants, and others, of Boston, Massachusetts, for the improvement of the harbor of Scituate, Massachusetts—to the same committee.

By Mr. LANDERS: The petition of Landers, Frary & Clark, and 58 others, of New Britain, Connecticut, for legislation to extend the export trade of the United States—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Landers, Frary & Clark, and 45 others, of New Britain, Connecticut, against the granting of license or register to foreign-built ships—to the same committee.

By Mr. MONEY: The petition of Benjamin Roach and others, of Mississippi, for the refunding of the cotton tax—to the same committee.

By Mr. STENGER: The petition of 1,114 citizens of Franklin County, Pennsylvania, for the extension of the national credit to the completion of a great southern line to the Pacific—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York: The petition of J. B. Enos, Saxton & Thompson, Hannamans & Ingalls, and Thayer & Beige, for the imposition of duties on foreign flour—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. TUCKER: The petition of citizens of Campbell County, Virginia, for the passage of the Texas Pacific Railroad bill—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. WALSH: The petitions of Peter Yarnell and Petronilla Byrne, for pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Two petitions of officers of the Navy, in behalf of sailmakers—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 20, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Washington, District of Columbia. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I call for the regular order.

CORRECTION OF JOURNAL.

Mr. SAMPSON. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. Would it be in order to correct the Journal of several days ago?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. SAMPSON. On the 4th of April I offered a resolution and requested that it should be referred to the Committee on Printing. The RECORD shows that the resolution was so referred. In the Journal it appears incorrectly to have been withdrawn. I simply desire to get the resolution before the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman might reintroduce the resolution and that would have the same effect as the original action of the House.

REPORT UPON HOG CHOLERA.

Mr. SAMPSON. I will do so. I offer the following resolution, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the Senate Executive Document No. 35, second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, being the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the subject of hog cholera, be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the House.

There was no objection; and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution calling for information.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded and the Chair has no volition. The unfinished business of yesterday is the question upon the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 4425) relative to the Washington Market Company, upon which the previous question has been ordered.

The question was taken upon the passage of the bill, and the bill was passed.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will allow us to have a morning hour.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to say that I will not oppose the motion of my friend on the Committee on Appropriations, there being an understanding between us that on Tuesday next we shall have a morning hour, and then go to the Speaker's table to dispose of the remaining business upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WADDELL. I want to know what this understanding is.

Mr. COX, of New York. It was an understanding merely between myself and the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York said that he would not oppose the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, because on Tuesday the Committee on Appropriations will not interfere with the morning hour. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Georgia; but before putting that question the Chair desires to announce certain appointments for service on committees.

SERVICE ON COMMITTEES.

The Clerk read the following appointments:

Mr. DEAN, of Massachusetts, on the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, vice Mr. WALKER, resigned;

Mr. ACKLEN, of Louisiana, on the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, vice Mr. LEONARD, deceased; and

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, on the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to fill a vacancy.

The question was then taken on Mr. BLOUNT's motion, and on a division there were—ayes 102, noes 42.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I call for tellers.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Then we must have tellers as a matter of right.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 54. So the motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Cox, of New York, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4246) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment when the committee last rose was, to strike out in line 21, on page 2, "$25,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$40,000;" so that it will read: "for preparation and publication of post-route maps, $40,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a statement in relation to this matter. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. There was expended on this item of post-route maps last year $20,000. This appropriation has varied from $20,000 in 1871 to $30,000 in 1876. In 1871 there was for this item $20,000 appropriated; in 1872, $20,000; in 1873, $22,000; in 1874, $27,000; in 1875, $30,000; in 1876, $30,000; in 1877, $20,000; and in 1878, $25,000 was appropriated. Now in 1877 the Committee on Appropriations made a further reduction to $20,000 and during the last Congress for this fiscal year the committee appropriated the sum of $25,000.

Now, sir, during this session the argument was made that it was necessary to appropriate $5,000 additional in order to complete certain maps that the Department were wanting to complete, and the appropriation was made and they have the use of it.

The committee have provided not only that $5,000 for a specific purpose, but they have increased the appropriation for these maps to $25,000, which is more than has been appropriated generally for this purpose.

I want to say that so far as this bill is concerned the Committee on Appropriations have dealt with it more tenderly than with any other bill and have, in my judgment, been exceedingly liberal and appropriated more than the service of the Government required.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me ask the gentleman whether he has a detailed statement of the items which make up this $25,000?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will find it on page 85 of the Postmaster-General's report; and it is there shown that a large part of it is to go for the pay of persons employed in this service. Any gentleman who will look at the matter will find that this branch of the service is growing up like everything else in this Government. Whenever any branch of the service gets a start it continues to grow and increase and is fertile with reasons for its life and growth. I hope the House is not going to assent to this method of increasing these appropriations.

Mr. BANNING. Is it not the fact that for want of sufficient appropriations maps of several of the States and Territories have not been made up to this time?

Mr. BLOUNT. That was alleged when we met here in the extra session; and we made an appropriation on this subject. But so far as that is concerned the gentleman will find that it has not been the policy of the Government to do everything at once. I know of no special embarrassment in regard to this matter. We always get letters on this subject as we do in regard to everything else; and I want to say to my friend that if the communication from every little bureau officer is to be the foundation for an increase of appropriations it is utterly useless for the Committee on Appropriations or the House to attempt to stand in the way of their increase.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of every proper economy and of cutting off every unnecessary expense—as much so, I think, as my friend from Georgia; but this appropriation is not only recommended by a "little bureau," but it has been recommended unanimously, I understand, by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads after a full consideration of the matter. These maps are very useful. They enable the Post-Office Department to establish post-roads intelligently, and they conduce to economy by enabling the Department to find the proper places for post-offices and suitable routes upon which to transport the mails.

I submit that to appropriate a sufficient sum of money to make proper maps of all the States and Territories, showing the post-routes and post-offices, is a measure in the direction of economy.

I generally make it a rule to vote with a committee reporting a measure, and particularly the Committee on Appropriations, which works, I know, faithfully in the direction of economy. I think that when a committee of this House to which a subject has been referred has considered the subject fully and reported unanimously thereon it is hardly fair for my friend from Georgia to say that it is only recommended by some "little bureau." The appropriation is not only recommended by the bureau and by the Post-Office Department, but also by a committee of this House. Hence I think it fair for us to conclude that it is needed; and, if it is needed, it is right for us to make the appropriation.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I hope that this amendment will prevail. I have had some occasion, so far as my own State is concerned, to look into this question, and I find that the post-office map of our State is very incorrect; and the Department cannot correct it from the fact that the system of surveys prevailing in other States does not exist in ours. Hence with us it is more expensive for the Department to procure correct information and make an accurate map than in perhaps any other State in the Union. Knowing the necessity for these maps, I am satisfied after conferring with the Department in regard to this matter that the amendment ought to prevail. I do not like to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations, but I feel that this is a point which we cannot very well afford to give up. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WADDELL. I have but a word or two to say in vindication of the action of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. We have not acted inconsiderately in making our recommendation to the House in regard to this appropriation. On the contrary we have carefully examined the matter. In regard to the remark of the chairman of the subcommittee, my friend from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] about these communications coming from "small bureaus" for an increase of expenditure, I have to say that the Postmaster-General in his last report makes this statement:

The work of preparing and publishing post-route maps has been delayed in consequence of inadequate appropriations. All that has been accomplished during the year with the sum appropriated for this work has been the preparation of new editions of most of the maps previously issued. To enable the Department to prepare and issue post-route maps in permanent form of the Pacific States and Territories, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Texas, Arkansas, and the Indian Territory,

I recommend an increased appropriation of a sufficient amount to insure their execution.

The Second Assistant Postmaster-General also makes this statement in his report:

I earnestly recommend that the work of the office of the topographer of the Department be sustained by more ample appropriations than have been allowed for the past two fiscal years, as I find that not only have the current postal diagrams, so necessary for the daily use of almost every desk in the Department, been unavoidably getting in arrears, but that the work toward the construction and publication of several of the maps most urgently required has been laid aside for want of means. Maps of Georgia, Texas, Arkansas, and the Indian Territory, California, Nevada, Oregon, and the Territories are daily called for, and cannot be furnished under present circumstances.

In addition to this we had before us the topographer of the Department, and from his statement the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads could not see how that bureau could be run with the appropriation provided for here. He has twenty-two employes in his branch of the Department; and the salary of those employes (which he would like to increase if he could, but he does not propose to do so) would nearly absorb the whole amount of this appropriation, without allowing anything for the preparation of maps and all matters incidental thereto.

Therefore I hope the House will consent to this. It is quite as disagreeable to me to demand an increase of these appropriations as to any member of the House. It is no pleasure for me to do so, but I look upon it as absolutely necessary, as does the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BEEBE. I renew the amendment for the purpose of asking a question.

It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that the last clause of this paragraph provides that the Postmaster-General may authorize the publication and sale of such maps to individuals at the cost thereof, the proceeds of said sale to be applied as a further appropriation for said purpose. My object in addressing the committee at this time is to call for an explanation of this provision of the paragraph. As I understand from the reading of the paragraph there is an appropriation of $25,000 made for the preparation of these maps. That, it seems to me, would be sufficient to meet the purposes of gratuitous distribution. If others than those who are entitled to maps desire them they must pay the cost thereof. We find that money, instead of being turned into the Treasury, is a continuing appropriation, and I see no reason why that should be done. I have no doubt the member of the Committee on Appropriations reporting this bill may give some valuable information on the subject, not only satisfactory to myself but to others.

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as the inquiry of the gentleman who has just taken his seat is concerned, I say that the language used in this section is not original in this bill, but grew up in the last Congress. It was then suggested there were many outside of the Government employes who would like to have these maps, and it was therefore provided they might sell these maps to individuals and use the fund for the continuous reproduction and sale of maps to other persons; and that no injury has come from this will be found by consulting the Postmaster-General and the reports of the Department. The gentleman from New York will find that only $600 was derived from the sale of maps.

Gentlemen say that it is important to the service these maps should be furnished. My friend from Texas says the map of that State is erroneous; but he does not tell this House of any embarrassment to the mails growing out of that matter. These maps are a convenience to the officers in the distribution of the mails, but the demand is not of that character which goes to the efficiency of the service, but a matter of convenience to the Department.

My friend says that they have been getting just enough to pay the salaries of the officers. In 1871 and 1872 they got $20,000, $5,000 less than now, and in 1873 just about enough to pay the officers, and no more. Then the great bulk of the work was done in making up these maps, and yet we are now told it is only enough to pay the officers, and no more. This is the character of these communications.

My friend from North Carolina says the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has examined this matter. I protest I am not sensitive on the subject of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads examining into the receipts and expenditures of the Post-Office Department. They are not in the habit of doing it, they are not familiar with them, for under the rules of this House the receipts and expenditures of the Post-Office Department do not belong to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The labors for years on this subject and the information this House has had and acted on have been of the men whose business and habit it has been to consider this subject; and when you take the legislation and compare it with what has been expended in previous years, and in addition to that the deficiencies forced upon this House, I think it is about time we were standing still. If this thing is to be done on each and every item, if we are to have this sort of examination, then deficiency bills which are to come in here will be increased far beyond any which have heretofore existed. I have acquiesced in deficiency bills, or so-called deficiency bills, coming in here. I have thought they were wrong, but our friends bring them before this House. If we are to be retarded and frustrated by other committees, not in the habit of considering these appropriations, I confess to some hopelessness in cutting down the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to the fact that his amendment is for $45,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state that.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Georgia that I acknowledge his aptness in making up this bill, and, as I have said once or twice before, he has made a very good one in many respects, but in this respect it is not sufficient. The gentleman seems to be acting on the idea that when a map is made for one year it is made for all time; but that is not so. We have a great number of new routes on which service is put in States and Territories every year, and a map which was made two or three years ago for practical use of the Department and by the committees of this House is now of no account. These routes are ordered by Congress and service put upon them and this force of clerks is to be made large enough to keep up one hundred and fifty copies day by day. I hold in my hand a statement of the maps which have been published. It is official, and in many of these States the maps are absolutely obsolete and of no account because of the many changes made. Take, for instance, the maps in Kentucky and Tennessee. Tennessee is about ready for publication, and Kentucky will be ready in May. The map of Texas is obsolete and a new map of that State is in preparation. In California and Nevada and Idaho and Montana and Utah and New Mexico and Arizona, where the service is being extended, they can only get photograph copies, and those necessarily are imperfect. They do not show the service as it is now. They are changed month by month and year by year, by hand.

Now, the Treasury Department uses these maps. And when you cut down the appropriation to $25,000, with a force of twenty-two clerks, it will not more than pay the salaries of these clerks, leaving nothing for material and for changing the maps. The result is that you unnecessarily and wrongfully cripple this service.

I called attention the other day to the further fact that you do not give force enough to the topographer's office to make maps to sell to other people; with twenty-two clerks they cannot make enough maps for the Departments of the Government and for the committees of this House and for the employes of the Post-Office Department, who must have them if they intelligently and properly carry on the service.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have one word to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois and then I will ask for a vote. If the House lacked a reason for sustaining the Committee on Appropriations the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, as just made, furnishes it. He has read to the committee a statement and gone through nearly all the States and Territories.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I presume the gentleman does not want to misrepresent me. I did not go through nearly all the States and Territories. But if the gentleman wishes it I will put the whole table in the RECORD.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope I will not be interrupted. When I get through I think the gentleman will find that I do not misrepresent him. I will put it in another form. The gentleman read to the House what seemed to be a list of the few States or sections of the country not supplied with maps. The great bulk of them have been supplied.

The gentleman stated that I seemed to think that when a map of a country was made that was a finality. That, Mr. Chairman, is not to be inferred from anything that I said. But I think it shows something has been done on that subject. The gentleman calls the attention of the committee to the fact that it now requires, after so much has been done in the matter of map-making, $26,000 to pay to men employed to make them; but some years ago $24,000 paid for the employes and all the material used in the making of those maps.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Would not the gentleman's argument justify the abolishing of the department altogether and making no maps?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. They did not make any maps at all a few years ago.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to hear the proviso about the sale of maps read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the whole clause as it will be if amended.

The clause as proposed to be amended was read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the last word.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, that a bill generally so thoroughly good as this and so carefully prepared should have two or three places where the differences between the Committee on Appropriations and many members of the House are so sharp that I trust the gentleman in charge of the bill will crown its success by not insisting on the provisions of the bill as they stand, where so many gentlemen think he has cut too deeply into the service. In regard to this particular matter I wish to say, besides the uses named by other gentlemen to all the route agents through the United States, these maps are the charts necessary for their guidance. They are like the mariner's charts on the ocean; and if the route agent does his duty successfully and well he must have before him, under his eye, a thoroughly accurate map, brought up to date, of all the routes along his line of travel, so that he may with accuracy and correctness dispose of the mail as it comes along.

The gentleman from Georgia suggests the sale of maps will make up for what is lacking in this appropriation. If that were true it would be a perfect answer to any demand for an increase of the appropriation. But I would suggest that generally private individuals have no interest in buying these maps; and persons in the public service should not be required to do so. We should not require our post-route agents to buy the official maps to enable them to do their duty. There is not a member of Congress who does not need to have a postal map of his district rectified about once a year by sending it back and having it corrected and brought up to date, with the different colored lines put on marking the various routes in his district. He is thus able to see precisely the weekly, the tri-weekly, and the daily service on all the routes in his district, and to cut down this item to the amount placed in the bill is to cut it down almost to the naked amount now paid for salaries without paying for material; and I do not believe the sale realized under this proviso will be in any manner adequate to keeping up the service.

Now the difference between the bill and the proposed amendment is so slight that it seems to me that if the gentleman in charge of it would give way upon it his bill would pass almost with acclamation, and I hope he will let it pass.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I desire to answer the formal amendment just made by stating that the necessity of overhauling these maps and making new maps results to a great degree from the growth of our frontier. I have been in this House three years. There has been but a single new post-route established in my district in those three years, and yet in Texas, in Kansas, in Nebraska, and in the Territories during those three years a new world has grown up, and if the maps of the Department are to represent what exists and what has come into existence during this time, there has got to be added to the maps in existence three years ago a new world, not for my district but for the frontier. I understand that twenty thousand new post-routes have been established in that time, and all of these have to be spread upon the maps. It seems to me that in view of the necessity of filling up the maps we are doing no wrong in raising this appropriation to $40,000, and the gentleman from Georgia ought to thank God that he has a country large enough to need it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who seems to misapprehend the object of the provision that the Postmaster-General may authorize the publication and sale of said maps to individuals at the cost thereof. I will state the object of that provision. It was said during the last Congress, when the post-office appropriation bill was being considered, that the appropriation merely furnished enough maps for the Government employes, and that often gentlemen outside for motives of curiosity desired to have these maps.

Mr. GARFIELD. That provision is very proper; I do not object to it, but it does not help to make up the appropriation, for the sale of these maps is very small.

Mr. BLOUNT. It was not intended to make up the appropriation. The appropriation in this bill for this purpose is larger than the amount generally appropriated when the gentleman was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know that.

Mr. BLOUNT. And there has been some work on the maps in the mean time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 135, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEEBE. I move to amend the clause by striking out of lines 23 and 24 the words "proceeds of said sales to be applied as a further appropriation for said purpose."

My object in doing so is this: if the proceeds of the sale last year amounted to $600 what was done with the money? What did the Postmaster-General do with these $600? I want to leave it so that under the general law the Postmaster-General can apply the proceeds of these sales to any purpose in the Department where they may be needed. As I understand the general law the Postmaster-General can apply the revenues of the Department to the expenses of the Department. Now, it seems to me that instead of turning this money over for the preparation of more maps, if there is no demand for more maps, the money might better be used in some other direction.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it would be a dangerous thing to put a general fund into the hands of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BEEBE. What becomes of the money?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is wholly within this very bureau in which it is to be expended, and the theory of our legislation for years past has been to leave no funds to be used generally except a small contingency fund, and this would allow the Postmaster-General to use this money where he pleases.

Mr. BEEBE. Suppose the proceeds of the sale should amount to $20,000, what would become of the $20,000?

Mr. GARFIELD. There would simply be an unexpended balance to go back into the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year, whereas if the Postmaster-General was allowed to use it he might add it to his contingent fund or use it in any way he thought proper.

Mr. BEEBE. It does not go back to the Treasury under this clause.

Mr. GARFIELD. But it does under the general provisions of the law at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BEEBE. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For advertising, $60,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail-lettings of each State and Territory to be conspicuously posted up in each post-office in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting; and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail-lettings.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move to amend that clause, in line 27, by inserting after the words "to be" the following:

Printed in one or more newspapers in the counties through which mail service may be called for.

So that it will read:

For advertising, $60,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail-lettings of each State and Territory to be printed in one or more newspapers in the counties through which mail service may be called for, and conspicuously posted up in each post-office in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting; and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail-lettings.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I trust the gentleman from Georgia will withhold the point of order for a moment and allow me to explain this matter, and then I will address myself to the point of order at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have to remark in the first place that there is no subject in connection with our mail service more complained of than the fact that large sums of money are paid to mail contractors in distant sections of the country. Why is that done? Under the present mode of advertising, citizens in remote districts of the country do not see the advertisements of the Post-Office Department. They are only seen by a set of men called the "post-office ring," who take advantage of this fact and procure large contracts for mail service. Now, in order to prevent this and to bring the knowledge of the lettings home to the people in the region of country through which the service is to be performed, I submit that it is in the interest of economy that these advertisements shall be made local.

Further, in connection with the point of order, it will be observed that in line 31 it is provided "and no other advertisement of such letting shall be required." I hold that, taking the entire section into consideration, the amendment I propose is germane and pertinent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not raise any question as to the amendment being germane, but it is new legislation and involves an additional appropriation of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment involves new legislation and does not tend to retrench expenditures.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the proviso contained in this paragraph.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve the question of order.

Mr. DUNNELL. There has passed during this Congress a bill reported from the Committee on Printing covering this question of advertising; and the provisions of this proviso are in conflict with the terms of that bill. If I had the act here I would move that it be substituted for this proviso.

Mr. BLOUNT. I know that the bill referred to passed this House, and I think it very likely, from what I have gathered, that it will pass the Senate. I ask, therefore, that this paragraph be informally passed over, with the understanding that we may return to it hereafter.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will consent to that.

Mr. WADDELL. The bill referred to has been passed by the Senate with amendments. It is now before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. DUNNELL. It has passed the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia, as the Chair understands, waives the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Then I reserve the point of order, though I am willing that the paragraph shall be passed by, with the privilege of returning to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not withdrawn the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be regarded as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the compensation of postmasters of the fourth class shall be the box-rents collected at their offices and commissions on other postal revenues of their offices at the rate of 60 per cent. on the first $100 or less per quarter, 50 per cent. on the next $300 or less per quarter, 40 per cent. on the excess above $400 per quarter; the same to be ascertained and allowed by the Auditor in the settlement of the quarterly accounts of such postmasters: Provided, That when the aggregate annual compensation, exclusive of commissions on money-order business, of any postmaster of this class shall amount to $1,000, the Auditor shall report such fact to the Postmaster-General, in order that such postmaster may be assigned to his proper class, and his salary fixed as heretofore provided.

Mr. BLOUNT. By inadvertence this paragraph does not represent the views of the Committee on Appropriations; it is not strict enough; and the committee have directed me to report as a substitute what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the compensation of postmasters of the fourth class shall be the whole of the box-rents collected at their offices, and commissions on unpaid letter-postage collected, on amounts received from waste paper, dead newspapers, printed matter, and twine sold, and on postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and newspaper and periodical stamps canceled as postages on matter actually mailed at their offices, at the following rate, namely: On the first $100 or less per quarter, 60 per cent.; on all over $100 and not over $300 per quarter, 50 per cent.; and on all over $300 per quarter, 40 per cent.; the same to be ascertained and allowed by the Auditor, in the settlement of the accounts of such postmasters, upon their sworn quarterly returns: Provided, That when the compensation of any postmaster of this class shall reach $1,000 per annum, exclusive of commissions on money-order business, and when the returns to the Auditor for four quarters shall allow him to be entitled to a compensation in excess of that amount under section 3 of this act, the Auditor shall report such fact to the Postmaster-General, who shall assign him to his proper class, and fix his salary as provided by said section: Provided further, That in no case shall there be allowed to any postmaster of this class a compensation greater than $250 in any one quarter, exclusive of money-order commissions.

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply state that this is a provision agreed upon by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and reported in House bill No. 2695. I will add that upon consultation I find that the section in this form meets entirely the views of the Department.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move to amend the substitute by adding the following proviso:

And provided further, That such additional compensation shall be allowed to postmasters at those offices where a number of post-roads terminate as may be, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, remunerative for the labor required of such postmasters.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve a question of order on this amendment.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will state my object in introducing this proviso. Gentlemen who represent sections of the country remote from railroads know that, at certain post-offices at which half a dozen or more post-roads terminate, the postmasters are charged with the labor of distributing a large quantity of mail matter. For this additional labor no compensation is provided by law. It is just to the laborer that he should receive proper reward for his labor; and it is only in this view that I have submitted the proviso.

Mr. WADDELL. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that under the existing law the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, make allowance for clerk hire at distributing offices.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. That is an allowance for clerk hire; this is for the postmaster himself.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The proposition of my friend from Tennessee is to increase the pay of postmasters. This is new legislation, for which there is no authority of law; and besides it increases expenses. Therefore it is not in order on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It would appear on the face of the amendment from the words "additional compensation" that it does increase expenditures. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to offer an amendment to the original text of the bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. I propose to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations by striking out the words "one thousand" where they occur in the latter part of the amendment and inserting "twelve hundred;" also by striking out the words "two hundred and fifty" and inserting "three hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama, who desires to amend the original text, will be first recognized. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota will be in order afterward.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to strike out after the word "be," in line 39, the following:

The box-rents collected at their offices and commissions on other postal revenues of their offices at the rate of 60 per cent. on the first $100 or less per quarter, 50 per cent. on the next $300 or less per quarter, 40 per cent. on the excess above $400 per quarter; the same to be ascertained and allowed by the Auditor in the settlement of the quarterly accounts of such postmasters.

And in lieu thereof insert, "the same as now provided by law;" so it will read:

That the compensation of postmasters of the fourth class shall be the same as now provided by law: Provided, That, &c.

Mr. Chairman, there has been—and doubtless there have been good grounds for it—complaint against postmasters of the fourth class for illegally trading in postage-stamps. By the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads it is proposed to remedy the evil by a change in the manner of making compensation to these postmasters. They propose to make the change by substituting for percentage on the sale a percentage on the stamps canceled. They say that will remedy the evil. I hold—and I believe if the House will listen to me but a moment they will agree with me—this will be no remedy for that evil. If men are disposed to swindle, if postmasters are disposed to cheat the Government, the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will not prevent it, but in fact will enable them more effectually to continue that practice than under any other mode. If a dishonest postmaster is disposed to swindle the Government he may report the cancellation of a thousand stamps when in fact he has not canceled more than fifty, and how are you to detect it? How do they propose to detect it except by evidence, except by prosecution before the courts and the fact proved by witnesses. It is the only way to do it. The proposition I offer is to give compensation as now provided by law. The bill as reported in the original text provides a remedy for this evil which has grown up under the system of trading in postage-stamps. Under the law as it now stands there is no penalty. The law prohibits the sale of postage-stamps for more than their face value, but it does not prohibit any sale of postage-stamps for less than their face value. The law as it now stands does not prohibit trading postage-stamps for goods or anything of that sort, but the bill as reported does prohibit that, and makes it a penal offense, and makes all who do it indictable. That will remedy the evil more than the proposition coming from the committee. Another reason why I oppose the amendment is that while it does not remedy the evil it increases the duties of the postmasters. It will increase their work to a three-fold extent. It is proposed that the postmasters of the country who are now the poorest-paid officers of the Government shall be required in addition to the work they now have to do to keep an account of every stamp canceled by them. Instead of this proving an economical mode it will prove otherwise, because it will increase the clerical force in your post-offices. It will increase expenses instead of decreasing them. I am as much opposed to this illegal traffic in postage-stamps as any gentleman on this floor, but I do not wish in remedying that evil to increase the work and labor of the postmasters of the country. I think it can be remedied without it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HEWITT,] and have only a word to say in this connection. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] an eminently proper one, and that it should receive the sanction of the House. It is well known that a great abuse exists in the sale of stamps, at least that is the information we have from the Post-Office Department, and some action should be taken without delay that will correct it. The speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] is an argument in favor of the remedy proposed by the gentleman from Georgia rather than against it. You may take any of the large offices of the country, and, upon inquiry of the postmasters thereof, you will find that some of the largest merchants of those cities, many who, in the transaction of their daily business, require a large number of stamps, do not purchase a single one of their own postmasters, and why? They get them elsewhere. Under the law as it now exists, they can be purchased far below their face value. I am informed they are frequently received in payment of bills by merchants; hence they have no necessity of purchasing them when they are sold at par.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That is prohibited.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Yes, a penalty is prescribed for it, but I have yet to learn that any wrong is necessarily prevented because a penalty is prescribed. According to the gentleman's theory the only thing you have to do to prevent the commission of any wrong or any infraction of the law is to enact a statute declaring a penalty for it. That is the gentleman's argument.

He is fearful, too, that the postmasters of the country will be overworked. Let them be paid, then, according to the labor they perform. I can tell him if any postmaster in his district desires to resign there will be many applicants for every vacancy.

This measure strikes in the right direction. It will correct an abuse which now exists in the Post-Office Department and which should be eradicated without a moment's hesitation. I am not thoroughly informed in that respect, and I ask the gentleman from Georgia whether the amendment is not founded upon the recommendation of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir; it is recommended by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I thought so. This amendment places the salary where it should be. It says the postmasters shall have a certain percentage upon the stamps canceled at their offices; that is, that they shall be paid in proportion to work done at their offices and amount of business transacted, and that they shall not have a percentage on the amount of stamps sold, which has led to a great abuse and which inflicts great loss upon the Government. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Committee on Appropriations would never have entertained this change but for the fact that they believed they could reduce the expenditures of the Government and preserve the public service. The Postmaster-General estimated for the compensation of postmasters $7,500,000 under the old law. We are told by the Department that they can get along with the $7,250,000, provided we make this change. We have the opinion of every person connected with the Post-Office Department and of every gentleman connected with the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, so far as I have heard, in favor of it; and I think that the abuses and the frauds perpetrated upon the Department in this way have been spread and noised abroad throughout this land to such an extent as to induce this House without further debate to adopt this change.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to say one more word.

In the law as it now stands, as I said a moment ago, there is no prohibition of a postmaster selling stamps to whom he pleases and where he pleases. There is no provision in the law that prohibits him from trading them for goods or paying his debts with them—I mean in the present law as it now stands. And it was under that law this abuse had grown up, and just because the law did not prohibit it. The only prohibition against it was a mere order of a Department, and an order, in my opinion, that the law did not authorize the Department to make. The penalty attached to the offense under this general order of the Post-Office Department was a simple removal from office. That was all.

But now the Committee on Appropriations have reported a bill here which I favor and which I think ought to be adopted, which absolutely prohibits the sale of stamps for less than their face value. We never had a law before that did this. There is no law now in force that forbids it. This bill not only prohibits that, but it prohibits postmasters from trading in stamps for goods, from using them in buying goods, or paying their debts with them; and it affixes a severe penalty for the violation of the law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, postmasters of the fourth class receiving less than $1,000 per annum, to the number, say, of thirty-five thousand, are paid in proportion to the number of stamps they sell, that is, for the first one hundred dollars' worth of stamps the postmaster receives $60, on the next two hundred dollars' worth sold he receives $100, and after that at the rate of $40 for each one hundred dollars' worth sold; while in the great city offices the compensation is adjusted in a different way, and in those large offices where the postmaster sells one hundred dollars' worth of stamps, the Government gets $100 in return. Now, if each one of the thirty-five thousand postmasters who receive less than $1,000 a year only sold stamps that are used upon letters mailed at his office, then the present law would operate fairly both to the postmaster and the Government. But it is alleged that some of the postmasters who receive from $40 to $60 profit on every one hundred dollars' worth of stamps sold, exchange stamps for merchandise or sell them at less than their face value, and that stamps so sold find their way to the cities or larger towns for use or sale in competition with postmasters at such cities. The Postmaster-General has called attention to this abuse and asks such legislation as will prevent it. It is estimated at the Department that the loss to the Government is over $1,000,000 annually from this abuse. Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed provides that the postmaster shall keep an account of all stamps canceled by him upon matter mailed at his office and shall be paid the percentage on the stamps canceled and not upon the amount sold; and if a postmaster now only sells stamps that are used at his office, the amendment will not change his compensation in the least.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe any considerable number of fourth-class postmasters act dishonestly; but it would be strange indeed if out of the thirty-five thousand, with no penalty attached, at least a few of them do not, as alleged, avail themselves of the opportunity to make their commission of from 40 to 60 per cent. by sales of stamps other than to the ordinary customers in the limit of their respective offices.

Mr. DANFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman whether these honest postmasters of the fourth class do not complain of the manner in which they are compelled to keep their accounts by this change in the law proposed by the committee rather than of the change in their compensation; whether that is not the great matter of complaint with them?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will be frank with the gentleman and say I have no doubt there is some complaint on that score, because it is some trouble for a man to keep an account of all the stamps he has canceled; not a great deal perhaps where he systematizes the work. But mind you, it is only postmasters of the fourth class who have to keep that account. Hence the argument of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] does not hold good when he says they will have to have more clerk hire, because the Government in no case pays for clerk hire where the salary is under $2,000.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. How do you determine the salary?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. By the number of stamps the man cancels and returns a statement of under oath.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. In addition to what has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and others, in which I concur, I wish to say that in thus disturbing or changing the method of computation or of adjustment of the salary there is one consideration which in my judgment is entirely left out. This section proposed by the committee from the bill of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads is a complete reprint of the law except as to the fourth-class postmasters, the proposition being to change the method of arriving at the compensation and basing it on the cancellation of stamps.

Now, I wish gentlemen to hear me how that will affect the large number of men in my own part of the country; and I presume the same thing is true elsewhere, but it is especially true in the Northwest; and that is this: the large share of the towns on those lines that carry postal cars are fourth-class offices, built up, indeed, by the railroad itself.

A large share, it is true, of the postal matter goes directly from the office, but it is estimated that from one-tenth to one-fourth of the entire amount of postal matter is placed directly in the postal cars. Now the postmasters of this class are those least able to bear this disturbance of their salaries. The postmasters of the second and third classes receive salaries and are better able to bear a reduction than those of the fourth class, and yet it is from these honest postmasters, or those that we propose to make honest, that you propose to take from one-tenth to one-fourth of the entire amount of their compensation for the reason that a large portion of postal matter is put directly in the cars where the postage-stamps are canceled, and therefore the legitimate business of the office at those points is not included in the computation of their compensation.

Now, if the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] is voted down, we shall reach the amendment offered by the gentleman in charge of the bill, and I propose to offer an amendment to his amendment which will cover this particular point, although I sympathize with the change proposed by the committee.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] spoke of dishonest postmasters.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I said there were a few of them.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. My experience in my country is that our postmasters are generally honest men.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman does not want to misrepresent me. I expressly said that the great mass of them are honest.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have but five minutes and cannot yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But the gentleman does not want to make me say that the postmasters generally are dishonest, for I want to say expressly that I think nearly all the postmasters are honest, but that once in a while you will find a dishonest man among the thirty-five thousand of them, and you have to legislate against the dishonest ones.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The best remedy is to have honest men appointed postmasters, and if they are now dishonest the fault is not with this side of the House.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is a wonderful discovery.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. There may be occasionally a dishonest postmaster. I have no doubt that there are some and I do not wish to lay upon the republican party the fault that they have been appointed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman entirely in that proposition.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The question and the only question for the committee to determine is which is the better proposition for the protection of the Government to prevent dishonest men from swindling the Government, the one I propose or the one that comes from the committee. The amendment I propose prohibits, under a penalty, illegal traffic in postage-stamps; the amendment of the committee prohibits false returns by a postmaster of the number of stamps that he has canceled. The law can be enforced under the proposition I proposed; it will effectually prohibit the illegal traffic in postage-stamps and will save the country a large amount of money yearly, which is thrown away now in the manner in which gentlemen have spoken of, and I submit to the gentleman from Illinois and to the committee that it will be easier to detect any violation of the law under the proposition I submit than it will be under the proposition of the committee. If a postmaster deals illegally in postage-stamps there is a third party connected with the transaction; there are witnesses to it. But who is to witness the cancellation of these stamps? Who can determine the number of stamps that a postmaster cancels? Where are you to find proof that he canceled but twenty-five stamps when he swears that he canceled a thousand? The proposition of the committee opens wider the door to fraud than does my proposition.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I offer a formal amendment for the purpose of saying a word in favor of the amendment of the committee. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] just made the remark that we must have honest men for postmasters, which is correct; but let us not forget that we must also close the door to temptation in order to make a man dishonest. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter which I received last evening from a postmaster, whose office is a presidential one, who states that his salary is to be fixed in the next week on the basis of the last quarter, and that in his town large business houses have purchased their stamps at other points, and that he has to do business with those stamps for the next three months and to get nothing for it.

His salary cannot be again adjusted for one year. He has to do the work for the next six months with the stamps that have been purchased at the little offices around the country; and he gets nothing for it.

It is impossible under the present system, if you take men who are ordinarily honest, to prevent these frauds and this difficulty. I recollect within the last six months the case of a postmaster who came to my office with tears in his eyes because he was to be removed for the sale of three dollars' worth of postage-stamps which he had paid out for repair of harness. He said he had been told that it was legitimate to sell these stamps at any price above what he was allowed for them by the Post-Office Department; in other words, that if he was to account to the Post-Office Department for them at the rate of sixty cents on the dollar, he could sell them at sixty-five or seventy or eighty cents on the dollar, just as he chose. And I have in my mind one instance in which a postmaster sold two hundred dollars' worth of stamps at one time for eighty cents on the dollar; and on that very basis his salary was fixed for the year.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I propose to prohibit that very thing.

Mr. HUMPHREY. And by this amendment of the committee we propose to close the door and let every postmaster be put upon his honor, the value of the office to be determined by the cancellation of stamps. There is no other way. We must come to this point. The frauds in this respect have reached to every part of the country, until to-day stamps enough have been purchased to do the business of large firms for six months to come—purchased in view of the amendment which the committee have prepared to this bill and which it is understood the House will pass without a dissenting vote. I am sorry that this morning a voice is raised against it. The fraud in this respect, as I was told at the Department this morning, has deprived it of between eight hundred thousand and a million dollars of income during the last year. I ask whether fraud of this kind can be put down by any other process than by throwing this work upon each postmaster and by putting him on his honor, even down to a one-cent postage-stamp?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not think the evil will be remedied by putting the postmaster on his honor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Then we will put him on his merit. If he has no honor, we will put him out and put some man in his place who has honor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] by striking out the words "one thousand" and inserting "twelve hundred," and by striking out "two hundred and fifty" and inserting "three hundred."

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. An income of $1,000 under the present law makes a post-office a presidential office. The effect of this amendment is to decrease the number of presidential post-offices by increasing the basis from $1,000 to $1,200.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the income of a postmaster whose salary is $950 is less when the business of the office amounts to $1,100 than when it is $950. When the office becomes a presidential office the postmaster must account for the box rents; he is not allowed a clerk; he is compelled to pay expenses which he is not obliged to pay if the income is only $999. If the income is $1,000, then by the force of the law he is made a presidential postmaster; is compelled to account for box rents; is not allowed a clerk; and is subjected to other expenses. In this way it is a misfortune to him that he is a presidential postmaster.

Now, if this basis be carried up to $1,200, the operation of the law will be somewhat the same as at present, although not so severe. The postmasters who are most poorly paid for the work that they do are those whose income ranges from $900 to $1,500. If their income is above $1,000, they must account for box-rents; they must pay the rent of their offices; they are not allowed a clerk, though sometimes they are allowed one or two hundred dollars for clerk hire. Let the basis be $1,200, and the hardship falling upon this class of postmasters is very much relieved.

I think that if the committee will consider for a moment the operation of the law as it now is, it will not fail to adopt the amendment. I know that postmasters who understand the position in which they are placed have asked that no effort be made in their behalf to make their offices presidential. Postmasters who expect the presidential appointment when it becomes a presidential office have preferred to be in the fourth class; preferred not to be appointed by the President but by the Postmaster-General. The increased income under the amendment will go to the very class of men who do the most work for the least compensation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is that the amendment proposes an increase of compensation to certain classes of postmasters.

Mr. DUNNELL. Oh, that point is not well taken.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will allow me to get through.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will.

Mr. BLOUNT. Whether that objection be well founded or not, there is another. This is new legislation which upon its face does not reduce expenditures. I think the first point is good; certainly the latter is.

Mr. DUNNELL. I rely upon the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not reliable on that subject.

[Laughter.] The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RIDDLE. I propose to amend the amendment by inserting the following:

And they shall be allowed one-half the fees on money-orders issued, and one-half of 1 per cent. commission on all money-orders paid, instead of the fees and commissions now allowed on the money-order business.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on that amendment. I do not think it is necessary to take up any time in arguing the matter.

Mr. RIDDLE. It is for the benefit of small money-order offices in the country where the compensation is inadequate, where there is but little pay for what is done and none at all for this additional trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it increase the compensation?

Mr. RIDDLE. It does.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. I move the following amendment:

And provided further, That in case of offices of the fourth class situated at localities where mail matter may be deposited directly in postal cars, the stamps canceled on matter deposited at such points in postal cars shall be added to the stamps canceled at the offices at the same points in ascertaining and allowing the compensation of such officers of the fourth class; and for the purpose of determining the amount of stamps canceled in postal cars, the Postmaster-General shall instruct the proper postal officers in charge of such cars to register and report the amount thereof daily deposited at such points respectively, for such periods as shall, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, fairly determine the average thereof per annum.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is new legislation and therefore not in order.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. I anticipated the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. The same point was made as to a previous amendment. It occurs to me that while the point of order may be well taken to an amendment to the original bill, it is not applicable to an amendment to an amendment. If this were a provision in the bill, then it would be a different thing. Here is a proposition offered by the gentleman in charge of the bill which is not a part of the bill. How, then, can it be said this amendment is vulnerable to the objection unless the amendment has been adopted by the House? That is a pending amendment, to be altered or changed by amendments to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is provided in Rule 120:

Nor shall any provisions in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. One further point, and that is this: this does not enlarge the compensation of postmasters as at present.

Mr. BLOUNT. That will be the effect of the gentleman's proposition, and that is the object of it.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. That goes upon the hypothesis that the amendment to which this is moved as an amendment has already been adopted. There would be no increase in view of the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. He cannot ascertain from the amendment whether it increases or decreases expenditures.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask whether it does not appear on its face that it does change the compensation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the amendment to the committee.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 90.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. I demand tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CLARK, of Iowa, and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAMPSON. I move as an amendment to the substitute the following:

Strike out "60" and insert "70," and strike out "40" and insert "50;" and so on, increasing 10 per cent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it will read.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is new legislation.

Mr. SAMPSON. If the point of order was not well taken on the last amendment, it seems to me it is not well taken on this amendment. This is only an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia. The Chair held, in relation to the former amendment offered by my colleague, he was unable to tell whether that would increase expenses over and above existing law. It is admitted on all hands the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia will decrease expenses very largely; and it is impossible to say whether this will increase the expenses under that amendment up to the amount allowed by law. For that reason the point is not well taken. And further, this being an amendment to an amendment, the rule will not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the amendment, if adopted, with the original amendment.

Mr. SAMPSON. The amendment of the gentleman from Georgia is not part of the original bill, but an amendment to the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must take the whole together; first, whether the amendment is germane, and, second, whether it retrenches expenses.

Mr. SAMPSON. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia had been adopted prior to offering the amendment, then the point of order might have been made that it increased expenses, but that amendment has not been adopted.

Mr. WADDELL. Not at all. It does not change existing law in the least.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia on the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The proposition of the Committee on Appropriations is not to change the law as to the percentage that the postmasters are paid, but is simply to adopt another method to ascertain what they are paid. It is simply an effort to avoid fraud; that and nothing more. So that if the gentleman's proposition were adopted, the effect of it would be to increase the rate of compensation. Just another word. It does not appear that the gentleman's proposition retrenches expenditure. He admits that it does not appear whether it does or does not. That it may be in order on an appropriation bill it must appear that it does retrench expenditure.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to say this in reference to the point of order: as I understand the rule, primarily it prohibits any legislation except that which looks to retrenchment. Now the Committee on Appropriations come in and they ask for legislation in addition to the appropriations they seek to make. They say that that legislation tends to retrenchment, and therefore it is in order. But it is general legislation, and I submit after general legislation upon an appropriation bill is once in order then the rule ceases to apply. Being general legislation it is subject to any amendment that is germane.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman's argument were correct we would do away with the rule entirely. The very moment we introduce a proposition that looks to retrenchment and get that in order then the rule is abolished and you can get in anything.

Mr. BURCHARD. It seems to me the rule to be applied is not will this proposed amendment to the amendment retrench expenditures as measured by the pending amendment? but, will it retrench expenditures if adopted as an amendment to the amendment? Will the amended proposition retrench expenditures as compared with the existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. It is utterly impossible for the Chair to tell on the face of this amendment whether it will retrench or not. The Chair therefore will submit it to the committee, as it is a matter of doubt.

Mr. SAMPSON. Before the vote is taken I wish to say a word. I am satisfied there are no officers of the Government who do as much work for as little pay as these fourth-class postmasters. That being the case, and it being admitted by the committee who offer this amendment that it would increase the labor of the postmasters in keeping the accounts—as the accounts must necessarily be more extended and it would be a more complicated task to keep the accounts of the stamps canceled than to keep the accounts of the stamps sold—the labor of the postmasters being thus increased and as they are most miserably paid at present, where they are honest and only take the percentage they are allowed, it does seem to me this percentage ought to be increased. It is no more than fair. It is only just and reasonable on account of the increased labor imposed on those postmasters in keeping the accounts of the stamps canceled.

Mr. BLOUNT. If there were no other objection it seems to me the very fact that the compensation proposed by the gentleman from Iowa has never been recommended by any officer connected with the Post-Office Department should put this House on its guard against it. There is no recommendation of that sort from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. They have had the subject of compensation of postmasters under consideration for weeks and weeks, and have agreed to and reported to this House the identical proposition of the committee. The Committee on Appropriations before agreeing to attach it to this bill consulted with the Department and ascertained their judgment and their approval of it.

Gentlemen complain that the postmasters are not paid enough. This provides for them the method of compensation which they have had for a period extending as far back as I have had occasion to examine. I have not gone very far, but I have not seen anything to the contrary. That was the method of paying them until 1874. At that time this new method was adopted and it was claimed that the result of it would be—so I am informed by the Department—a reduction of the compensation of these fourth-class postmasters.

The proposition now from the Department is not to decrease by this legislation the amount of their salary, but to protect the Government against fraud.

The gentleman says we add to the labors of the postmasters in requiring them to keep an account of the stamps sold. Well, sir, that is true; and that has generally been true since we have had a Post-Office Department. The question is whether or not we shall get the service done under this method; and that is answered by all the past. There is an additional question, whether or not it protects the Government against fraud. Gentlemen are very sensitive lest there should be some reflection upon the fourth-class postmasters. I am not. I find misconduct in my State reported, and in other States, from every section in this Union. And as a Representative upon this floor, bound to protect the Government, I shall not hesitate to provide proper legislation against fraud, even if some over-sensitive postmasters should imagine there is some reflection upon their integrity.

Now, sir, during the last Congress this very subject was presented, and a law providing this method, I believe, was in a bill prepared by the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Sherman. Some changes were made during the last Congress; but, with the exception of this class, it is pretty much the old legislation, and I hope if there is any occasion to change this percentage that it will be done, not on an appropriation bill, but that it will be done through the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads who are charged with it. The subject of this increase to 70 per cent. has not been considered, as I understand, before any committee; and that being the case, I hope the Committee of the Whole will not entertain it.

Furthermore, if this shall be done the probability is that we shall have an increase of at least several hundred thousand dollars upon this bill. If gentlemen are prepared from time to time to load up these bills in this crude and hasty way the responsibility is not on the Committee on Appropriations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BLOUNT. My time has expired.

Mr. DANFORD. I offer a formal amendment to the amendment for the purpose of saying a few words.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question?

Mr. DANFORD. I will do so if the gentleman will not occupy too much of my time.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether if the Committee on Appropriations propose to increase the work and trouble of the postmasters of the fourth class they ought not to increase their pay?

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee only have returned to the old method, and all the increase of labor is simply in the interest of the protection of the Government. We shall be able to get postmasters without any difficulty.

Mr. DANFORD. I remember, Mr. Chairman, that in the Forty-third Congress the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads had this matter of the compensation of fourth-class postmasters before them for some weeks or months, and I remember that the very law fixing the present compensation of postmasters was suggested by the Post-Office Department. It was claimed not only to be in the interest of economy, but in the interest of an honest administration of these offices.

I want to say further that I do not know nor do I boast that I represent a more honest constituency than other gentlemen upon this floor do, but I have heard but a single complaint in my district of the improper sale of postage-stamps and that was made by a postmaster of the second or third class. An investigation was had and it was found that the receipts of that officer had been increased about 10 per cent. only. That is the only instance I know of. In my district now there is a difficulty in obtaining competent men to act as fourth-class postmasters. I have received from my district a number of letters from this class of postmasters saying that if this proposition of the committee should become a law they would decline to act. They are thoroughly honest men, and it does seem to me that in consideration of the change and manner of their compensation the increase proposed in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] should be adopted by the committee. I have never believed that it should be a primary principle in our legislation that the Post Office Department should be a self-sustaining institution. I want to see mail facilities afforded to every portion of the country, and to all the people of this country, and let the General Government and the general Treasury pay for those mail facilities to the people, even if we fail to get revenue enough to meet the demands of that Department. There is no money that the people pay from the general Treasury more willingly than that which is paid for good and efficient postal service. The principle announced by former Postmasters-General that this Department of the Government should be self-sustaining is unfair to some portions of the country.

The New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, and the Middle States are self-sustaining. They yield a revenue to the Department. It is to the sparsely settled States of the West and the Territories that the Treasury is compelled to contribute from time to time. I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is in the direction of fair compensation to these fourth-class postmasters who are poorly paid, and that it should be adopted by the committee. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. SAMPSON'S amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 53, noes 91.

Mr. SAMPSON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SAMPSON and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 44, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. BLOUNT.

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 123, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

That in any case where the Postmaster-General shall be satisfied that a postmaster has made a false return of business, it shall be within his discretion to withhold commissions on such returns, and to allow any compensation that under the circumstances he may deem reasonable: Provided, That the form of affidavit to be made by postmasters upon their returns shall be such as may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General; and any postmaster who shall make a false return to the Auditor, for the purpose of fraudulently increasing his compensation under the provisions of this or any other act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars; and no postmaster of any class, or other person connected with the postal service, intrusted with the sale or custody of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards, shall use or dispose of them in the payment of debts or in the purchase of merchandise or other salable articles, or pledge or hypothecate the same, or sell or dispose of them except for cash, or sell or dispose of postage-stamps or postal cards for any larger or less sum than the value indicated on their faces, or sell or dispose of stamped envelopes for a larger or less sum than is charged therefor by the Post Office Department for like quantities, or sell or dispose of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards otherwise than as provided by law and the regulations of the Post-Office Department; and any postmaster, or other person connected with the postal service, who shall violate any of these provisions shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, and, further, shall be disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States.

Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

For inland mail transportation, namely, for transportation on star routes and all other than railroad routes, $5,390,673.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer the following amendment: Strike out in line 87 the words "and all other than railroad routes." It is simply surplusage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For transportation by steamboat routes, $700,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may employ such number of special agents, not exceeding six, as the good of the service and safety of the mails as conveyed by the steamboat and star routes may require; such agents to be paid out of the appropriation for said service at the rate of not more than $1,000 a year each, and shall each be allowed for traveling and incidental expenses while actually employed in the service a sum not exceeding $3 a day.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to make the point of order upon the proviso to that clause as changing existing law, and evidently on its face not tending toward economy, but tending the other way.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me I will save him the trouble of making the point of order, for I proposed to move to strike out the proviso. I intended to do so, but the gentleman rose before I had an opportunity of doing it. I move that the proviso be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation by railroad, $9,100,000; $125,000 of which sum may be used by the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines of railroads for the railway post-office service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879: Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster-General may appoint one agent only to superintend the postal railway service, who shall be paid, out of the appropriation for the transportation of the mail on railways, a salary at the rate of $2,500 a year, with an allowance, for traveling and incidental expenses while actually employed in the service, not exceeding $5 per day: Provided further, That the Postmaster-General may appoint one agent to superintend the star and steamboat postal service, who shall be paid, out of the appropriation for said service, a salary at the rate of $2,500 a year, with an allowance, for traveling and incidental expenses, while actually employed in the service, not exceeding $5 per day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am directed by the committee to move to strike out the last proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The language proposed to be struck out will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the Postmaster-General may appoint one agent to superintend the star and steamboat postal service, who shall be paid, out of the appropriation for said service, a salary at the rate of $2,500 a year, with an allowance for traveling and incidental expenses, while actually employed in the service, not exceeding $5 per day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend by inserting after "1879," in line 106, the following:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall secure the delivery of the mails between the cities of Washington and New Orleans at a rate of speed not less than twenty-five miles per hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. VANCE. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. That it is new legislation and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. VANCE. I do not see how it can be objected to as new legislation. It simply proposes to establish a rate of speed for the carrying of mails in the South.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is not that new legislation? If it is not, and the existing law accomplishes the object, the gentleman does not need to have his amendment adopted.

Mr. VANCE. I think it is only perfecting existing legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment does not appear to retrench expenditures; it would rather appear to do the contrary. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. VANCE. I would have been glad to call the attention of the House to the discrepancy between the delivery of the mails in the South and their delivery on some other routes. But as the point of order is sustained, I will ask leave to print some remarks on this subject.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I move to amend by striking out in lines 101 to 106 the following language:

One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars of which sum may be used by the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines of railroads for the railway post-office service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879.

Mr. Chairman, my object in making this motion is first to elicit from the committee the meaning of this clause; for it appears to me to be so worded as to convey naturally the impression that there is something in it which we are not willing to state distinctly. Now if this language contemplates something that is legitimate, we ought to define it. If it is for securing mail service at a given rate of speed, as has been intimated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], we ought to say so. As it stands now, the clause would appear to be designed to pay the great trunk lines some extra bonus or something of that kind, while we do not tell the public what it is.

Mr. BLOUNT. It will be remembered that in 1876 a law was passed reducing the amount paid per pound for carrying the mails. It was claimed by the Department that as the result of that law fast-mail facilities were reduced; and during the last session of the last Congress this identical language was inserted in an appropriation bill, which was then in charge of Judge Holman of Indiana, who assented to the provision, though I will not say he was the author of it. The purpose was to restore these fast-mail facilities. In this bill the Committee on Appropriations have simply repeated the language of the bill of last year, except as to the amount. The provision means this and nothing more. The construction given to it by the Department has been what I state; and this is the use to which the money is to be applied. If the gentleman from Ohio desires to make the language more precise, and if he thinks it important to do so, I have no objection. I simply state that this very language is to be found in the bill of last year and has been construed to apply to fast-mail facilities.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. It certainly seems to me that we ought to make the language of our appropriation bills such as not to invite fraud by mere uncertainty of expression.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman suggest language which he thinks would convey the idea better?

Mr. COX, of Ohio. The question is, what is the thing we desire to get at? If it be to make extra compensation for extra speed on the great trunk lines, then it seems to me such should be the statement of the law.

Mr. BLOUNT. The main object was to get postal cars so as to have the mails distributed along the line of the roads.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. But postal cars have been in use for a great many years.

Mr. BLOUNT. That may be very true; but they have been taken off several lines because of the reduction of compensation.

Mr. REAGAN. But if the railroad companies are paid now at the rate of $500 to $1,000 per mile per annum, does not that include an obligation to furnish such cars?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all. The rates were heretofore reduced 10 per cent.; and it is claimed that in consequence of the reduction these facilities were in some cases withdrawn. We propose now to make an additional reduction of 5 per cent. In addition to that, the amount of this appropriation is $125,000, whereas in the bill of last year it was $150,000. So that in any point of view there is a reduction.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it understood that in addition to paying the railroads under their contracts the Government is to furnish postal cars in which they are to carry the mails?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir. The appropriation in the law of last session is $150,000; and it is coupled with this language:

And the same may be used by the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines of railroads for the railway-postal service during the year ending June 30, 1878.

The object was to get an increase of speed and to get postal cars.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Then I will ask the gentleman what are the "great trunk lines?"

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, sir, if the gentleman will turn to page 18 of the report of the committee, he will find a number of them mentioned. One is the road leading from New York to Rochester and Chicago; another from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, and other great distributing points.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I happen to know personally that a great many of the railway lines of the country besides those three or four roads commonly known as the great trunk lines—for instance, the New York Central and Lake Shore reaching to Chicago, the Pennsylvania Railroad and its lines leading westward, and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, being commonly meant when we speak of the great trunk lines—that besides those roads I know of a great many roads in the United States, varying in length from three and four hundred to one thousand and fifteen hundred miles upon which railway postal cars are as large, as numerous, as well provided as upon any of these lines, and what seems to be necessary is one of these two committees, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads or the Committee on Appropriations, should be able to define this in such shape we could know why extra compensation is given in one case and not in another. Take for example the lines leading southwest, which have been referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina; take many of the lines in the Northwest, take the lines reaching through the central portion of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois; I know many of these lines are thoroughly furnished with railway postal cars; they also have made time as good as any other. Now what reason is there for defining this simply as limiting a certain character of business to the great trunk lines which are known as the three lines I have named? Why not say what class of roads must be paid for some particular extra service and let us know what that service is. With some experience in railroad matters I am frank in saying I do not know myself what it is and think it should be defined.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. The gentleman from Ohio will recollect as well as I do that two years ago there was a train of cars put upon the line between New York and Chicago which ran at a rapid rate of speed. It was continued for a few months and then withdrawn because they could not afford to carry the mails at that rate of speed at the price agreed to be paid. As I have said, the line was withdrawn. It went from New York to Chicago in about six hours less time than the distance is ordinarily run. It was for the benefit, Mr. Chairman, not of the particular portion of country through which it passed, but for the whole country on the way through to the Pacific Ocean. That train has been withdrawn, as will be recollected, about a year ago for the reason the Government had not appropriated the money to pay for that rate of speed. I take it for granted this provision is put in the bill for the purpose of allowing the Government to put on such a train as that was and to pay the expenses of running it.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. The gentleman from New York is evidently mistaken in this, because we are told by the gentleman in charge of the appropriation bill this is a less appropriation in the same language than was made last year, and consequently it cannot be for this continued work, which last year did not go on for lack of an appropriation. This enforces my point that we ought to know what this is going for.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. The committee tells here what it is for.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. One word in regard to the fast-mail lines. I happen to know one line of nearly one thousand miles, reaching from Lake Erie to Saint Louis and the Mississippi River, was at that time specially urged by the superintendent at that time of the railway service, Mr. Bangs, to make connection with that fast-mail train and carry its mails through to Saint Louis on the same time. I know personally it did it and kept up the rate of speed, and I know personally it never could get a copper and never did get a copper. For some reason or other this definition of the great trunk lines is made to cover an appropriation of this kind.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. If this appropriation is made the mails will be carried at that high rate of speed, and I think it is all right.

Mr. REAGAN. I move a formal amendment. Mr. Chairman, previous to 1873 when the law was passed changing the mode of compensating railroads for postal-car service the rate of compensation had for a long time previous to that on first-class roads been $300 a mile.

Mr. BLOUNT. When was that?

Mr. REAGAN. Eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and when they performed night service 35 per cent. extra, making the maximum pay to any railroad about $375 a mile. Under that rate of compensation the postal service was efficiently performed.

By skill probably, not to use any other term, in the arrangement of the basis of compensation for these roads by weight and space of cars the compensation on the same roads was increased all the way from the point I have mentioned up to a thousand dollars a mile.

Now, with the compensation at that enormous rate, it is insisted here that after we pay that it is necessary to put in some sort of a proviso, under which it is vaguely hinted the Government may obtain the carriage of postal cars. It seems to me, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Cox,] that when we are paying such a rate of compensation as this there shall be at least no vagueness, no room left for juggling to increase the rate of compensation above what it now is.

I believe the gentleman from Georgia—for I have not had time myself to look over the tables—agrees that some of them get a thousand dollars and more for this service. I tried during the last Congress, on this bill, to call the attention of Congress to the fact of the vast increase for this class of service, and the companies that get it are no better satisfied with the $1,000 a mile than with the $375, and still insist on increased compensation; and this will go on to the end. I know that one of the means resorted to in order to force the Department to recommend increased compensation is to threaten to stop the service or to decrease its deficiency. I hope the time has not yet come, and I trust it may never come, when the Government, after giving a liberal compensation, a full and just compensation, for this sort of service, will—because the carriers have a monopoly of the carrying of the mails as things now stand—submit to an unlimited imposition upon the Government to meet whatever they may seem to think is due to them. I think we ought to give a just compensation and no more; and when we give that just compensation, if they choose to refuse to carry the mails, let that issue go before the country with all these facts. I hope that this clause may be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. CALKINS. I offer an amendment to perfect the clause proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "proper facilities from," in line 103, and insert "extra speed and proper postal cars on;" so that it will read:

One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars of which sum may be used by the Postmaster-General to obtain extra speed and proper postal cars on the great trunk lines of railroads for the railway post-office service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879.

Mr. CALKINS. This will meet the objection of the gentleman from Ohio as to the first part of the clause. The words I object to, Mr. Chairman, are these "proper facilities," that may mean a great deal. It may open the door for the Postmaster-General to give an interpretation of the language to suit himself and to expend the money as may suit himself. It ought to be confined to the purposes for which the committee say it is necessary. It is for that reason that I offer the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. If the proviso is to remain in, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana is perhaps proper, because it defines exactly what we mean and brings before the House fairly the question it ought to consider in this connection, whether it means after paying a compensation that is already enormous to go on then and pay an additional compensation for additional speed. Is it true that the figures we pay for that service are not such as to secure any reasonable speed that can be given? Will they not? If we insert such a proviso, of course every road that comes within the meaning of the proviso will insist it must have its portion of the $150,000 before it will perform the service.

Now, if that is what it means, it would be right and honest and fair to put it in the compensation permanently and stop all this management and controversy as to what companies shall get the extra allowance; so that while the amendment is proper if the proviso stays in, since it presents fairly the question whether we mean to pay the roads for the service and then offer them a bonus of $150,000 to squabble over after they are fully paid, it seems to me it would be much wiser and fairer if we mean to increase their compensation to do it fully by their contracts. Let them know that is the pay they are to get, and not leave it open for the Postmaster-General, without advertising, without competition, without any protection to the public Treasury and the public service, in his mere discretion, to give so much as these gentlemen managing these roads may compel him to give in order to reach the terms on which they will consent to conduct the service. I hope the amendment will prevail and that the proviso will be stricken out.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. CALKINS. I will withdraw the amendment if the gentleman from Georgia will renew it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

I draw the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to this, that there is another method of compensating these roads. They not only get compensation by law under the rule of paying so much by weight, there is in addition the provision of a certain sum for fast-mail facilities in a law passed in 1873, in the following language:

Provided further, That additional pay may be allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars, at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars forty feet in length; and $30 per mile per annum for forty-five-foot cars; and $40 per mile per annum for fifty-foot cars; and $50 per mile per annum for fifty-five to sixty-foot cars.

Perhaps some of the routes he has in his mind are paid under that section.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. BLOUNT. My time is too short, and I cannot yield to the gentleman just now; he will find in the report the routes to which this compensation was paid, and I named some of them. I do not undertake to say what routes it should apply to, but I mention certain lines popularly known as the great trunk lines. The object is to put this fund into the hands of the Department for the purpose of securing faster and better mail facilities.

Now, as to what the gentleman from Texas has said in regard to whether this pay is excessive or not I have simply this to say that there is no branch of the public service of the country so dear to the people as the Post-Office Department. In certain sections they use star routes; in other sections the people are especially attached to fast-mail facilities which have been given to them, and to which they are used and to which they are devoted, and they will not yield up readily the postal service. This is a good deal like the question of suffrage; give it once and you cannot get it back again, and when you get the people in any section of the country accustomed to a certain method of mail service you cannot withdraw it from them.

I know the sensitiveness of this service, having been in this House when an assault was made upon it in the last Congress, when the democratic party had a large majority, and struggled against it and defeated it in this House, but they were compelled to yield to a compromise with the Senate in conference committee. Knowing the struggle made when it had greater strength than these gentlemen can hope to have now, we endeavored to avoid what we believed to be a useless struggle, and we have put this appropriation in the bill with some reduction.

The postal cars which the Government has been getting under this appropriation are very costly. There were roads upon which there were none, and this appropriation was allowed for the purpose of enabling the Department to get what is desired. This has been accomplished in part, but there are other lines on which there are no postal cars, and I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the Department have in contemplation, if this sum be appropriated, to get what does not now exist—facilities upon the lines leading to his own State and section—which he has not been able to receive as yet, and which he may expect to get by the use of this very fund.

The Committee on Appropriations, after studying the history of this question in the past, have determined to recommend to the House what they believe is the best thing that could be accomplished under the circumstances.

Now, so far as the question of construction is concerned I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] or that of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Cox.] I am willing for the present to limit it and leave it as a matter of discretion with the Postmaster-General. I think it would be better to restrain it, but exactly how I cannot see. The gentleman might name certain lines; but it may turn out that there are other lines which he is not informed of that was equally desirable. Then, again, by restoring it to certain lines you put it in the power of those roads to compel the Post-Office Department to pay a certain sum, because the law has named those lines; but if you leave it in the discretion of the Postmaster-General he may use the money where it is most needed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am of opinion that this $125,000 recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, if judiciously spent, as I presume it would be, would be profitably spent. The compensation of railroads for carrying the mails is fixed by law, and the pay varies from $50 per mile per annum to $200 per mile per annum, as the daily average weight carried over the whole length of the road varies from two hundred to five thousand pounds per annum, and there may be an additional fixed allowance for car space of a certain character, but while you pay a company $200 a mile for five thousand pounds of mail carried daily for a year, for each two thousand pounds over the five thousand pounds carried daily for a year the compensation is only $25 additional, so if the one road carried ten thousand pounds per mile per annum, its pay would be for the first five thousand pounds $200 and for the second five thousand pounds $225—total, $425. But, if these ten thousand pounds of mail were carried by two roads, five thousand pounds to each, the pay would be $200 to each road or $137.50 per mile annually more than if the mail was massed upon one road.

Now, if the superintendent of mail service can have this amount to induce some one of the trunk lines to furnish extra car space, coupled with greater speed, and thereby to a certain extent mass the through mails upon one line, I think it could be used at a great profit; but if you designate by law which one of the great trunk lines shall have the benefit of this expenditure, then you destroy the competition in this respect that the fund is expected to promote; and it will be seen that this matter is of no small importance when it is recollected that the mails leaving the New York office alone will average, as we are informed, fifty tons daily. Of course this money, like all other that is appropriated, may be improperly spent; but I do not believe it is probable, when the expenditures of the Post-Office Department are made in a manner and for a service that comes to the knowledge of the people daily, and especially when it is also recollected that we have year by year an investigating House of Representatives that is hungering and thirsting to find fraud in the expenditure of public money, whether it exists or not.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. The clause which it is proposed to strike out has been in force during the last year or two and has received a construction at the hands of the Post-Office Department; and a larger sum than is now proposed, $150,000, was left within the discretion of the Postmaster-General. No man anywhere in the country has complained that the Post-Office Department has made an unwise decision in reference to the meaning of this language, or has made an unwise or injudicious expenditure of the money. Now, I submit that when a law has received from an Executive Department of the Government a construction which is entirely satisfactory to that Department and to the country, it is always unsafe to strike that phraseology from the law and embark on the experiment of putting in new phraseology, trusting that a new interpretation will be equally satisfactory.

I grant that the application of this sum of $125,000 is left entirely to the discretion of the Postmaster-General. It is utterly impossible, as suggested by my friend from Ohio, to undertake to define to-day by a law what particular railroads shall come under the designation of "great trunk lines;" and if we should undertake to define the roads on which this money should be expended, it would invite the very thing that I know the gentleman from Ohio desires to avoid; it would invite a combination on the part of those roads designated as trunk lines and would thus give opportunity for a "job." This is impossible if the phraseology of the law be left as it has been in the past, under which a satisfactory administration of the law has taken place.

This money having been properly used for the purpose of getting additional mail facilities on the great trunk lines of railroad in the country, no man having complained that it has been unwisely expended, this provision as incorporated in a previous law having received a satisfactory interpretation, I submit that it would be unwise now, without asking the assent of the Post-Office Department and in the teeth of the request of that Department, to change this provision. The only change that the Department asked, the only thing about which any complaint has come from the Department is that this item ought to be $150,000 instead of $125,000; and that is my only objection to the provision. I say that it is unwise and dangerous to change the phraseology of the law in the face of the fact that it has received a construction satisfactory to the Department and to the country, and in the face of the fact that its retention in the present bill is recommended by those who administer the Post-Office Department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WADDELL. I have an amendment which I apprehend is subject to a point of order; but I want to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to it, because I think an act of very great injustice will be done if some amendment of this kind is not put upon the bill, as the legislative bill does not provide for it. This amendment relates to the salary of the chief special agent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will send up his proposition to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments are already pending—one offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] and the other by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Cox.]

Mr. WADDELL. Then my amendment is not in order now.

Mr. CALKINS. I withdraw my amendment until a vote shall be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio; I will then renew it.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. In order to obtain information how we ought to vote on this question, I want to put an inquiry to the gentleman in charge of this bill. I understand that the language which the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio proposes to strike out is contained in the appropriation bill of last year. Now, the money then appropriated has been expended, and I would like the gentleman to inform us (doubtless he is advised upon the subject) how this money has been expended. If honestly, all right; it is a precedent that will control my vote.

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as the language of the appropriation is concerned, it is the same as that contained in the bill of last year. The report of the committee, which has been distributed among members, will show the manner in which the money has been expended.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Cox, of Ohio, it was not agreed to.

Mr. CALKINS. I now renew my amendment, modifying it so as to read as follows:

Strike out in line 103 the words "proper facilities from the great trunk," and insert "extra speed and proper postal cars on;" so as to read: $125,000 of which sum may be used by the Postmaster-General to obtain extra speed and proper postal cars on lines of railroad for the railway post-office service during the fiscal year, &c.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WADDELL. I now move to amend by inserting after the word "day," in line 113, page 6, the following:

Provided, That the special agent designated by the Postmaster-General to act as chief special agent shall receive the same compensation as the superintendent of railway mail service.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. WADDELL. Before my friend from Georgia makes his point of order I desire to call his attention for a moment to the facts of this case.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve the point of order until the gentleman makes his statement.

Mr. WADDELL. I desire to state that in the legislation we had on this bill the other day in regard to special agents fixing the per diem, &c., it did not appear the chief special agent, Mr. Parker, who has these thirty-seven special agents under him, would be in this condition of getting no per diem at all and only $1,600 a year. I have a letter from the Postmaster-General calling our attention to it and stating he ought to receive the same compensation as the superintendent of the railway mail transportation. He gets no per diem under our law, because he is rarely actually traveling in the discharge of his duties. He has never to go but to the principal cities, so his per diem will amount to nothing, and the salaries of special agents are limited to $1,600; most of them get but $1,200. He is the chief special agent of all and has the responsibility of thirty-seven special agents under him and laborious duties to perform, as set forth in the letter of the Postmaster-General, and I appeal to my friend to put him on the same equality with the other chiefs. I think he should receive the same compensation as the superintendent of railway mail transportation.

Mr. BLOUNT. He gets now just what he always got under the law, whatever the practice may have been.

Mr. WADDELL. He got per diem too.

Mr. BLOUNT. I know he did, and so did a good many others; but it was not under the law but under the construction. This is only one of a score of cases constantly resorting to our committee-room, making plausible reasons for increase of salary. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does this raise the salary?

Mr. WADDELL. It does not raise the salary he has heretofore received.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist on my point of order.

Mr. WADDELL. I should like to read what the Postmaster-General says. He says:

In this connection I would call attention to the fact that the salary of the chief special agent is no greater than that of other special agents. This officer has formerly received the pay of one of the two superintendents of railway mail service, authorized by law; but doubting the legality of his payment from that fund the practice was discontinued. In addition to superintending and directing the work of the other agents, the chief special agent conducts many of the most important investigations in person, necessarily incurring large traveling expenses, and I think that he should receive the same salary as the general superintendent of railway mail transportation.

He will get less than those under him. They get per diem and he will not.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. What does he get now?

Mr. WADDELL. Sixteen hundred dollars as special agent, without any per diem.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. What will he get under your amendment?

Mr. WADDELL. The same as the superintendent of railway mail transportation.

Mr. BLOUNT. As the gentleman from North Carolina discussed the point of order I will only say there is no change of law in this case. The gentleman states that Congress provided two superintendents of railway mail transportation while they needed but one, and that the chief of special agents has been acting as one of those superintendents and drawing pay as such when he had nothing to do with it. The law provides his pay shall be $1,600, as Congress intended it. By a construction which was wrong and illegal he has received an additional sum, and now, forsooth, because he is not getting the pay of superintendent to which he was not entitled, the gentleman asks that the salary shall be continued at the same rate.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman a question and that is, whether he thinks $1,600 is enough compensation for the superintendent of special agents, the officer who superintends the whole work.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no doubt we will keep that special agent with all his valuable services without any increase of compensation.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Could not the gentleman himself be kept as a member of Congress if his pay were cut down to $1,600?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to say the amendment was obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. WADDELL. It is a manifest injustice, but it may be obnoxious to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I move, in line 112, to strike out "employed" and insert "traveling." It has been intimated the special agents get $1,600 a year and $5 per diem, and that that $5 per diem is drawn during the whole year and that that abuse has grown out of the use of the word "employed." The bill reads "for the allowance for traveling and incidental expenses while actually employed in the service, not exceeding $5 a day." It is not unreasonable the Department should pay $5 a day in addition to the salary when the agent is employed all the time; but if you say $5 a day while actually traveling, then these agents will only get $5 a day while actually traveling.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Georgia should not give his assent to this amendment. This paragraph of the bill appropriates $9,100,000 to pay for mail service upon the railroads of the country, aggregating near eighty thousand miles in length. To distribute the mails upon these lines requires about twenty-five hundred men, for payment of whom you propose to appropriate $300,000, and the successful operation of this service requires supervision to a considerable extent over a great number of the postmasters of the country, and to regulate the compensation requires the weighing of the mails at least once in four years upon all these roads. It will be seen at once that a vast number of questions are constantly arising requiring skill, industry, and ability of no ordinary degree on the part of the man superintending this whole service. Now, the superintendency and control of this whole expenditure of near $13,000,000 and of this vast service primarily falls upon the superintendent of railway mail service. There is no railroad president in the country whose duties are so arduous and important as the duties of this superintendent, or who is required to exercise more skill than he, and similar ability to his is paid for by private corporations at the rate of from $10,000 to $25,000 per annum. His salary, as now fixed by law, is $2,500 per annum, with $5 per diem in addition for each day he is employed, which makes the salary about $4,300 per annum.

Now, the amendment cuts the allowance of $5 a day down to each day he is actually traveling from one point to another, when necessarily a large portion of his time must be spent at his office in the Department in superintending and directing the different branches of this service. No sane man, if he was employing a superintendent to look after his private business of the same magnitude, would ask or think it politic to pay him only $2,500 per annum. I therefore trust the amendment will not be adopted and that the salary will not be reduced below the $4,300. It is no valid argument that men can be found to do this work for $2,500, for you can find men who would agree to do it for nothing or pay for the privilege of doing it and then make a fortune in the doing of it. I believe it is true economy not to pay exorbitant salaries; but especially in a place like this, requiring skill of the highest order, industry, and undoubted integrity, to pay a reasonable salary sufficient to command the services of such a man. I do not believe $4,300 per annum is too much, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say one word further. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I do not trouble the House very often and I ask the committee to bear with me for a moment.

We give a salary in this case of $2,500 a year. The per diem pay would be $1,825 a year. These two sums together make $4,325 a year. Now if we mean to give $4,325 a year why not honestly say so in the bill? Why whip the devil around the stump by saying this officer shall have a salary of $2,500 a year and $5 a day while actually employed when it is known he is not a traveling agent and that his business does not permit him to travel much? By doing this we perpetrate a fraud upon ourselves with our eyes open and we perpetrate a fraud upon the country and conceal what we do. It seems to me we should always approach everything directly.

The question being taken on Mr. REAGAN's amendment, there were—ayes 53, noes 71.

Mr. HUNTON called for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers and appoints the gentleman from Texas, Mr. REAGAN, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 69.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. We can have a separate vote upon this in the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Very well.

So (further count not being insisted upon) the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $3,440,000.

Mr. RYAN. I offer the following amendment:

In line 121 strike out "$3,440,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,700,000."

The amendment is precisely the amount of the estimate. Last year Congress appropriated over $100,000 more than the amount of expenditure for this item of service in the previous year. During the last and present year there has been a great increase in the quantity and weight of mail matter throughout the United States corresponding with our increase of population and increase of business. The appropriation made last year, over $100,000 in excess of the expenditure of the year before, is, I am informed, already exhausted and about six hundred applications, found upon examination by the Department to be meritorious and such as ought to be granted, are denied because the appropriation made last year is exhausted.

Now, I do not think it right thus to cripple this service. There is a necessity, not confined to any particular locality, for this increase of appropriation. The increase of weight and quantity of mail is general throughout the country. As was stated a few days ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] in his own town, within a few years, they have had to have an increase of three or four clerks in the post-office there. That fully illustrates what is true throughout the Eastern States as well as the Western States; that, too, in a State whose increase of population is not traceable so much to immigration as to home production. [Laughter.] Now, sir, with us in the West the reverse is true. We are increasing very rapidly in population from immigration; and this gives rise, of course, to a demand upon the Department for this service, and the Department is in no situation and has been in no situation to satisfy the demands upon it for this increase. Take the States of Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, and Texas, and I do not think it any exaggeration to say that during the next fiscal year the increase of population will exceed a million; and of course that will increase this business throughout that whole section of country. And yet the Appropriations Committee are making no provision whatever to meet this increase of business. They are making an appropriation of $260,000 less than is asked for by the Department, and I am assured at the Department that it will be utterly unable to meet the demands upon it unless that estimate be given. Hence I offer this amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. During the first session of last Congress we appropriated for compensation of clerks $3,290,000, during the last session of last Congress we appropriated $3,340,000, an increase of $50,000 upon the preceding year. During the last fiscal year—we have no estimate of what has been expended during the present fiscal year—there was expended for this purpose $3,333,151.60. We appropriate in this bill $100,000 more than was appropriated last year. We have made the increase double what the increase was before.

The committee thought that here they had been exceedingly liberal. There was an entire assent upon the part of every member of the committee, the amount being so much larger than had been allowed heretofore. And this, sir, has been done while the evidences all around us have shown a decline of business. I will ask to have printed as part of my remarks certain statements showing that this is the case all over the country.

The Post-Office Department itself shows there has been during the last fiscal year an actual decrease of its receipts. It shows that while we are increasing the appropriation more largely than we have done for several years there has been a greater falling off in business and a greater falling off in the receipts of the Department.

I think, therefore, that we are going rapidly enough. The gentleman says that the country is increasing in population. That is true, but the business of the country is not increasing in anything like the proportion that it has heretofore. The gentleman says that we have not service enough; that where these officers come under his knowledge they need more clerical force and cannot get it, and that this is the condition of things throughout the entire country.

Now I happen to know from an investigation before the committee of the last Congress that while that was true as to certain localities in a great many places the postmasters were absolutely doing nothing; they had clerical force enough to do their entire business. The fault lies in the distribution of the clerks. Some gentlemen can go and get them; others have failed. Some communities have an excess; others have a deficit.

Again, there is this to be considered in this connection: in the midst of the lack of employment throughout the country, this being a fund to be used in the discretion of the Department, I undertake to say that the clerical force needed in the post-offices can be got at a less sum than ever before in the last ten years.

The following are the papers referred to by Mr. BLOUNT:

J. N. MAYNEVILLE,

Manager.

NEW ORLEANS, April 5, 1878.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the last word. I have prepared an amendment precisely in the words of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. RYAN.] My own experience is the same as his, and let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the frontier States, the border States, and those especially that are increasing rapidly in population as the gentleman's own is and my own is, are those States in which there are very many offices to-day without the clerical force which they need. I have conversed with the venerable clerk of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, who has said to me repeatedly during the year that when the next appropriation bill passed there should be a large increase in the item for post-office clerks. There are to-day from my own district now pending eight or nine applications for postal clerks and increased clerical service in the post-office in my district, and we are unable to obtain any because of the insufficiency of the appropriation. The amount proposed in the amendment is $3,700,000. The appropriation recommended in this bill is $300,000 less than that amount. I had intended when this item was reached to move the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Kansas. It is absolutely necessary.

Mr. Chairman, the Post-Office Department is crippled more from the lack of appropriations of this one item than in almost any other item in the post-office appropriation bill. Here are offices that have increased rapidly. There are offices in my own district where the salary to-day is $1,000 that had not been when I came to this House seven years ago. They have been established and towns have been built up since then and they are without any clerical force, and the committee will see at once that a post-office at the beginning of the fiscal year that is entitled to clerical force gets it under this appropriation as it existed on that day, but there may be four hundred or five hundred offices during the fiscal year at the middle of the year or in the last half of the year that are entitled to this clerical force and they cannot get it; the money has been allotted at the beginning of the fiscal year and all the offices that require clerical force after that allotment are told that they must wait for another appropriation. I say that the amendment is eminently just and proper and absolutely demanded for the service, and if the whole amount proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is not voted I shall move an amendment for a sum less than the amount now proposed.

The question was taken on Mr. RYAN's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 69, noes 82.

Mr. RYAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RYAN and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 69.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I move to amend in lines 120 and 121 by striking out the words "four hundred and forty thousand dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "six hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply want to say what I think is not understood by some members, that we increase the appropriation for postmasters $100,000 more than it had ever been increased for several years in addition to increasing the compensation for clerks to postmasters.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentlemen should be told that the amount of the increase last year was less than the amount that the service demanded.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would say that gentlemen on the other side of the House complained in regard to everything we did.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I insist on my amendment. It should be borne in mind by the House that this postal service increases every year, and hence requires larger appropriations.

Mr. WADDELL. I would like to know whether my motion that the committee rise is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now.

Mr. WADDELL. There is no quorum here, and I insist on the motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope it will be voted down.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 88, noes 62.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBL. N having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4246) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

Mr. TUCKER. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report a bill (H. R. No. 4427) relating to the tax on tobacco, incomes, and other internal taxation.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. TUCKER. I am also instructed to ask the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill entitled "An act relating to taxes upon tobacco, incomes, and other internal taxation," be made the special order for consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the 1st day of May next, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. PRICE. There is one special order already for the 1st of May, I think.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. If this requires unanimous consent, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the rules the Committee of Ways and Means have the right to report at any time.

Mr. TUCKER. And under the ruling of the Speaker, I have the right to offer on behalf of the committee this resolution. I will merely state that a bill was reported yesterday by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] my colleague on the committee, respecting the machinery of internal revenue taxation. This bill proposes a reduction of the tax on tobacco, the imposition of a tax on incomes, and the modification of the tax on savings-bank deposits. It has been very fully considered by the Committee of Ways and Means; and I propose by my resolution to make it a special order for consideration in Committee of the Whole on the same day that was suggested by my friend from Illinois in reference to the other bill.

Mr. BURCHARD. The two bills have no connection, however.

Mr. TUCKER. They have no connection. I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of this resolution. I call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Does this bill propose the imposition of an income tax?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I object to the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is not liable to objection.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Does it not require unanimous consent to make this bill a special order.

Mr. TUCKER. Oh, no; not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it does not, under the ruling of the permanent Speaker of the House. The Committee of Ways and Means having the right to report at any time for commitment, the gentleman from Virginia now, by direction of that committee, reports this resolution accompanying the bill, which proposes to fix the 1st day of May for its consideration.

Mr. CONGER. There is no doubt about the right of the Committee of Ways and Means to report at any time for commitment; but that does not imply the right to report at any time a resolution fixing a day for the consideration of particular business.

Mr. TUCKER. It was expressly decided by the Speaker the other day that upon a motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole for consideration, it was in order for the Committee of Ways and Means to move to fix a day for such consideration. I have done so on this occasion under the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. CONGER. That is when the committee is called in its regular order. They may report for commitment at any time; but only on their regular call can they report resolutions to change the order of business.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CONGER. Let us have the point of order decided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the rule covering the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Committee of Ways and Means to take into consideration all reports of the Treasury Department, and such other propositions relative to raising revenue and providing ways and means for the support of the Government as shall be presented or shall come in question and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion thereon by bill or otherwise, as to them shall seem expedient; and said committee shall have leave to report for commitment at any time.

Mr. TUCKER. I report this bill for commitment, and accompany it with a proposition to fix a day for its consideration.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will not this interfere with the tariff bill?

Mr. TUCKER. I am perfectly content to yield to any existing special order or to the business of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DUNNELL. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is absent.

Mr. TUCKER. But I am present and make this report.

Mr. BURCHARD. This special order would be subject to all prior special orders. It does not interfere with the action on the tariff bill or the appropriation bill.

Mr. MCMAHON. The House can raise the question of consideration at any time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I do insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that under the rules the Committee of Ways and Means have the right to report at any time for commitment, and the right to report for commitment carries with it the right of consideration; but making the bill a special order, as provided in the concluding portion of the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, cannot, in the judgment of the Chair, be entertained except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CONGER objected.

Mr. SAMPSON. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri to a personal explanation.

Mr. TUCKER. As the proposition to make the bill a special order has been objected to, I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, and the time for its consideration will be fixed hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be ordered accordingly.

Mr. CONGER. I give notice that on that bill I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the gentleman's right.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask to have read from the New York Tribune of April 20, 1878, the extract which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, April 19.—Alarming reports were circulating at the Capitol to-day that Mr. GLOVER had made another haul of his net, and as usual, caught a big democratic fish; but it is said he tried to throw back his catch before any one discovered that he had him. The story is that he has found out that $5,000 of the funds belonging to the House of Representatives was loaned to a member of Congress. The danger of losing it and the difficulty of recovering the money caused the matter to be exposed.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, if no other person was affected by that dispatch in the New York Tribune except myself, I should say nothing on this subject. That paper for several weeks past has been constantly making attacks upon myself and the committee with which I am connected.

I desire in justice to an officer of this House who seems to be alluded to by that dispatch, and in the interest of every member upon the floor of this House who seems to be implicated in the charge that some one of them has in an improper manner received from the Sergeant-at-Arms the sum of $5,000—it is charged that the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department have made that discovery—I desire to say, sir, that nothing of the kind has been discovered by that committee, nor do I think there is a member of that committee who until it appeared in the Tribune has heard anything of it. I think it a pure fabrication and I feel it incumbent upon me to so pronounce it.

A MEMBER. Who owns that paper?

Mr. GLOVER. I do not know who owns the paper, or who is its correspondent.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman deny there is a defalcation on the part of the Doorkeeper or one of the doorkeepers?

Mr. GLOVER. This is an allegation against the Sergeant-at-Arms, as I understand it, and I have only risen for the purpose of saying that I never heard of this matter until a member called my attention to it in the New York Tribune a few moments since from which the extract has been read.

Mr. CONGER. The article did not refer to an officer. I did not understand it to refer to any officer.

Mr. GLOVER. I understand it does refer to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. CONGER. I understood it to refer to a member of Congress merely.

Mr. GLOVER. And to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Several MEMBERS. Read it again.

The article was again read.

Mr. CONGER. I do not see in this any reference to any but a member of this body.

Mr. GLOVER. It refers to some officer who has the paying of the members of this House; and I know of no other officer than the Sergeant-at-Arms who discharges that duty. He pays the members of this House. But so far as it concerns the proceedings of my committee or any knowledge I have of the subject the statement is totally without foundation, and I believe as before stated it is a pure fabrication of the correspondent of that paper who during the last few weeks has made similar slanderous statements.

A MEMBER. Who owns that paper?

Mr. GLOVER. I do not know.

MEXICAN AWARD.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the courtesy of the House to fix some day next week for the consideration, in Committee of the Whole, of the bill (H. R. No. 2117) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico concluded on the 4th day of July, 1863. These are awards made in favor of citizens of this country under a treaty concluded ten years ago. The claimants of this money are in very impecunious circumstances. Many of them are poor, distressed, and absolutely without means of support. The bill has been for a long time ready for the action of the House, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the House to fix some time next week for its consideration. I therefore ask unanimous consent that next Wednesday morning after the morning hour the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill, to be continued from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. BURCHARD. Or reports from the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I object.

MINT AT NEW ORLEANS.

On motion of Mr. DWIGHT, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1058) to repair and put in operation the mint at New Orleans, authorizing the coinage of gold and silver thereat and making an appropriation therefor, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

FRANK A. PAGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers relating to the case of Frank A. Page, late of the United States Army, (retired;) which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXPERIMENTAL GUNS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report relative to experimental guns in the possession of the Department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MILITARY POSTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports relative to military posts that can be abandoned; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SALE OF LOTS AT HARPER'S FERRY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of the Attorney-General relating to the sale of lots of land at Harper's Ferry by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. EVANS, of Indiana, for ten days from Monday next, on account of important business.

Mr. SAMPSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the American Society of Civil Engineers, commending the convenience and accuracy of the triangulations of the United States Coast Survey, and petitioning for necessary appropriations to continue the work—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CABELL: The petitions of citizens and manufacturers of Virginia, that licorice-paste may be imported free of duty—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: The petition of 530 citizens of Altoona, Pennsylvania, for the extension of the national credit to the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific Ocean—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. COX, of Ohio: The memorial of Forsyth Post, Grand Army of the Republic, for the amendment of the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIDDINGS: Memorials of citizens of San Augustine, Rusk, Cherokee, Lee, Lavaca, De Witt, Gregg, Chambers, Washington, Robertson, and Crockett Counties, Texas, for the division of that State into two judicial districts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of citizens of Galveston, Texas, for an appropriation to erect a custom-house and internal-revenue offices in said city—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JONES, of Alabama: Resolutions of the Mobile (Alabama) Board of Trade, requesting the Alabama delegation in Congress to support the bill (H. R. No. 3988) to organize a life-saving service—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KNOTT: The petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Dubois, for relief—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Mrs. Ellen Camp—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LIGON: The petition of citizens of Chilton County, Alabama, for the creation of a fund for popular education from the sales of public lands—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. McMAHON: The petition of E. G. Johnson, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, (by request:) The petition of J. G. W. Mills, of Atlanta, Georgia, for the payment of his expenses in an election contest in the Forty-fourth Congress—to the Committee of Elections.

By Mr. VANCE: Memorial of Dr. Anson B. Sams, proposing a change of the motto "In God we trust" on the new silver dollar to "In God's name we trust"—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, April 22, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant, a copy of the report of the hydrographic commission on the means necessary to protect the wharves and harbor of New Orleans from the incursions of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, on the 17th of this month the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] reported back, from the Committee on Finance, House bill 805, known as a bill for the repeal of the specie resumption act of January 14, 1875, with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting certain important provisions in lieu of the original measure as it came from the House. I propose now to amend that amendment in certain particulars, and I ask that the amendments of which I give notice be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana gives notice that he will offer certain amendments, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out in lines 5, 6, and 7, the words "on and after October 1, 1878, said notes shall be receivable;" strike out in lines 8 and 9 the words "October 1, 1878," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the passage of this act;" strike out in line 9 the word "permanently;" also strike out in lines 22, 23, and 24, the words "shall cease and become inoperative on and after the said October 1, 1878," and insert in lieu thereof the words "is hereby repealed;" so that the substitute reported by way of amendment by the Committee on Finance shall read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act United States notes shall be receivable in payment for the 4 per cent. bonds now authorized by law to be issued, and for duties on imports, and said notes in the volume in existence on the passage of this act shall not be canceled nor hoarded, but shall be reissued, and they may be used for funding, and all other lawful purposes whatsoever, to an amount not exceeding in the whole the aggregate amount thereof then in circulation, and in the Treasury; and the said notes, whether then in the Treasury or thereafter received, under any act of Congress, and from whatever source, shall be again paid out, and when again returned to the Treasury they shall not be canceled nor destroyed, but shall be reissued from time to time with like qualities; and all that part of the act of January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," authorizing the retirement of 80 per cent. of United States notes, is hereby repealed.

Sec. 2. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act shall be, and hereby are, repealed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the amendments just read and the substitute offered by the committee as now sought to be amended be printed and lie upon the table.

I desire further to state that I have offered these amendments not as the basis of a compromise for the surrender of the House bill, but for the purpose of improving as far as possible the substitute reported by the committee. If that substitute should be adopted by the Senate I desire it to bring substantial and immediate relief to the people as far as it goes. It is my purpose, however, to support the bill for the repeal of the act enforcing the resumption of specie payments, just as it passed the House on the 23d day of November last. On this issue I shall seek to obtain the direct vote of the Senate at an early day.

Mr. GORDON. I hope the amendments suggested by the Senator from Indiana will be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been ordered under the rule.

Mr. GORDON. While I am up I move that the report of the committee to which the Senator from Indiana has referred, and to which the amendments relate, be made the special order for Wednesday, the 1st day of May, that is, Wednesday a week. I will state that I did not speak upon the silver bill, because I desired a subject of a little wider range than that bill legitimately furnished, and I wish to speak upon this bill. I move, therefore, that it be made the special order for Wednesday, the 1st day of May. I think that would give abundant time for any amendments to be suggested and considered by the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) The Senator from Georgia has called the attention of the Senate to the report made by the Committee on Finance in regard to the repeal of the resumption act, and begs consideration on a week from next Wednesday. My impression is that the bill might be considered at an earlier day than that, and I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he defer fixing a time for the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill. The Committee on Finance will meet to-morrow and my impression is that I may move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill earlier than the 1st of May.

Mr. GORDON. Very well. I have no objection to deferring my motion for the present. I simply wanted to have a time fixed when we should consider the measure. I therefore withdraw the motion temporarily for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) The motion making the bill a special order is withdrawn.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Michigan and also to the Senator from Georgia, if I can have his attention for a moment. The Senator from Georgia has indicated an intention of speaking upon this bill. It will of course be the pleasure of the Senate to allow the Senator to fix such time as is convenient to him to address the Senate, but in the present condition of the Senate, it being now but a few moments after the hour of meeting and owing to the sitting of committees this morning the Senate being very thin, especially on this side, would it not be better for the Senator simply to fix his own day to take up the bill, to remark upon it, and leave the time when it shall be considered, as a special order or otherwise—

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Georgia has withdrawn his motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I know he has, but the Senator from Michigan is in the act of proposing that the bill be taken up at an earlier day, not for the convenience of some Senator in speech, but for the action of the Senate. Now, for myself and still more for Senators who are absent, I wish both Senators would refrain during the present at least from fixing any time to take up the bill for action. No Senator will have any difficulty in having it taken up for the purposes of his own convenience. I will vote, for one, with great pleasure with the Senator from Georgia, and I am sure the whole Senate will, that he may be able to fix a time for that purpose as he pleases; but as to action on the bill I hope the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Georgia alike will let it stand until we can have some more understanding among each other than we have had so far, and until the Senate is fuller, before fixing a time to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FERRY. My only object was to avoid unnecessary delay. The committee to which the bill was referred has been criticised somewhat for the delay in making a report upon the bill. The committee devoted such time as they could to the subject, and made as early a report as was practicable under the circumstances. For that reason I feel it my duty to suggest to the Senator from Georgia and also to the Senate that it might be possible to consider the bill at an earlier moment and avoid any unnecessary delay. That was my intention, and solely that. My object is not to prevent any Senator from expressing his views or taking such time as he may need for that purpose. My only object is to facilitate action upon the bill. As I understand, the Senator from Georgia has withdrawn his proposition to fix any specific day and the matter stands as it did before the suggestion was made.

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to say that I think the time for the consideration of this subject by the Senate should be fixed some time to-day, (not while there are as few Senators in their seats as we find this morning, I think perhaps that would be improper,) but to-day when there shall be more Senators in their seats the time to commence the discussion of this subject and for the consideration of it should be fixed; for if this subject shall be discussed at as great length as was the silver bill, and if those who desire should succeed in having the House bill amended, we will be thrown into June before the bill gets out of this body at all, and it would then go to the House amended and there remain until we shall have adjourned. So that we will have been in session here from the middle of October until the time for adjournment without having accomplished one thing on the subject of the repeal of the resumption act. I do not believe that the country would justify the Congress in that non-action. I believe the country would hold us responsible for that non-action. I hope the bill will pass as it came from the House. There are some very good amendments that have been offered to it for which I should vote as distinct and substantive propositions but I hope they will not be tacked on to the bill as amendments, thereby taking it back to the House and thereby, in my judgment, defeating the whole matter. I think the sooner we commence the consideration of the bill in the Senate the better, and I think the time should be fixed some time to-day when the Senate shall be more full than we find it on this occasion; but I do not think we should go beyond to-day in fixing the hour.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no idea that there is to be a very protracted discussion of this measure when it comes up; nor have I any idea that there is a disposition on the part of either side of the Senate to postpone the business unreasonably. I suppose that it is within the power of the Senate to take the bill up at any moment that a majority shall see fit. I think it is very well to suggest that it shall be considered at the time named by the Senator from Georgia, but at the same time I see nothing that would be gained by it, and therefore I hope the question will go over for the present.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, just one word. It happens to be within my knowledge that the Senator from Georgia will be away from his seat from and after Wednesday, the day after to-morrow, until perhaps Tuesday or Wednesday in the following week, and it happens also to be within my knowledge that he is prepared and desires to discuss this question. I am perfectly willing to have this subject taken up at any time, but I would be unwilling to agree that it be disposed of before the Senator from Georgia can return and be heard, if we should take it up in his absence.

Mr. MORRILL. No one objects to that.

Mr. FERRY. There can be no objection to that; and inasmuch as the Senator from Indiana has given the fact to the Senate that the Senator from Georgia desires to speak upon the bill and will be necessarily absent, there can be no harm attending the early consideration of the bill, and let it stand on the Calendar just as it is.

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senate shall see fit to take the bill up this week, it will be with the notice of the Senator from Indiana that the Senator from Georgia desires to speak upon the question before a final vote upon it, and time will be given to the Senator from Georgia to discuss the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. That was the purpose of my suggestion.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of George W. Partridge and 216 others, citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 13, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting an establishment of religion and the free exercise thereof; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EATON presented a resolution of the Legislature of Connecticut, in favor of an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor of Stamford in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WADLEIGH presented the petition of Elizabeth McNeil Benham and Frances McNeil Potter, daughters of General John McNeil, United States Army, praying to be allowed a pension on account of services rendered the Government by their father during the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the resolutions and proceedings of a meeting of veteran soldiers in the State of New York, held at Lockport, on the 15th of this month, expressive of the sense of the meeting in favor of the bill placing General Shields upon the retired list as brigadier-general, and requesting the Senators from the State of New York to favor the adoption of the bill. I move the reference of these resolutions to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a petition signed by a large number of residents of the county of Niagara, State of New York, praying the passage of the bill to which the resolutions which I have just presented refer, and a similar petition signed by men all of whom served in the Army of the Union during the late rebellion, also praying the passage of the bill touching General Shields. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also the petition of Samuel Lowery, of Huntsville, Alabama, praying legislation in his behalf as a chaplain in the Army; and, by request, when that order is reached, I shall ask leave to introduce a bill to carry out the object of the petition. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY presented resolutions of the Veteran Club of the city of Chicago, Illinois, against the transfer of the pension agencies throughout the country to the Pension Bureau at Washington, District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OGLESBY. I present the petition of John Miller and 70 others, citizens of Dog Tooth Point, Alexander County, Illinois, praying for the establishment of a new post-office at Commercial Point, and for a new post-route thereto, from Cairo or Goose Island, Illinois. With the petition I submit an amendment to the post-route bill. I move that the petition and amendment be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE presented a memorial of the Board of Underwriters of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the transfer of the life-saving service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of a law authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tennessee, until the proposed location of the same shall have been examined and reported upon by a board of competent engineers, to be appointed for that purpose, and praying the appointment of such a board for the purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1033) to provide for the revision and correction of assessments for special improvements in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred various petitions relating to the subject, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 994) for the relief of Albert Ordway, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Claude H. Masten, surviving partner of the firm of Le Vert & Masten, of Mobile, Alabama, for himself and in behalf of Octavia Le Vert and her two children, widow and heirs of his deceased partner, praying compensation for certain damages to property during the late war by United States troops, submitted a report thereon accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1112) for the relief of Claude H. Masten, surviving partner of the firm of Le Vert & Masten, of Mobile, Alabama, and the children of Octavia Le Vert, deceased.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 241) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Charleston, Kanawha County, West Virginia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to state, in connection with the report made by the Senator from West Virginia in favor of the passage of the bill making an appropriation for the Methodist Episcopal Society of Charleston, West Virginia, to reimburse that society for the destruction of their property in the late civil war, that the chairman of the Committee on Claims, [Mr. McMILLAN,] the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER,] and myself dissent from the report, and I am authorized to submit the views of the minority upon the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority in the case stated will be received and printed.

Mr. HEREFORD. The two reports will be printed together, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be printed together. It is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BARNUM (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1113) for the relief of property owners in square 382, in the city of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MAXEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1114) to amend the one hundred and third Article of War; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1115) for the relief of James F. Bates and James Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KERNAN. By request of gentlemen of the State of New York who are members of the Geographical Society, I ask leave to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1116) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the Army to take command of the expedition being fitted out by Messrs. Morrison & Brown, citizens of New York, to search for the records of Sir John Franklin's expedition, and to issue to such officer Army equipments and ammunition; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GROVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1117) for the relief of Alexander McNary and John H. Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1118) to repeal section 3412 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides for a tax on the notes of State banking associations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1119) for the relief of Bird L. Fletcher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1120) for the relief of Samuel Lowery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 26) instructing the Attorney-General of the United States to bring suits in the name of the United States to set aside certain patents to lands of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. MERRIMON, Mr. OGLESBY, and Mr. MITCHELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-routes in the several States therein named; which were referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Mr. BLAINE. I submit the following resolutions. I shall not ask for a vote at present, but only that they be printed:

Resolved, That any radical change in our present tariff laws would, in the judgment of the Senate, be inopportune, would needlessly derange the business interests of the country, and would seriously retard that return to prosperity for which all should earnestly co-operate.

Resolved, That in the judgment of the Senate it should be the fixed policy of this Government to so maintain our tariff for revenue as to afford adequate protection to American labor.

The resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. GARLAND submitted the following, to be offered as an amendment to the above resolutions; which was ordered to be printed:

And the Committee on Finance is instructed to report a bill at as early a day as possible providing for a commission to examine into the subject of the tariff, and report the result of such examination, with such suggestions as it may consider proper, at the next session of Congress.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on Wednesday last I gave notice that to-day, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I should ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and by a readjustment of the grants, without increasing the appropriation, to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad. I now move, in accordance with that notice, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not, of course, interfering with the regular order at one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At one o'clock the Senate will proceed with the Calendar unless it is ordered otherwise.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The regular order is the Calendar at one o'clock, I understand.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course it will be for the Senate to determine when one o'clock arrives.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But I give notice now that I shall ask for the regular order, so that all may understand it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from West Virginia would not wish to interfere with some remarks that I desire to submit.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly not.

Mr. LAMAR. Does the Senator from Oregon intend to do anything more with the bill to-day than to make a few remarks?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I feel it my duty, having charge of the bill, to press it as rapidly as is consistent with the public business and the proprieties of the Senate. Of course it is for the Senate to determine whether we shall proceed to a final conclusion now. I am very anxious to submit some remarks. I shall be glad to have the bill taken up and read, and I desire to submit some explanations of the bill to-day at least.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will be done, and that then we shall proceed with the Calendar, this bill to be taken up afterward for action.

Mr. LAMAR. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to the Senator from Oregon submitting remarks; but I am not in favor of having the bill taken up for consideration with a view to press action on it at this time.

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall have no disposition to press any hasty action against the wishes of any Senator. It is an important matter, and of course it ought to be carefully considered. But I should like to have the consideration of the subject begun, to have the bill read for the information of the Senate, and then I shall submit some explanations in regard to it.

Mr. LAMAR. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I also understand that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] desires to submit some remarks; whether now or hereafter I am not advised.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to the Senator taking up the bill and proceeding with his remarks and concluding them, but I must insist that at the conclusion of his remarks we proceed with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the order unless the Senate orders otherwise at the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad; and, by a readjustment of the grants, without increasing the appropriation, to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the substitute reported by the Committee on Railroads in this case be considered as the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed substitute.

That the grants, rights, privileges, corporate powers, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, conferred upon the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by its charter and the various joint resolutions of Congress amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, granted, and continued to the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, as now reorganized, except as hereinafter modified. And ten years' additional time is hereby granted to said company to construct its main line of road, via the valley of the Columbia River and Portland, Oregon, to Kalama, Washington Territory, under its charter and the acts and resolutions of Congress relating thereto, except as hereinafter otherwise provided.

SEC. 2. That this extension is granted upon the express condition and understanding that where pre-emption and homestead claims were initiated, or private entries and locations were allowed, upon lands embraced in the grant to said company, prior to the receipt of the orders of withdrawal at the respective district land offices, the lands embraced in such entry shall not be held as within the grant to said company, and shall be patented to the parties lawfully entering the same, and under the provisions of this section, and in case of abandonment by them, shall be open to pre-emption and homestead entry only of actual settlers; but the company shall be entitled to indemnity therefor, as now provided therefor.

SEC. 3. That entries remaining unadjusted and suspended in the General Land Office on account of an increase of price of the even sections within the limits of the grant, where the same were made, or based upon settlement made prior to the receipt of the orders of withdrawal aforesaid at the respective district land offices, shall be relieved from such suspension and carried into patent; but nothing in this act shall be construed to affect existing adjustments, nor to authorize the refunding of any moneys received for such lands under existing laws.

SEC. 4. Actual settlers on any agricultural or grazing lands embraced within the grant to said company, who shall have settled thereon before the completion and acceptance of the section of the road opposite thereto, and actual settlers on any agricultural or grazing lands embraced within the said grant remaining unsold at the expiration of eight years from the completion and acceptance of the section of the road opposite thereto, if said last-mentioned lands shall, at the time of such completion and acceptance, be surveyed by the Government, and if not then, at the expiration of eight years after the Government surveys shall be extended over the same, shall be entitled each to purchase from said company one quarter section, or a legal subdivision thereof, on which they shall have settled, at the price of not exceeding $2.50 per acre, excepting coal, iron, and timber lands, and lands within the right of way for said railroad: Provided, however, That this section shall not apply to the lands already earned by said company.

SEC. 5. That the extension of time granted by section 1 of this act shall not apply to the main line north of Tacoma, nor to the branch line of said road across the Cascade Mountains to Puget Sound, in Washington Territory; and the lands heretofore granted therefor shall be, and are hereby, restored to the public domain, to be dealt with as other public lands, except for the distance of twenty miles north of the portion of said branch now constructed from Tacoma to Wilkeson, in Washington Territory. And the said company shall receive patents for a quantity of land equal to twenty sections per mile on each side of said constructed portion of said branch, such land to be selected from the odd-numbered sections on each side of said constructed branch, but on the north side not farther than twenty miles therefrom; but the said company may select, and receive patents for, lands to make up any deficiency in said quantity, from any of the public lands in Washington Territory within the limits of the grant for the main line.

SEC. 6. That in case any of the lands heretofore granted by Congress to said in the construction of said railroad shall become forfeited to the United States and be restored to the public domain by reason of the failure of said company to perform the conditions herein set forth, or any of them, the actual settlers on such of said granted lands shall not then have been earned by said company, who shall have settled thereon under the provisions of this act or by license from said company, shall each have the right to obtain title to such lands, not exceeding one quarter section, under the homestead or pre-emption laws, as if said grant had not been made.

SEC. 7. That said company shall keep said railroad and telegraph lines, so far as already constructed, as well as that portion to be constructed hereafter, in good repair and use, and shall transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroad for the Government, whenever required to do so by any Department thereof; and for all the purposes aforesaid, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the rates paid by individuals for like transportation and telegraph services; and in case the said railroad company, or its successors or assigns, shall at any time willfully neglect or refuse to transport promptly the mails, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores as aforesaid, then the President of the United States shall take, and he is hereby authorized to take, such measures as, in his judgment, may be necessary to protect the interests of the United States and to enforce compliance with the provisions of this act (and of the act of July 2, 1864, to which this act is an amendment, by taking possession of the said railroad and telegraph lines, and of their equipment, or of such part thereof and for such time as may be necessary to secure the service required; and said company shall be entitled to receive for such service compensation at fair and reasonable rates, taking into consideration the nature and circumstances thereof.

SEC. 8. That from the mouth of Snake River, or other suitable point east of or at the town of Umatilla, in the State of Oregon, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, and the extension provided for in this act, is on this express condition: the said Northern Pacific Railroad shall be located and constructed on the south side of the Columbia River: Provided further, That the extensions, franchises, and privileges granted by this act to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are on the further express condition that such company shall, within nine months from the approval of this act, commence the construction of its said railroad at some point at or near the mouth of Snake River, and construct and equip eastward, within one year thereafter, not less than twenty-five miles thereof, and at least forty miles each succeeding year thereafter until completed to Pend d'Oreille Lake; and shall also complete and equip, in addition to the road already completed, at least one hundred miles of its main line within one year after the time fixed herein for the commencement of work as aforesaid, and at least one hundred miles of said main line each year thereafter, including in each said one hundred miles the number of miles to be completed eastward on the Pacific slope as aforesaid, and shall also, within two years from the passage of this act, construct and equip their said railroad around the portage at the Lower Cascades of the Columbia River, on the south side thereof, to suitable points of junction with navigable water in said river, above and below said Cascades; and shall also construct and equip their said railroad around The Dalles of the Columbia River, on the south side thereof, within two and a half years from the passage of this act, so as to connect conveniently with steamboats on the Columbia River above and below said portages and by means thereof; the said portions of said main line of railroad around said portages to be part of and included in the one hundred miles of road required to be constructed in the respective years in which they shall be completed and equipped as aforesaid; and shall construct and equip their whole road within ten years from the date of the passage of this act; and this extension is on the express condition that in the use of said portage railroads said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall make no discrimination in charges on freights or passengers passing up and down said Columbia River and over said railroads, and shall receive from and deliver to all boats, persons, and companies engaged in the navigation of the Columbia River all freights and passengers on equal terms, without discrimination or excessive charges; and the rights of all persons under this act may be enforced by judicial proceedings in any court of competent jurisdiction. And in the event of any failure to complete and equip said railroad portages at the Cascades and The Dalles of the Columbia River, or either of them, within the times and in the manner hereinbefore specified, then all the rights, grants, privileges, and franchises herein granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, so far as the same relate to the construction of a railroad between Portland and Umatilla, Oregon, shall vest in and inure to the benefit of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company: Provided always, That such latter company shall, within three months after such failure, commence the construction of such railroad at the city of Portland, and construct and equip on the south side of the Columbia River at least thirty-three miles within one year thereafter, and at least twenty-five miles each succeeding year until the whole of said road is completed from Portland to Umatilla: Provided further, That in such event the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall have the right to the use of said common line upon the same terms, and to be determined in the same manner, as are hereinafter provided for ascertaining and determining the terms upon which the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company shall use the said line in case the same is constructed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That it shall be lawful for the said companies to make any agreement having for its object the joint construction and ownership of the said common road, or for its joint ownership after construction, and for the joint appropriation of the aid herein granted for its construction: And provided further, That in the event said companies are unable to agree upon the same, the terms of a joint ownership of said common road shall be settled, upon the demand of either company, upon the basis of an equal participation in the actual reasonable cost and expense of the construction thereof, to be ascertained and determined by a commission of three disinterested and competent persons to be appointed by the President of the United States as provided in the ninth section of this act, whose compensation shall be at the rate of $10 per day while so employed, and actual expenses, to be certified by themselves, shall be paid by said companies: Provided, however, That the right to acquire joint ownership of said road between Umatilla and Portland, under the provisions of this section, shall be exercised within twelve years from the passage of this act, and only upon payment within that period by the company desiring to acquire the same, to the other, of the amount so ascertained and determined by said commissioners, or by the agreement of the said companies.

SEC. 9. The grants, privileges, and franchises herein granted are upon the further express condition that from the point of junction of the Northern Pacific and the proposed Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroads at or near the town of Umatilla, in the State of Oregon, by the pass of the Columbia River, through the Cascade Mountains, to the city of Portland, the said Northern Pacific Railroad shall be a common road for both lines; and the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall receive such compensation from the other company and such use shall be on such terms as the said corporations may agree upon; and if they are unable to agree, then the Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall receive from the other such compensation and at such times, and the use thereof shall be upon such terms, as a commission of three disinterested and competent persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, shall determine to be equitable and just.

SEC. 10. That the sections designated by even numbers within the limits of the grant to the said Northern Pacific Railroad be, and the same are hereby, declared to be, from the date of the approval of this act, open to settlement and pre-emption at the price of $2.50 per acre, and to homesteads, in quantities not exceeding one-quarter section, or one hundred and sixty acres, to be taken in conformity to the existing pre-emption and homestead laws: Provided further, That all persons who, under the restrictions of the existing laws granting lands to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, have taken homesteads of not exceeding eighty acres, shall have the privilege of increasing the amount of their said homesteads, so that the aggregate taken by any one person shall not exceed one hundred and sixty acres; this to be done under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the grants, privileges, and franchises herein made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are on the express condition that said company shall, within five years from the date of the passage of this act, definitely survey and locate the whole line of their said railroad, and file in the Department of the Interior a map showing such definite location.

SEC. 11. That the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company is hereby authorized to issue its bonds, from time to time, not exceeding $25,000 per mile, to aid in the construction and equipment of its road, and to secure the same by mortgage on the whole or any part or parts of its railroad and property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, with the rights, privileges, and franchises thereto appertaining, including the franchise to be a corporation; and, as proof and notice of their legal execution and effectual delivery, such mortgages shall be filed and recorded in the Department of the Interior: Provided, however, That such bonds or mortgages shall not be issued or executed unless on the affirmative vote of the holders of not less than two-thirds of the stock represented at a meeting of the stockholders of said company duly called for that purpose.

SEC. 12. That when said company shall sell or contract to sell, or shall convey, except by way of mortgage or deed of trust, to aid in the construction of its railroad, any of said granted lands after the same shall be earned by said company as aforesaid so as to entitle them to sell or convey the same, the lands so sold, contracted, or conveyed shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory within which the same may be situated.

SEC. 13. That the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior, within six months from the date of the passage of this act, its assent to and acceptance of the provisions of this act, or be forever debarred from taking or receiving any benefit from or under the same.

SEC. 14. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time, and the acts and resolutions of which this act is amendatory or supplemental, having due regard for the rights of said companies, and to provide by law against unjust discriminations and excessive charges on the part of said company. Amend the title so as to read as follows: "A bill extending the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad."

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate at any great length in explanation of the provisions of, or in adverting to the importance of, the pending bill.

On the 5th day of July, 1869, now nearly nine years ago, in an address I had the honor of delivering on that day on the Pacific Coast, I used this language:

I regard the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad as one of the necessities of this age in the reduction, in a commercial point of view, of time and space. I believe it will prove the great life-artery of the continent along which shall eventually flow with irresistible power not only the trade of a hemisphere, but of the world; and while the present great overland road is a work among the grandest of the age, both in magnitude and influence, I believe the Northern Pacific, when completed, will be infinitely grander in the influence it shall operate on the internal commerce of our continent and the carrying trade of the world.

I hold, Mr. President, to the same opinion to-day, and repeat now and here what I said then and there, without the slightest modification in either letter or spirit. And because I have during the past four months contended with all the zeal and energy I could command for terms that would induce or, if you please, compel, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to concede in this proposed legislation conditions which as one of the representatives of the State of Oregon and the great Pacific Northwest I regarded as but just to that section of our common country, and which conditions I did not then and do not now regard as materially embarrassing to that company, let it not be said, as in malice it has been said, that I was secretly or surreptitiously laboring in the interest of the Union or Central Pacific Companies to defeat this great national enterprise. Against all such baseless and malicious insinuations I am willing that my record here upon this whole subject from Alpha to Omega shall stand, branding them as they deserve to be branded, as the putrescent productions of malice and the poisoned but yet harmless weapons of ill-concealed envy and delirious hate.

While earnestly favoring, as I always have earnestly favored, an extension of time to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, there seemed to me to be certain conditions other than those which the company were willing to concede imperatively demanded by the people of the great Northwest and for which I have contended with all my power, and all of which I have thought and still think should in justice to that section have been conceded. These were:

1. Such provisions as would compel at an early day the building of so much of their road as would be necessary to open up the monopoly-bound Columbia River to free navigation.

2. The transfer of the branch road so as to run from the Upper Columbia to Salt Lake, instead of from the Upper Columbia to Puget Sound across the Cascade Mountains.

3. That the Northern Pacific road from Umatilla, Oregon, to Portland, Oregon, through the great passes of the Cascade Mountains, where there is neither room nor necessity for more than one road, should be constructed on the south side of the Columbia River, and when completed be a common road for the use of both the Northern Pacific and the trains of the road the early construction of which the wants of commerce will inevitably force from the Upper Columbia to Salt Lake.

4. That the settlers within the limits of the grant should be relieved from the domination of the company and be permitted full and free right of settlement with right to purchase at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre. And this last condition is one that affects settlers along the line of the road.

As I have said I labored zealously for a bill embodying all these provisions, not for the purpose of imposing onerous conditions upon the company, not with a view of obstructing legislation in favor of this great national enterprise, but with the sole purpose of legislating in the best possible manner for the greatest possible good and the greatest possible number. On the 1st day of April, of the present year, the Senate Committee on Railroads reported to the Senate a bill for the extension of time to the Northern Pacific, which embodied all these provisions. I entertained the hope that that bill would not encounter the hostility of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, but in this I was mistaken. Bitter and unqualified opposition was at once manifested to certain of the provisions of that bill, the more especially to that one providing for aid to the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Company. A new bill similar to the one introduced and reported on in the House was presented to the Senate by the honorable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WYNDOM] and at his instance and without objection from any one, as is the courtesy of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. These bills, which were identical, were conspicuous to me at least by the absence from their sections of all the provisions and conditions for which I had been so zealously contending and which were incorporated in the bill reported by the Senate Railroad Committee. For instance they omitted—

First. The Salt Lake branch entirely.

Secondly. No provision whatever on the Columbia River, either at the portages or anywhere else, until after the completion of the whole road across the continent between the mouth of Snake River and the Missouri River, a distance of nearly twelve hundred miles.

Thirdly. No provision was made for a common road through the passes of the Cascade Mountains.

Fourthly. No adequate protection was given to settlers within the limits of the grant, in this, that the right of homestead was entirely taken away on all lands, even sections as well as odd, within the limits of the grant; moreover the right to settlers on unsurveyed agricultural odd sections to purchase these lands at $2.50 per acre was limited and restricted to those settlers only who might settle on such unsurveyed agricultural lands a distance in the interior of one hundred miles from either end of completed road, while all settlers on unsurveyed agricultural lands (and on all grazing lands everywhere) for a distance of one hundred miles from each end of the completed road were to be at the mercy of the corporation, both as to quantity and price.

With this conflict of opinion and action, with the Northern Pacific Company arrayed against the bill reported by the Senate Committee on Railroads and earnestly supporting the bill to which I have just attracted attention; with my colleagues in the Senate and House while earnestly favoring the Salt Lake measure yet as earnestly opposed to making it a part of the bill for the extension of time to the Northern Pacific unless consented to by the Northern Pacific Company, it was clearly apparent that unless the committees of the Senate made some effort to harmonize these conflicting opinions all efforts of all concerned could but result in nothing but defeat. That effort was made. The bill of the company was by the Committee on Public Lands reported back to the Senate, with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Railroads. The railroad bill was also at my instance recommitted, and the substitute now before the Senate is the result of the final and earnest efforts of the Railroad Committee of this body to present such a measure as might, so far as possible, reconcile conflicting interests and secure the favorable action of Congress.

Important concessions on all sides were necessary. Important concessions to all concerned are tendered by the committee in the measure now presented for the consideration of the Senate.

It shall now, as amended, receive my earnest, unqualified support; and it is my ardent hope that it may also receive the support of all concerned. Although the bill may not contain all that may be desirable, a great national measure like this in which the whole continent is vitally interested should not be permitted to fail because, forsooth, every local requirement, however reasonable and just in itself, is not fully and squarely met to the full expectation or hope of all local interests.

I shall now briefly state the provisions of the pending bill. It provides that an extension of ten years' time from the passage of the act be given to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company for the completion of its main line of road from its present western terminus on the Missouri River via the valley of the Columbia River and Portland, Oregon, to the present western terminus of their completed road at Kalama, in Washington Territory, upon these conditions:

First. That all agricultural and grazing lands, surveyed or unsurveyed, included in the grant on the whole line of the non-completed road shall be open to settlement in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres at the price of not exceeding $2.50 per acre; the even sections to be open to homesteads of one hundred and sixty acres under the homestead law and also to settlers under the pre-emption laws at $2.50 per acre.

It is also provided that where homesteaders have been restricted in their claims under existing laws to eighty acres, they may enlarge the same so as to include not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres. Ample provision is also made for the relief and protection of present settlers, pre-emptors and homesteaders, within the limits of the grant whose claims were initiated prior to the receipt of the orders of withdrawal at the respective district land offices.

The company is also compelled within five years to definitely locate their entire line of road and file maps thereof with the Department of the Interior.

The company is to resume work on their road within nine months from the passage of this act at or near the mouth of Snake River on the Columbia River, and build at least one hundred miles each year thereafter; twenty-five miles of which shall be built and equipped eastward from the mouth of Snake River within one year after commencement, and forty miles eastward each year thereafter; the balance of the one hundred miles each year to be built at such point as the company may determine, which without doubt would be westerly from Bismarck on the Missouri River toward Montana. They are also under the provisions of this bill to complete and equip within two years from the passage of this act their main line around the portage at the Cascades of the Columbia River on the south side thereof, and within two and a half years around the portage at The Dalles of the Columbia River on the south side thereof, so as to connect conveniently with steamboats on the Columbia River above and below said portages and by means thereof. The extension being also on the express condition that in the operation and use of said portion of their main line around such portages the Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall make no discrimination in charges on freights or passengers passing up and down the Columbia River and over said railroads. And they shall moreover receive from and deliver to all boats, persons, and companies engaged in the navigation of the Columbia River all freights and passengers on equal terms and without discrimination or excessive charges; and provision is also made whereby the rights of all persons interested may be enforced by judicial proceedings in any court of competent jurisdiction.

It is also provided, as a forfeiture, that in the event of a failure on the part of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to complete and equip their road around said portages at the Cascades and The Dalles of the Columbia, or either of them, within the time specified, that is two years from the passage of this act at the Cascades, and two and a half at The Dalles, then all the rights, grants, privileges, and franchises of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, in so far as they relate to the construction of a railroad between Portland and Umatilla, in the State of Oregon, through the great pass of the Columbia River, shall vest in and inure to the benefit of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company. On condition, however, that such latter company shall, within three months after such failure, commence the construction of such road at the city of Portland, Oregon, and construct and equip on the south side of the Columbia River at least thirty-three miles, which will include the portage at the Cascades, within one year thereafter, and at least twenty-five miles each succeeding year until completed to Umatilla.

It is also provided in this bill, and the extension is on the express condition, that in any event whichever corporation shall construct the road between Portland, Oregon, and Umatilla, Oregon, through the passes of the Cascade Mountains, the same shall be a common road for the use of the trains of both companies, the company constructing the same to receive such compensation from the other company, and such use to be upon such terms as the two corporations may agree upon; and if they are unable to agree, then the compensation and use to be upon such terms as a commission of three competent and disinterested persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, shall determine to be equitable and just. It is furthermore provided in the bill that it shall be lawful for said companies to make any agreement having for its object the joint construction and ownership of the said common road, or for its joint ownership after construction, or for the joint appropriation of the aid granted for its construction.

It is also an express condition on which this extension is granted that from the mouth of Snake River or other suitable point east of or at the town of Umatilla, in the State of Oregon, to the city of Portland the Northern Pacific Railroad shall be constructed on the south side of the Columbia River. These in brief are the principal features of the pending bill.

It may be inquired wherefore the necessity for these several provisions in reference to that portion of the road on the Pacific coast on and along the Columbia River? The answer is this, and it is to my mind and was to the mind of the committee conclusive: unlike any other section of our country the Pacific Northwest, including the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, Western Montana and Northern Utah, with their rapidly increasing population, is almost entirely destitute of railroad facilities. The only means by which the people of Eastern Oregon, Eastern Washington Territory, and Idaho Territory have of reaching tide-water with their annual productions of many millions in value of wheat, wool, stock, hides, &c., and the only avenue through which they must receive their interior supplies, is that of water transportation on the Columbia River.

This river, one of the grandest on the globe, taking its rise in the Rocky Mountains in latitude 50° 20' north and flowing north as far as 52° 10', interlacing its arms with those of the Missouri and Saskatchewan in the distant regions of perpetual snow, thus holding communion with the two great valleys of the continent, after making the detour of the great bend in British Columbia moves onward gathering up the waters of the Pend d'Oreille, Spokane, Okinakan, Wenatchee, Yakima, Snake, and other mighty tributaries as armaments of power; then plunges through the craggy chasms of The Dalles and the Cascades, rending asunder the rock-ribbed mountains and rearing barriers to navigation, and then on in greatness and grandeur to the Pacific Ocean at Astoria, on the parallel of 46° north latitude, and which to-day for a distance of over one hundred miles from its mouth its broad waters mirror back the emblem of every nationality on earth, while commerce, wealth, and power for this distance are to-day making their triumphant transit from sea and land upon its proud waters. Still, on the remaining portion of this great river, the second on this continent, monopoly, seizing at an early day the key which nature forged in these obstructions at The Dalles and the Cascades, sits enthroned as imperial dictator to the commerce of the whole Northwest, a paralyzing incubus upon the material development and general prosperity of that vast region.

In this respect, however, while facts must be stated I must do no injustice to any person or corporation. I have no resentments to gratify—no favors to ask. I have a high duty to perform and I trust I have the courage to perform it irrespective of personal consequences to myself. The facts briefly and without embellishment are these: For a distance of some four miles at the Cascades and about fourteen at the falls of the Columbia there are obstructions to navigation which cannot be overcome except by the construction of canal and locks. These the General Government has commenced at the Cascades, but a work of this character will of course require considerable time. The Oregon Steam Navigation Company, a corporation composed of honorable, ambitious business men, but who like most corporations, look more to the advancement of their own individual interests than those of the general public, at an early day in the history of that country obtained control of these passes in the Columbia, constructed a railroad around each of these portages, established a line of steamboats above and below each, and in this manner this corporation virtually laid an exclusive pre-emption on this great river, thus securing to them and their successors exclusively the right to navigate its waters and control its commerce. Because, under the circumstances I have stated, it will be seen at a glance that no opposition boat on that river could survive a month. Their steamers are of fine construction, their appointments exceptionally good, and their business, so far as I am advised, has in their dealings with the public, on their hard terms, been conducted honorably. Their charges, however, for freight and passage have been onerous, oppressive, and in some respects discriminating, and so great a tax upon the industries of the country as to amount to little else than an embargo upon the development of the country.

I hold in my hand a statement in reference to freight charges by the Oregon Steam Navigation Company on that river, handed me by a gentleman of character, a resident for many years in Oregon, who assures me it is correct, which will give some idea of the exactions to which the people of Eastern Oregon and Washington Territory and Western Idaho are subjected. It reads as follows:

Freights on Columbia River charged by Oregon Steam Navigation Company.

	Miles.	Per ton.
From Portland to The Dalles.....	110	$10 00
From Portland to Columbus.....	140	20 00
From Portland to Umatilla.....	200	20 00
From Portland to Wallula.....	230	25 00
From Portland to Colfax, (on Snake River).....	270	35 00
From Portland to Lewiston, (Idaho).....	370	50 00

These charges are per ton of measurement. It really adds on for dead weight about 33 per cent. In other words, the freight to Wallula is about in weight two cents per pound or $40 per ton; and three and a half cents per pound or $70 to Lewiston.

Nine-tenths of the down freight is wheat. Forty thousand tons were brought down or in that neighborhood in 1877. At least fifty thousand will be shipped this year. It will not bear a heavy charge or none will be shipped.

The Oregon Steam Navigation Company's charges are:

	Per ton.
From Snake River to Portland.....	$8 00
From Wallula to Portland.....	6 00
From Umatilla to Portland.....	6 00
From The Dalles to Portland.....	5 00

These charges on up-freight are at least four times as heavy as they would be if there was not an entire monopoly of the business. On down-freights they are twice as high as they should be. Henry Villard, esq., president Oregon Steamship Company, informed me that if the river was opened to all, he would agree to carry wheat from Wallula (from which point thirty thousand tons were shipped in 1877) to San Francisco, nine hundred and twenty miles, for what the Oregon Steamship Navigation Company now charge from Wallula to Portland, two hundred and twenty miles.

On the Lower Columbia, which has not its passes barricaded by any monopoly, freights are carried from Portland to Astoria, one hundred and ten miles, or vice versa, for $2 per ton, and a handsome profit is realized. One year the Oregon Steamship Navigation Company carried freights for $1 per ton, and passengers for $1 each, while to The Dalles, the same distance, but where competition were cut off, the charge was $5 for each passenger and $12 per ton for freight.

There is twice as much freight to carry on the Upper Columbia as on the Lower, and in a few years there will be ten times as much. If competition were opened it would double in amount in one year.

Dr. Baker, of Walla Walla, paid $625 freight on a small locomotive from Paterson, New Jersey, to Portland, Oregon, via the Union Pacific and Oregon Steamship Company, a distance of forty-one hundred miles. The Oregon Steamship Navigation Company charged him $750 to carry it from Portland to Wallula, two hundred and twenty miles.

Mr. McMILLAN. May I ask the Senator from Oregon what obstructions to the navigation of the Columbia River there are between Walla Walla and Portland, the points that he has specified here as being embraced within these freight charges?

Mr. MITCHELL. The two obstructions provided for by the pending measure—

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator please state the character of them?

Mr. MITCHELL. One is the Cascades of the Columbia and the other is The Dalles of the Columbia. The one is four to five miles in length and the other about fourteen miles in length. They are rapids; the fall of the river makes rapids that it is impossible to navigate.

Mr. McMILLAN. By what method is the transportation made past those rapids?

Mr. MITCHELL. As I have already stated, by a railroad constructed by the Oregon Steam Navigation Company.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then the freight would be considerably increased by reason of the transportation by rail around the Cascades, and also at the other obstacle, The Dalles.

Mr. MITCHELL. Unquestionably it would increase it very much from the fact that it would lead to competition undoubtedly on the Columbia River, and freights would come down.

Mr. McMILLAN. That was my impression from what I saw of the Columbia River myself.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Minnesota has been there and is cognizant of the condition of things along that river. I will proceed with the statement I was reading.

Hon. S. S. FENN paid the Oregon Steam Navigation Company for freight on a Pitt's thrasher, weight not more than two and a half tons, from Portland to Lewiston, $372.

J. B. Montgomery, of Portland, paid on a small boat that weighed less than four hundred pounds and cost only $17, to take it to Columbus, one hundred and forty miles, $60.

I also hold in my hand a letter from a very reliable gentleman residing in Oregon in which, in speaking of the importance of this railway enterprise, he uses this language:

Now, my esteemed friend, my apology for this note is my anxiety for the success of your railroad bill. Think of it. I had a bundle of fruit-trees this spring sent to me from Vancouver to The Dalles—

The distance is about forty miles—

I was going into the sale of them, but weakened when I paid the freight bill, which was the modest sum of $5. The trees cost $25.

His nursery fruit-trees cost $25 all told, and the freight on them by the boats of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company for a distance of about forty miles was $5.

Mr. President, comment is unnecessary. Can this corporation, grown fat from the pockets of the producers of the country, complain when the people through their representatives demand not that they should abandon this river, not that they should surrender any of their vested rights, but that they should divide its broad waters with the keels of competing lines and its commerce with the decks of competing steamers?

They have become a wealthy and powerful corporation, and unwilling to relinquish voluntarily their mortgage, either upon the commerce of this river or the industries of the people, or their exclusive right as the common carriers upon one of the grandest rivers on the globe of the freight and passenger traffic of the great Pacific Northwest.

Under this state of things is it strange the people have become restive and demand of their representatives in Congress such legislation as will release this great river from the fetters of this monopoly and open it to competition and free navigation? How can this be done? Unquestionably by the construction of less than twenty miles of railroad around these two portages under the provisions and in accordance with the terms and conditions of the pending bill. As a matter of course, the growing commerce of that great empire of wealth, that almost illimitable field of interior fruitfulness, demands the speedy prosecution of the removal of these obstructions at the Cascades and The Dalles by the construction of the canal and locks now under progress at the Cascades, so that boats may pass from the far interior of the continent along this great national highway uninterruptedly to the sea; but, until this great work can be consummated, why should this company be permitted to maintain its exclusive supremacy over and ownership of this great river? No longer does this grand Oregon roll through a region of voiceless and impressive solitudes, bearing "no sound save his own dashing;" and in the soon henceforth I trust it shall be the silver track to busy cities and happy homes, no longer the private property of one corporation, but, like the air of heaven, open and free to all.

In the main the pending bill secures for the Columbia River section the provisions for which I have been contending; and furthermore, that protection to settlers within the limits of the grant so much desired is fully guaranteed by its terms. I should have preferred that the provision granting aid for the road from Umatilla to Salt Lake should have remained a part of the pending bill; justice to Eastern Oregon and Southern Idaho demanded it; but as its retention longer would under existing circumstances unquestionably have endangered all legislation, and as many weighty arguments were urged why the two bills should be presented separately, and in consideration of the further fact that by disconnecting the two the Northern Pacific Company were willing to concede the important provisions in reference to opening up the Columbia River to free navigation by the construction of their road around the portages, the committee, while favoring the construction of both roads, finally came to the conclusion that the two bills should be reported separately and each stand on its own merits; and in this final conclusion, under all the circumstances, I fully and heartily concur.

And in this connection I desire to express the unqualified opinion that the people of Eastern Oregon and Idaho will be infinitely better served by the opening of the Columbia River to free navigation from the mouth of Snake River to the sea, as is provided for in the pending bill, than they would be had they a railroad to Umatilla with the river bound and locked against them as it is to-day. But the people need and demand both. The construction of the Northern Pacific alone, except as it opens the Columbia to free navigation, does not meet the great wants of this section of Eastern Oregon and Idaho, and which fact I will endeavor to show when the bill in aid of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass road comes up for consideration. And in this connection it must not be forgotten that the right secured by the pending bill to the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Company, not only to the use of the road from Umatilla to Portland, over which to run their trains, but the further right, in the event that the Northern Pacific Company should fail to construct and equip its portage roads within the time specified, to appropriate to its own use the whole of its land grant from Portland to Umatilla, is of immense importance, not only to the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Company, but to all the people of Eastern Oregon and Idaho to be benefited by the construction of the Salt Lake road.

By the provisions of the pending bill no extension is granted to the main line of the Northern Pacific north of Tacoma, in Washington Territory, that being their western terminus on Puget Sound, neither does the extension apply to the line for the branch across the Cascade Mountains to Puget Sound, except as to the road already completed, and all the lands included in this portion of the main line and in this branch, amounting to some eight million acres, are by the specific provisions of this bill remitted to the public domain and thrown open to settlement. Furthermore, the provision in the pending bill compelling the road between Umatilla and Portland, Oregon, to be built on the south side of the Columbia River, reduces the original grant some three million acres, so that, should the bill as reported from the committee pass into law, it will reduce the grant as originally made to this company and to which they would have been entitled had they complied with the terms of the original grant about eleven million acres. Surely the Government could lose nothing but gain much in the development of the resources of the country that would surely follow by granting at least a portion of this amount or its equivalent in some form in aid of the road from Umatilla to Salt Lake—an act of justice I hope to see consummated at no distant day.

A few more words, Mr. President, and I am done, and these in reference to the national as well as international importance of the Northern Pacific Railroad. In these days of railroads, telegraphs, telephones, and other modern inventions, it has come to be considered an axiom in commercial science that the nearer we approach to the annihilation of time and space in the transit of merchandise, and the more rapid the succession of sales, transfers, and supplies, the nearer we come to perfection in the laws of trade, and the better are the interests of peoples, as well as nations, subserved. That the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad will tend strongly toward the reduction of time and space in transcontinental transit between the Pacific Northwest and the Great Lakes and valleys of the Mississippi, as well as the Atlantic seaboard, and will furthermore bring into closer commercial communion with the commerce of this continent that of the commercial ports of Asia, none can successfully deny.

From San Francisco to Chicago, via the Central and Union Pacific roads, it is twenty-four hundred and twenty-three miles, while from Chicago to tide-water on the Columbia River or Puget Sound, via the line of the Northern Pacific, it is but twenty-one hundred and forty miles, or nearly three hundred miles shorter. Again, from New York to San Francisco, via Chicago and Omaha, it is thirty-three hundred and twenty-three miles, while from New York to tide-water on the Columbia River or Puget Sound, via the line of the Northern Pacific road, it is three thousand and forty miles, or nearly three hundred miles less. This will show at a glance the capability of the Northern Pacific road when completed to compete successfully with the Central and Union Pacific roads, the inevitable effect of which must be to check the spirit of monopoly which now enables the Union and Central Pacific Companies to dictate to the people of this continent the terms of personal and mercantile transit across the wide domain from sea to sea.

And this suggestion gathers infinite strength when the question of altitudes is taken into consideration, as difficult altitudes are a great obstacle in the path of celerity and profit in conducting railroad enterprises. The Central Pacific reaches a summit level, I believe, above the sea in the Sierras of a fraction over seven thousand feet, the Union Pacific, in the Rocky Mountains, or Black Hills, of eighty-two hundred and forty feet, while the highest altitude on the line of the Northern Pacific, as I am advised, is only about five thousand feet, besides having a much easier ascent and descent.

But once more. The distance from New York to Shanghai, via Chicago, San Francisco, and the Midway Islands, is about ten thousand four hundred and twenty-three miles, while from New York to Shanghai, via Chicago, the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the Columbia River or Puget Sound, the distance is but about eight thousand seven hundred and fifty miles, or sixteen hundred and seventy-three miles shorter than the former route. Construct this great transcontinental highway, then, and what must inevitably be the consequence?

Will it not be, as I have had occasion to remark before in reference to this same subject, that the commerce of Asia, from Behring's to the Straits of Malacca, comprising all of China and Japan, most of farther India, and the eastern empire of the Russias, together with the islands of the North Pacific, will have its natural and geographical center at tide-water on the Columbia River; and that most of the great valleys of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, all the valleys of the north interior of the continent, the whole valley of the Saint Lawrence, including the line of lakes from Superior to Ontario, will realize the great value of the reduction of spaces and transfers to the minimum required by the laws of trade, only by making tide-water on the Columbia River instead of tide-water at San Francisco their point of distribution. True, now, the Golden Gate and the metropolitan city of the far West have the mastery, and there is the point of distribution, but her ships in crossing to Asia must bear northward to a parallel line with the mouth of the Columbia, and there will soon be found a worthy rival, and although emulous in the race for commercial supremacy there will be no unfriendly conflict; for who can deny that the reduction of time and space by a variation of four or five days from the maximum in the distance between and across two continents will, other things being equal, change the current of the commerce of the world?

But not only so; let it come to be understood, as time will surely demonstrate the fact, that in these land and ocean transits to which the pending bill invites attention, there is that abiding safety in the climates to be traversed which the provision of commerce seeks and always desires to obtain, and soon that wide expanse of now comparatively undeveloped wilds, stretching along our northern borders between the frontier lines of the two civilizations of this continent, will become the dwelling place of millions, the great internal highway of the world, dotted with towns and adorned with flourishing cities, bordered on either side with fields of golden grain, extended pastoral ranges, and mining and manufacturing industries whose vitality shall ever increase because it shall be drawn from the inexhaustible stream of the trade and commerce of the world that shall flow forever on through their every midst as it circumnavigates the nations and continents of the earth.

The people of the Pacific States and Territories have struggled long and manfully with the trials and impediments incident to pioneer life, and which isolation always brings; but the empire of civilization, of political, social, and commercial power, which their efforts are evolving, begins to promise a corresponding recompense. The wave of population, capital, influence, and power now setting in from the eastward is beginning to soften the asperities of the past, and give promise of better days in the future. The North Pacific coast, with its lengthened tiers of mountain ranges, decked with forests and gemmed with sands of living gold, filled with valleys and mapped with plains of unexampled fertility, all rapidly filling with energetic, enterprising, thoughtful, industrious, and advancing people, who bear onward in conquering triumph, amidst the dangers and solitudes of the wilderness, not alone the starry banner of a regenerated republic, but also the equally invincible and no less honored banner of human progress, the representative of the physical and intellectual achievements of mankind, adorned as it is with the trophies of ages, and unscathed by the scars of time, will, by the completion of this national enterprise in a great measure be lifted from the isolation that now envelops us, and by it the communities of that section of our common country will be advanced in some measure toward that position to which their geographical location, their enterprise, their indomitable will, their tenacity of purpose, their trade, their industries, their commerce, and their worth justly and honorably entitle them.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I am usually averse to taking the time of the Senate for the purpose of making speeches upon any subject; but the importance of this one to my constituents, and I believe to the whole country, justifies me in departing from my usual rule on that subject.

The bill before the Senate merely provides an extension of time for the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. It contains no new grant of lands, and confers no additional or enlarged powers or privileges upon the corporation. It does, however, impose certain new conditions presumed to be in the interest of the public. First, it opens the lands, hereafter to be earned, to settlement at the price of $2.50 per acre, thereby entirely removing the objection that the grant ties up the public domain and withholds it from the people. Second, with the consent of the company it reduces the amount of the grant some seven millions of acres by changing the location of the line to the south side of the Columbia River, and repealing the grant across the Cascade Mountains.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company presents to Congress a stronger case than is usually made by corporations asking its favor. It comes with "clean hands," asking only the right to live and to complete the great work it has begun. It recognizes the fact that to construct a railroad in these times over twelve hundred miles of mountains and plains without other aid than the wild lands, whose practical value, however rich their soil may be, is solely dependent upon the road itself, is a task of no small magnitude. The company as it exists to-day is in no sense a speculative organization. Its stockholders and managers are the men who, having put their money into the road, now wish to finish it in order to save what they have already invested. They will be glad to have anybody take the task off their hands. They stand ready at any moment, as they inform me, to turn over all their grants and franchises to any organization of capitalists who can give a reasonable guarantee of their readiness and ability to complete the road. The work of construction was prosecuted with great vigor until stopped by the financial disaster of 1873.

The company was unable to pay the interest due January 1, 1874, or any succeeding installment, and in April, 1875, three half-yearly installments of interest being then in arrears, the bondholders instituted proceedings to foreclose. Thereupon all the railroad, property, rights of property, grants, liberties, and franchises of the company, including the franchise to be a corporation, were sold under the decree of foreclosure, and were purchased by and conveyed to a committee appointed by the bondholders for all the holders of said bonds who should assent to the plan of reorganization adopted by the bondholders at their meeting held June 30, 1875.

The sale and conveyances to the committee were confirmed by the court, and the holders of $26,600,000 of the principal of said bonds (not including in that amount any interest) have assented to said plan of reorganization and surrendered their bonds and coupons in exchange for the preferred stock of the new organization. Such assents and exchanges continue to be given and made, and there is not an instance of dissent on the part of any bondholder known or reported.

The bondholders, having become the stockholders, organized September 29, 1875, by the election of a board of directors, and were put into full possession of the property by the receiver appointed by the court during the pendency of the foreclosure proceedings.

Thus those persons, all or very nearly all of whom are citizens and inhabitants of the United States, whose money made the property, have become the owners thereof, and they now seek to make it valuable, and to push to a successful completion the great enterprise in which they embarked (in many cases nearly all their means). The number of these is over eighty-five hundred; citizens of at least twenty States of the Union, North and South, East and West.

It has sometimes been said that these eight thousand five hundred stockholders, who have put nearly $30,000,000 of actual cash into this enterprise, were the thoughtless victims of enthusiastic dreamers or dishonest speculators, and hence are not entitled to the favorable consideration of the country. I indignantly repel this charge and will endeavor to show that it is wholly unfounded. Admitting, for the sake of argument, what in fact is barely false, that the original promoters were enthusiasts and dishonest speculators, by whose act were they put in the position to victimize those who trusted them with their money to invest in this enterprise? Congress passed the act of incorporation, made the grant of lands, and gave the assurance not only of its confidence in the enterprise, but of its intent and disposition to have it completed. It does not, therefore, become Congress to say to the men who invested their money under these circumstances, "You are the dupes of a wild and baseless scheme and must bear your losses as the penalty of your folly." But it is not true that the original company were visionary enthusiasts or dishonest speculators. I speak what I personally know when I say that the men who constituted the controlling power in the board of directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, at the time the present stockholders invested their money in its bonds, were the very foremost business men in this country, men whose integrity has never been questioned, and whose intelligence and business qualifications will not suffer in comparison with any others on the face of the earth. In confirmation of this statement I have only to mention the names of J. Gregory Smith and Frederick Billings, of Vermont; George W. Cass and Charles B. Wright, of Pennsylvania; R. D. Rico, of Maine; B. P. Cheaney, of Massachusetts; William G. Fargo and A. H. Barney, of New York; and William B. Ogden, of Chicago, who composed two-thirds of the board and were the managing and controlling spirits in the directorship at the time.

No better combination of names representing the highest and best type of business ability ever existed in any railroad organization in this country. All of these gentlemen had distinguished themselves and made large fortunes in other business enterprises, and they became interested in this one because of their honest belief in its merits, and of their ambition to link their names with an enterprise so colossal in its proportions, and which promised such grand results in the development of the continent. There is not an iota of evidence to prove that the directors of this company, or any of them, managed this great work dishonestly, or ever attempted to make it the means of personal gain at the expense of the stock or bondholders. The six hundred miles of road which they constructed were built when labor and materials of every kind were highest, and when a spirit of extravagance pervaded everything and everybody in this country. There was doubtless some extravagance in this work as well as in all others, but when the great depreciation in the value of Northern Pacific bonds, after the financial revulsion of 1873, is cited to prove dishonesty on their part, I reply that everything else fell in almost the same proportion. Even in the heart of New York City palatial blocks of houses have depreciated until they are not worth much more than one-third of their supposed value in 1872. And this is as true of many other cities as of New York. It is equally true of almost every other kind of property, even that which was regarded as of the most substantial character. Is it then any evidence of fraud or dishonesty, or even of bad management, that the bonds on a transcontinental railroad less than one-third completed, and whose success was not anticipated until it had spanned the continent and united the great lakes with the Pacific Ocean, should have depreciated to only 25 per cent. of their par value?

This enterprise has frequently been charged with a large share of responsibility for the financial revulsion of 1873, whereas it was, in fact, one of the prominent victims of an unsound financial condition which pervaded all kinds of business, and would have reached its natural and inevitable culmination about that time, if no Northern Pacific Railroad had ever been heard of.

Since his failure, it has been quite fashionable in certain quarters to denounce Jay Cooke, and to reflect upon his honor and business integrity because of the glowing terms in which he advertised this road and the country along its line. In my judgment nothing could be more unjust. It is true he was a man of sanguine temperament. What he believed at all, he believed with his whole heart. He sent his trusted agents over the proposed line of this road, from one end to the other, before undertaking the sale of its bonds. They saw its wealth of soil, of timber, and precious metals, and partly appreciating its boundless possibilities reported their conclusions to Mr. Cooke. He did what everybody else has done who has investigated the subject, at once became an earnest believer in the future of the enterprise, and threw himself into it with all the ardor of his enthusiastic nature. It failed, not from any lack of intrinsic merit, but because the times were ripe for failure, and now men who never possessed a tithe of his honesty or ability endeavor to show their own wisdom and integrity by sneering at him and his bubble, as they sometimes call it.

Mr. President, the portion of road now in operation has already produced results which fully justify me in saying, that the time is not distant, when this great work will more than confirm all that has ever been said of it by Mr. Cooke, or any of its most ardent advocates.

Let me briefly mention a few facts illustrative of the character and qualities of this enterprise, in its development of our national resources, and in its economic relations to the people and to the Treasury of the United States.

When completed it will connect the eastern system of navigable waters, via the great lakes, with the Pacific Ocean by a line six hundred and twenty-six miles shorter than from San Francisco to Chicago, and the distance from New York or Chicago to Puget Sound by this route will be less by three hundred and seventy-eight miles than by the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads. To these savings in distance must be added at least one hundred and twenty miles more, representing the advantages of the northern route in gradients. Freights can come east from San Francisco to Duluth via the Pacific Ocean and Northern Pacific Railroad with less distance than from San Francisco to Chicago by the present route. The effect of this shorter line upon transcontinental business must be apparent.

Let us now consider for a moment the results it has already accomplished in

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE INTERIOR OF THE CONTINENT.

Scarcely half a decade has elapsed since the Northern Pacific road was regarded by many as a wild and visionary scheme, and the country traversed by it was a silent wilderness, generally believed to be a "bleak, inhospitable, and uninhabitable desert."

Less than eight years ago, in company with a party of gentlemen, I traveled over a portion of this country in Western Minnesota and Eastern Dakota. We had heard rumors of a rich and beautiful country, and the party was organized for the purpose of exploration. To avoid losing our way over the untraveled prairies, we employed the services of an experienced half-breed scout. For hundreds of miles no sign of civilization met the eye. No roads, or even foot-paths, had marred the rich green verdure of the plains. Camping in one of those beautiful spots, so numerous in the Red River Valley, and making a couch of the soft green sward that spread out in every direction, until the rich green of the luxuriant prairies met and mingled with the pure deep blue of the sky, I dreamed of the agricultural empire which would one day flourish in unrivaled magnificence, on this fertile and apparently boundless plain; but even in my dreams I could not conceive the transformation which five years of railway development has produced. That same country to-day is alive with a hardy, industrious, and enterprising people. Already it contains some of the largest wheat farms in the world. Every railway train from the East is crowded with land hunters eager to procure a quarter section or more of that "bleak uninhabitable desert." One farm in Dakota, on the line of the railroad and in the Red River Valley, known as embraces ten thousand acres. Its wheat crop in 1877 comprised thirty-four hundred and fifteen acres, yielding 79,413 bushels. The farming implements necessary for operating it embrace: 24 breaking-plows, 100 stubble-plows, 67 harrows, 26 broad-seeders, 26 harvesters, and 5 steam thrashing-machines. The crop of 1878 will be eight thousand acres. The crop of this year, if as large per acre as last, will be over one hundred and eighty thousand bushels, and will require five hundred and forty freight cars, or one train of eighteen cars per day for a whole month, to transport the products of this one farm to market.

Another known as

THE GRANDIN FARM,

also situated in the Red River Valley, and within the limits of the Northern Pacific land grant, contains thirty-eight thousand acres. Its product in 1877, from twenty-six hundred acres was 62,660 bushels of wheat. Five thousand acres are to be sown in wheat this spring, and I understand the owners intend to continue their improvements on this scale. When their entire farm is under cultivation, it will produce nearly a million bushels, and will require twenty-seven hundred cars, or one train of eighteen cars, per day, for five months, to carry its products to market. I am credibly informed that the crops of 1876 and 1877 have fully reimbursed the owners for their entire expenditure for their lands, outfit, and the cost of culture. At $1 per bushel for wheat the lands in the Red River Valley will pay an average net profit of from $9 to $12 per acre. What more profitable business can be found? When a farm can be paid for out of the profits of a single crop, why should the people lack employment? They are beginning to learn these facts, and by the thousand the enterprising and industrious portion of our people are leaving the cities, villages, and densely settled parts of the Eastern and Middle States, to find homes and an honest living, on the fertile prairies along the line of the Northern Pacific road.

The soil in this valley is a very rich black mold from twelve inches to four feet in depth, resting on a clay subsoil. The subsoil itself is thoroughly impregnated with the elements needed for the production of wheat, and hence is practically inexhaustible.

Many other farms similar to these I have mentioned are being opened, but I am glad to know that the agricultural operations of this vast region are by no means confined to such mammoth enterprises as these.

By far the most important feature of this new development consists in the

which are being opened by men of limited means, but tireless energy, who go there to make homes for themselves and families. For it is the homes after all that make the country. The general and long-continued depression in business has driven out from the towns and villages an industrious and enterprising class of men who, finding no demand for their services in offices, stores, and workshops, have wisely resolved to appeal to Mother Earth for employment and support. People also, from the older sections of the country, where lands command higher prices, are selling their valuable, improved farms, and investing the proceeds in larger tracts for themselves and their children, in this new wheat garden of the world.

THE VAST EXTENT OF THIS COUNTRY.

The area available for profitable agriculture, in this new Northwest, is as vast in its proportions as it is generous in its products. There is room not only for all the unemployed and hungry millions in the United States, but also for a large part of the industrious poor of Europe.

Let us pause a moment to estimate the capacity of the country within the limits of the Northern Pacific land grant in Minnesota and Dakota alone. These limits embrace an area over two hundred and fifty miles long by eighty miles in width—equal to twenty thousand square miles, or 12,800,000 acres. Of this, more than eight million acres are of the very best quality, and capable of producing two hundred million bushels of wheat per annum. With the improved lake and canal route to New York, and the improved Mississippi River to the Gulf, competing with each other for its trade, this great valley will be the very focus of competition, and its products will be landed at New York for from fifteen to twenty cents per bushel, and at Liverpool for from thirty to forty cents. I am not too enthusiastic when I say that there is probably no locality on the face of the globe that combines so many elements of successful and profitable wheat culture as the Valley of the Red River of the North.

On the western slope of the Rocky Mountains the line of the road passes through some two hundred miles more of country singularly adapted to the culture of breadstuffs and awaiting only the means of transportation to be afforded by its construction to spring into full development. The facts related of the production of wheat in this region would seem incredible, if they were not vouched for by gentlemen of the highest respectability, who assert that fifty to sixty bushels per acre is not an uncommon yield.

Lying between these two great agricultural sections are the mining regions of Montana, Idaho, and the Black Hills, themselves also susceptible of most successful agricultural as well as mineral development. Recent discoveries in the Black Hills give assurance of mineral wealth unsurpassed on the continent.

Along the entire line of the road the agricultural lands (usually treeless) and the wonderfully timbered regions in Washington, Idaho, and Montana Territories, are so interspersed as to make a railroad indispensable necessary to the development of the resources of either, and to insure a paying railway traffic from the one to the other. This is also true of the great mining countries which intervene along its line.

The section of road already built has opened up for settlement a belt of land in Dakota, two hundred miles long by eighty miles wide, that without it would continue to be wholly inaccessible and unsalable. One-half of this belt of land the Government reserves for itself, and puts it upon the market at double the price of public land outside the railroad grant. So that, while one-half of the land is given to the company as a bonus for constructing a road and making the other half available, the Government wholly indemnifies itself by charging

$2.50 per acre, or its equivalent, for those lands which previously could not have been sold at all. The number of acres thus already made valuable and available to the Government, on this section of two hundred miles is about five million, representing a salable value of $12,500,000. That these are no fancy figures is demonstrated by the large and rapidly increasing sales at both Government and railroad land offices in that locality, and the vigorous stream of immigration that is pouring into the country now made accessible by the road. During the past year many thousands of people have settled along the line, and more than three thousand emigrants have passed over the road to find homes farther north, in the neighboring province of Manitoba.

During the year ending June 30, 1877, three hundred and thirty-seven thousand acres of Government land were taken within the limits of the grant by actual settlers, under the pre-emption, homestead, and tree-culture acts, representing an increased population of at least ten thousand on these lands alone. The Government sales for the current year have been very largely in excess of those for 1877. The register and receiver of the United States land office at Fargo report that the Government land entered at their office alone, under the tree-culture, homestead, and pre-emption acts, during the first twelve days of this month, amounted to forty-three thousand acres. There are three other United States land offices on the line of the road in Minnesota and Dakota. Over thirty-five hundred acres entered per day, for occupation and improvement, at a single office, will convey some idea of the demand for homes in that favored locality. I have no doubt that at least twenty thousand will be added to the population occupying Government lands, within the limits of the grant in Minnesota and Dakota by the close of the present fiscal year.

The sale of railroad lands within the said limits during the six months ending November 30, 1877, foots up 365,634 acres, much of which is for immediate occupation and improvement. The tide of immigration pouring into that country has swollen wonderfully since November, and I have no doubt as much land has been sold by the company during the last ninety days as during the preceding six months.

On the rich agricultural slope west of the Rocky Mountains, a similar demand for lands has recently sprung up in anticipation of the early construction of the road. The president of the company informs me that they have received, this spring, over a thousand applications for a quarter section each, from persons proposing to settle on the lands between Pend d'Oreille Lake and the Columbia River. This would represent some five thousand people, and one hundred and sixty thousand acres of land.

Here again the construction of the road would at once render available for sale or improvement some five million acres of Government lands on this section of two hundred miles, which at $2.50 per acre amounts to an increased value of $12,500,000.

The growth and development already attained along the line is indicated by the rapidly increasing earnings of the road upon a given number of miles. The Minnesota and Dakota divisions, four hundred and fifty miles in length, show the following gross earnings:

For the year ending September 30, 1875.....	$570,920 84
For the year ending September 30, 1876.....	839,910 89
For the year ending September 30, 1877.....	1,008,808 64

These earnings were not made, Mr. President, by high charges imposed upon the products of the country. The Northern Pacific Company have always acted upon the theory that through the development of the country, and thereby an increased volume of business, would be realized their greatest profits, and hence their charges have been moderate. Their freight tariff last year, from the Red River to Duluth, two hundred and fifty miles, was only twelve cents per bushel, or only about one and three-quarter cents per ton per mile. The local charges on most of the eastern roads traversing densely populated districts are greater than this. Even in England railways doing the largest business, impose heavier tariffs than are charged by the Northern Pacific through its sparsely peopled regions. I am informed by the president of the company, that these tariffs are to be reduced this year from 15 to 20 per cent. below those of 1877. In this regard, as well as in many others, the company commends itself to congressional favor.

As a further illustration of the progress of this northern country, I may refer to the rapid and healthy growth of some of its business centers. The sister towns of Moorhead and Fargo, on opposite sides of the Red River, are good illustrations. Five years ago I camped on the site now occupied by them. Then, untouched by the hand of civilization, they were merely boundless, beautiful, virgin prairies, with a small skirting of timber on either bank of the river. Now they have a population of about two thousand, with a constantly accelerating progress, and are already in the full enjoyment of churches, schools, and every other advantage of Christian civilization and prosperity.

Two hundred miles west of Moorhead we find Bismarck, another active, enterprising young city, with a population of about two thousand souls. Five years ago this section of two hundred miles between Moorhead and Bismarck was the hunting-ground of the wild and savage Sioux Indian, from which were made his occasional bloody incursions into Minnesota. The magic transformation wrought by the construction of the railroad has driven out the Sioux, settled forever the Indian question over that wide sweep of country; introduced into the very heart of his hunting-grounds the remarkable farming operations of which I have spoken; pushed the borders of civilization two hundred miles further West, and planted upon its very verge an enterprising little city of two thousand people. Instead of incursions of bloody savages so recently dreaded from that country, we now have the loaded railway-cars, bearing the golden grain to the hungry millions of Europe and the East.

Being at the favorite point of departure for the Black Hills, and at the point of connection between the railroad and the upper waters of the Missouri, navigable in summer for a thousand miles to the Northwest, and actually occupied last season by a fleet of between thirty and forty steamboats, Bismarck seems destined to become one of the great cities of the North. It has been brought into being solely by the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Another commercial development on the Red River of the North, quite as remarkable as any I have mentioned, has resulted from the construction of the road. A very few years since, no water craft larger than an Indian canoe had ever vexed the waters of that stream, and the trade of Manitoba and the Red River Valley with the rest of the world, was carried on mainly by means of the creaking wooden cart, drawn by a single ox over a distance of five or six hundred miles to Saint Paul. Now, the Northern Pacific Railroad connects at Moorhead and Fargo with a line of steamers, seven in number, with thirteen barges, which transported in 1877 13,747 tons of freight and 9,579 passengers. Several additional steamers will be put on that river the present year.

Referring again to the commerce created on the Upper Missouri River, the statistics show that in 1876 there were only twelve or fourteen steamers in that trade. In 1877 these had increased to thirty-seven steamers. This year there will probably be fifty or more.

The commerce on the Yellowstone is also a creation of this road. Prior to 1876 it had scarcely been explored.

In 1877 nine steamers were on the Yellowstone, and it is now a regular river route of travel and commerce.

The new route to Deadwood known as the "Custer route" is another of the incidents of the Northern Pacific road. The stage line opened from Bismarck to Deadwood is only two hundred and three miles in length, and is now occupied by a daily line of four-horse covered mail-coaches, carrying a large number of passengers and making the trip in thirty-six hours. In addition to this, an immense wagon transportation is done over this line. These are the forerunners of the new line of railway soon to connect Bismarck and Deadwood, for which a bill has already passed the Senate.

In addition to these great results produced by the portion of road already completed, there are many other benefits to be anticipated from its completion, which commend it to the favorable consideration of Congress and the country. One of the most prominent of these will be its saving to the Treasury by the prevention of Indian wars. No such thorough and satisfactory mode of settling Indian troubles has ever been discovered as the construction of a railroad through the Indian country. The war-whoop of the savage is never heard within sound of the locomotive's whistle. The civilization that is represented by the church, the school-house, and the farm, he regards as his legitimate prey, but when it comes clothed with the thunder of the advancing railroad train he retires from the contest. In the locomotive he discovers his master, and with a kind of superstitious awe succumbs to its superior power. It was with a view to this that General Sherman wrote from "Cantonment on Tongue River, Montana," under date of July 17, 1871, to the Secretary of War:

I do not know a single enterprise in which the United States has more interest than in the extension of the Northern Pacific Railroad from its present terminus at Bismarck to the mouth of Powder River on the Yellowstone. After that is done we can safely leave to time the extension of that road to the head of navigation on the Columbia River.

Regarding this matter from a purely military stand-point, and after traveling over the Indian country and carefully studying all the instrumentalities by which peace may be maintained, the lives of our people be preserved, and the public treasures be saved, the General of your Army thus deliberately and forcibly expresses his confidence in the Northern Pacific Railroad as the great peace-maker and peace-preserver of the plains.

In 1866 General Grant gave a similar expression of opinion as to its value in this respect.

Quartermaster-General Meigs wrote of the Northern Pacific road:

The enterprise is one worthy of the nation. As a military measure contributing to national security and defense alone it is worthy the cost of effectual assistance by the Government.

All of our leading generals who have commanded in the Indian country agree as to its value as a peace measure.

The last annual report of the Northern Pacific Company puts this point so forcibly and so well, that I will venture to ask the indulgence of the Senate to quote from it the following extract:

If the Missouri and Yellowstone divisions of the Northern Pacific Railroad had been constructed three years ago, cutting the Indian country from the west bank of the Missouri River to the mouth of Shields River, a distance of only five hundred and forty-five miles, there would have been no wars with the Sioux. The road would have ended the deplorable loss of life and waste of money which have marked our endeavors to utilize that valuable region and make commercial and political connection with Montana Territory. The railroad would have notified the country and made the Army unnecessary on its entire line. It would have done for Northern Dakota and the Yellowstone Valley what the Union Pacific Road has done for the region between Missouri and Utah. The Northern Pacific would have done for the Sioux country west of the Missouri River what it has done for the region east of it. Before the construction of your road two hundred miles into Dakota predatory Indians roamed and hunted all over that distance from the river and made settlement impossible and the navigation of the Missouri perilous. The road in two years rescued two hundred miles' width of buffalo and Indian range and established wheat farms on it, from which food is now exported to Europe. It is certain that what is known as the Sioux Indian country cannot be permanently pacified except by a railroad. The region, as the breeding-nest of unceasing and costly wars, must be occupied by farms and towns. These cannot obtain even a foothold without the help of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Certainly it would be cheaper for the Government to hold the country between the Missouri and Shields Rivers by building the road at its own expense than to hold it, and yet not hold it, by military occupation in a line of forts, with the enormous cost of supplies by steamers and wagons.

Mr. President, I have briefly, and very inadequately sketched some of the grand and beneficent results, already achieved by the partial construction of this road. I have not attempted to estimate the future advantages and benefits to flow from its completion. That is a field which I would be delighted to enter, and, by analogy to similar enterprises elsewhere, draw conclusions as to what may be reasonably anticipated from this, but I will refrain. The facts I have given are merely the indications of what may be expected from its completion. Are they not enough to justify Congress in granting to the men whose money has produced these wonderful results, the right to live awhile longer in order that they may complete their great enterprise? Who will be benefited, and what interest will be subserved by a denial of this extension? Will the public domain be more valuable to the Government or the people without the road? No; that portion to be affected by it is practically worthless without this road. However rich its soil or favorable its climate, it will remain a wilderness forever, if no means be provided to transport its products to market. With the road, many millions of acres will be rendered available for sale and occupation, thus enriching the Government and furnishing homes for the people. Without it, these millions of acres will remain a silent waste. Certainly, then, the extension cannot be denied in the interest of the public domain.

Will the great mining interests of Dakota, Montana, and Idaho be best served by the defeat of this bill? No; the rock-guarded treasure-houses of these Territories only await the arrival of the Northern Pacific trains to open their doors and pour the wealth of their rich mines into the channels of trade and commerce.

Will the Treasury of the United States be better guarded by refusing this extension? No; this bill asks nothing from the Treasury, and those most competent to judge of its results say its construction will save many millions of dollars now annually thrown away upon useless and fruitless Indian wars. It will also save large sums for transportation of mails, and Indian and military supplies. The interests of the Treasury, therefore, demand the passage of the bill rather than its defeat.

Will its defeat promote the development of the great interior of the continent, and thereby increase the national wealth, and, by such increase, reduce taxation? This question answers itself. No one is insane enough to make such an argument.

Will the unemployed, homeless, hungry laborers of this country be benefited by its defeat? No, for the construction of the road will give employment to thousands of them; the now inaccessible lands that will be rendered available to settlement will furnish homes for millions of them; and the additional supply of food from the increased agricultural areas will make the means of living cheaper to all of them.

If none of these interests demands a vote against this bill, is there anything in the history, circumstances, or condition of the corporation asking this favor that will justify a denial on our part? Absolutely nothing, so far as I can learn. As I have already said, these men are not speculators. They do not come to us asking something for nothing. They have invested $30,000,000 in this work which we authorized and by our own act encouraged them to undertake. They now come to us saying: "We have honestly invested our money in a great and meritorious enterprise, which by reason of the financial condition of the country was unable to proceed, and we ask you to permit us to go on and complete it. You may enjoy all its incidental advantages in the development of your resources; in the enhanced value of your own lands; in the settlement and improvement of your vast unoccupied public domain; in exemption from the sacrifice of life and treasure by useless Indian wars; and in the large savings of Government transportation, and we will put in more money to save what we have already invested, and to make a legitimate profit on it if we can."

Shall we deny them this privilege? Shall we sacrifice all the great interests to be subserved by the completion of this road, to a supposed popular prejudice (which in fact does not exist) against land grants to railroads? If Senators will investigate this question there will not be a single vote against the proposed extension. Believing that there is not in the Senate a vote against it, I should like to have unanimous consent to put it on its passage.

Mr. MITCHELL. I appeal to the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR,] who made some objection this morning, whether he is not willing to allow the bill to proceed at this time.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, I was not aware until this morning that the Senator from Oregon had given notice that he would call this measure up so early. Not having been present in committee when the bill was last up for consideration and voted upon, I am not as sufficiently familiar with the conditions which have been ingrafted upon this extension as I wished to be before action. I shall not insist, however, upon my objection.

While I am on my feet I will state that as the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads in the other House, I had occasion to investigate this question as to the extension of the time for the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and I became satisfied that it was a measure demanded alike by justice, propriety, and policy. The parties who make application for this relief are tens of thousands of people living in twenty States of this Union who subscribed their means for the construction of this road. The disasters of 1873 and other causes produced a suspension of work. If there was any mismanagement these parties were the victims of that mismanagement and of its authors. I had some objection to loading this bill with other conditions than those which provide for a simple extension of relief; but as its provisions are acceptable to those who are considered best advised upon the subject I shall co-operate with them, and I trust there will be no opposition to the passage of the bill, as it is in my opinion, so meritorious and so slight is the objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. I trust there will be no objection to the request made by my colleague that this bill shall be put upon its passage. The matter has been sufficiently discussed now to inform the Senate fully upon the subject. It is a matter of great public and national importance, and it is desirable, if the measure is to pass, that it should be passed at an early day. I was not aware myself that it would be called up at this hour for passage; but certainly the Senate need wait no longer to act upon this measure, and I trust the Senate will pass the bill without objection.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to ask the Senator having charge of the bill what has become of the interests of the bondholders under the first mortgage, under which this road has been sold. I ought to say that in the State of New York I know, generally, (no one in particular has said anything to me about it,) that bonds to a very large amount issued by the original corporation were put off upon that community. As I understand, that mortgage has been foreclosed and the road bid in. What amount of money was it bid in for?

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] perhaps can answer those questions more fully than myself.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to get some information in reference to the rights of those people who are scattered all over the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is a satisfactory answer to the whole matter.

Mr. KERNAN. I shall be very glad to hear it.

Mr. WINDOM. In answer to the Senator from New York, I will state that the total amount of bonds sold was between $29,000,000 and $30,000,000. The bondholders representing the majority of those bonds met in New York and decided to foreclose the mortgage. It was foreclosed and the road bid in for the benefit of the bondholders by trustees. Since the sale the holders of $26,660,000 of those bonds have exchanged them for preferred stock of the road; so that of the $29,000,000 only a little over $2,000,000 and probably not that amount, now of bonds are outstanding. I am informed by the company that no one of the bondholders has ever objected to the arrangement by which their bonds were converted into preferred stock. That is still open and will remain open to any bondholder who desires to avail himself of the opportunity to exchange.

Mr. KERNAN. For how long a time have the remaining bondholders the right to come in and take preferred stock?

Mr. WINDOM. Indefinitely, as the Committee on Railroads are informed. It will remain open so long as they desire it; at least this is the present understanding.

Mr. KERNAN. Is the property now held by trustees, or have they conveyed it to a new corporation?

Mr. WINDOM. They have conveyed it to the new corporation elected by the new stockholders.

Mr. KERNAN. Organized under an act of Congress or under some other law?

Mr. WINDOM. Organized under the act of Congress; that is, under the original act, as they claim, and as the best counsel that could be procured in the country advised them was legal.

Mr. KERNAN. Is the Senator able to state anything as to what is the value of this preferred stock, or has it any market value?

Mr. WINDOM. I made inquiry of that a few days ago, and I think the answer was about seventeen or eighteen cents on the dollar. The preferred stock, however, is larger than the bonds. I think it amounts to nearly $50,000,000 in all. When the foreclosure was made and the bonds were converted into stock, stock was issued for 40 per cent. more than the bonds, in order to pay the interest in advance for five years. It included the interest on the bonds at 8 per cent., as they drew, for five years. The stock was issued for the face of the bonds and 8 per cent. interest for five years, so that the road is entirely unincumbered and is now prepared, if the extension be made, to go on without a mortgage or a debt of any kind, and has money to complete it, as they think.

Mr. KERNAN. As I understand, they gave the old bondholders stock to the face of their bonds and for 8 per cent. upon that sum.

Mr. WINDOM. Eight per cent. interest for five years, making 40 per cent. in addition. To illustrate: if a constituent of the Senator had a thousand-dollar bond, he would get $1,400 of preferred stock, which paid his interest five years in advance.

Mr. KERNAN. As I understand, then, the bondholders who come in under this bill get everything that was sold belonging to the road?

Mr. WINDOM. They own everything that is owned by the road.
Mr. KERNAN. They have the preferred stock for the amount you named?

Mr. WINDOM. They have the preferred stock for the amount I named; $26,660,000 of the bonds have been exchanged for stock on the basis named a moment ago.

Mr. KERNAN. Is there anything given to the original stockholders, or is their stock wiped out?

Mr. WINDOM. The original stockholders have some general stock that comes in after the preferred stock is paid 8 per cent. When it pays an 8 per cent. dividend they may some time or other have a chance to get something, but their chance is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. KERNAN. Please state how much more stock there is than this preferred stock. What is the amount of stock in addition to the preferred stock, the subsequent stock?

Mr. WINDOM. I am not able to state that exactly.

Mr. KERNAN. This stock has preference to the amount of 8 per cent. upon it?

Mr. WINDOM. It has the preference. Common stock cannot vote and can receive no dividend until this $50,000,000 of preferred stock receives a dividend of 8 per cent.; and then whatever amount is back—I do not remember the amount—is entitled to some consideration. The fact is that under this transfer the bondholders, the men who paid in their money, have everything that belonged to the original company.

Mr. KERNAN. I suppose the common stock of the old road never was paid for to any considerable amount.

Mr. WINDOM. I think not.

Mr. EATON. I hope this bill will not be pressed to-day. There are certain things about it that I confess I do not understand, if all the rest of the Senate understand it. My attention was directed to this bill this morning for the first time. I cannot to-day vote for it. Therefore I object to proceeding with this bill, if an objection is necessary to put a stop to it.

Mr. WINDOM. If there are any points about this bill upon which the Senator would like to cross-examine those of us who have studied it, I think we shall be able to satisfy him not only that it is very important, but that, if it is passed at all, it should pass early. If it is necessary to make a motion, that course can be taken, and the Senator from Oregon, I believe, is about to submit a motion to test the sense of the Senate as to whether the bill shall be acted upon now. I hope we may have a vote upon proceeding with the bill.

Mr. EATON. I do not desire to cross-examine my friend from Minnesota; but there are certain matters in the bill that look to me exceedingly imperfect. I do not know quite why it should be rushed through here to-day. When it was taken up this morning for consideration it was simply to enable my friend from Oregon to submit some remarks upon it in the way of discussion, and not to press it to a vote.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not understand that.

Mr. EATON. I did so understand; or otherwise I think objection would have been made to the bill being taken up this morning.

Mr. WINDOM. (to Mr. MITCHELL.) Did you make any such statement?

Mr. MITCHELL. There was some objection made by the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] at the time the matter was called up, or he intimated that he might desire that the bill should go over until to-morrow after certain remarks submitted by the honorable Senator from Minnesota and myself. But inasmuch as the Senator from Mississippi, on an appeal made to him a few moments ago, signified his willingness to allow the matter to proceed, I felt disposed to insist on proceeding with the consideration of the bill at this time. I will state that it is very important that there should be speedy action on the bill if the hope is to be entertained that it will receive the action of the other House at the present session. If there is anything about the bill upon which the Senator from Connecticut would desire information, perhaps if he will indicate what it is we may be able to satisfy him. I would appeal to the honorable Senator from Connecticut, unless there is some very urgent necessity for a postponement of the matter, that he permit the bill to be proceeded with at this time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It will be recollected by the Senator from Oregon that I made an inquiry this morning whether the regular order, which is the Calendar, would not come up at the expiration of the morning hour. The Senator said it would, but he hoped that no one would interfere with himself and the Senator from Minnesota if the Senator from Minnesota wished to speak to-day. I think it was very well understood this morning that after the two speeches were made we should return to the Calendar. I think the Senate will bear me out in that assertion.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is true; but in order to test the sense of the Senate upon this matter I will move to proceed with the bill. I understand that the pending order, if called for, would be the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) That would be the regular order, if called for.

Mr. MITCHELL. I then move, in order to test the sense of the Senate, that the present order and all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Northern Pacific Railroad bill; and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAWES. I think, as the Senator from Connecticut desires to examine the bill further, it would not be good policy to press it to a vote now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope we shall have no formal vote upon this subject, but that the Calendar may be laid aside informally if it be laid aside at all, because if it is laid aside by a formal motion it will not come up to-morrow.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon, that if the Senator from Connecticut and others desire to look into the bill and ask that it may not be put upon its passage now, it is not an unreasonable suggestion.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it is insisted by the Senator from Connecticut that he would like to look at this matter further and we can have an understanding that the bill shall be taken up to-morrow morning and disposed of, I shall be glad to accommodate the Senator.

Mr. EATON. It is not an accommodation to me, Mr. President. I have not read this bill; I have not seen it until to-day. Perhaps it may be my fault or misfortune. But I discover here that under certain circumstances a road must be "completed eastward on the Pacific slope as aforesaid," and that they shall also, "within two years from the passage of this act, construct and equip their said railroad around the portage at the Lower Cascades of the Columbia River." On what territory is that? Does that land belong to Oregon or the United States? Are we legislating here to build a railroad within two years around certain cascades in the State of Oregon? Is it so? I do not know that it is. It has been suggested to me that it is. Therefore it is important before I vote upon the bill that I should have the opportunity of looking into it; that is, before I vote favorably upon it.

Mr. MITCHELL. As I said, if the Senator from Connecticut desires to look into the bill, as a matter of course it is nothing more than common courtesy that he should have that opportunity; but in connection with the proposition to permit the bill to go over until to-morrow I should like to have an understanding, if we can, that the matter be proceeded with to-morrow.

Mr. EATON. I cannot make any agreement that this matter shall be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am making an appeal to the Senate generally.

Mr. WINDOM. In view of the request made by several Senators, I think it would be well to postpone the bill until to-morrow, and I shall be exceedingly gratified if the Senate will take it up then, without asking any bargain about it. Of course I do not expect that, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, but it is very important that the bill should be passed early, if at all. I, for one, am willing to consent that it go over until to-morrow in order that Senators desirous of doing so may look into it and suggest any amendment that they think desirable, but I shall want to appeal to the Senate to-morrow to let us consider it and pass upon it, if possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. The matter goes over to-day. I give notice that to-morrow morning after the regular morning business, or as soon as I can get the floor, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon withdraws his motion to take up the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for and the consideration of the Calendar will be resumed at the point where the Senate left off when the consideration of the Calendar was last before it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4055) to create a revenue in the District of Columbia by levying a tax upon all dogs therein, to make such dogs personal property, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year;

A bill (H. R. No. 4413) to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for encouragement of the arts or sciences, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4416) referring the claim of the legal representatives of Captain John G. Todd, of Texas, to the Court of Claims;

A bill (H. R. No. 4420) for the relief of Horace E. Mullan;

A bill (H. R. No. 4422) to amend section 4695 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4425) to alter and amend a law of the District of Columbia relative to the inspection of flour;

A bill (H. R. No. 4426) relative to the Washington Market Company;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) authorizing Lieutenant T. B. M. Mason, United States Navy, to accept a medal conferred by the King of Italy for extinguishing a fire on a powder-ship; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Bushrod B. Taylor.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3739) to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 931) granting a pension to James Shields, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 120) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the Canadian-built propeller East by the name of Kent;

A bill (S. No. 870) granting a pension to Rebecca and Augusta Miller, daughters of Brigadier-General James Miller, of the war of 1812; and

A bill (S. No. 1045) to provide for the administration of the oath of office to collectors and other officers of the customs in the district of Alaska.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN EDWARDS LEONARD.

The message also communicated to the Senate a copy of the proceedings had in the House of Representatives in reference to the death of Hon. John Edwards Leonard, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 535) for the relief of the executors of the estate of John S. Miller, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 1411) to prevent the sale of policy or lottery tickets in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 1432) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3739) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4242) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain.

PATRICK SULLIVAN.

The bill (S. No. 455) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan, was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the sum of $1,500 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Patrick Sullivan, late corporal of the Eighty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, Company K, for expenses paid by him as a commissioned first lieutenant in the Nineteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, in recruiting, subsisting, and transporting recruits for said regiment in the months of January and February, 1862; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, or cause to be paid, the said amount of $1,500 to said Patrick Sullivan, in full settlement thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR D. C. SMITH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 800) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It relieves the heirs and bondsmen of Major D. C. Smith, late assistant paymaster United States Army, from the payment of $166.29, and the interest thereon, as appears due upon settlement of his accounts.

Mr. HARRIS. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) There is a report. Is the reading of the report called for?

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to hear the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BURNSIDE, March 12:

The passage of the accompanying bill for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith was recommended by this committee and the Military Committee of the House of the Forty-fourth Congress, in consonance with the favorable reports of General COCKRELL, and Mr. MacDougall, of the House committee.

Copies of these reports are attached and made part of this report. I concur, and recommend that a favorable report be again made by this committee.

In the Senate of the United States, March 13, 1876.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. No. 548: The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 548) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

Major D. C. Smith was a paymaster in the United States Army; was a gallant, efficient, and meritorious officer. On October 27, 1864, Major D. C. Smith, in company with several other paymasters, left Memphis, Tennessee, on board the steamer Belle of Saint Louis, for Saint Louis. At Randolph, Tennessee, the steamer started to land, and was boarded by some eight or ten guerrillas, while others from the shore began firing into the steamer. The guerrillas on board undertook to force the engineer and officers of the boat to land.

Majors Buler and D. C. Smith took their revolvers and approached the guerrillas on board and began to fire and were fired upon, and Major Smith was mortally wounded and died; Major Buler was also mortally wounded. Their gallant conduct enabled the steamer to be saved, and thus the Government property on board the steamer was also saved.

Paymaster-General Alvord reports the accounts of Major D. C. Smith as follows, to wit:

His final accounts show that at the date of his death he was indebted to the United States..... $284 64
From over-additions in his accounts..... 50 00

He is entitled to credit for pay from October 1 to 28, 1864..... 140 65

For short additions..... 21 50

$334 64

168 33

166 29

Leaving balance due the United States..... 166 29

I inclose a copy of his chief paymaster's report, showing the very gallant manner in which he met his death defending the property of the United States. I therefore most cheerfully recommend the passage of this bill as amended, as I consider it a very just and meritorious one.

The amendment suggested is to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty," so that the bill as amended will read, "one hundred and sixty-six dollars and twenty-nine cents," instead of one hundred and sixty-six dollars and thirty-nine cents.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the amendment suggested.

[Forty-fourth Congress, first session, House report No. 735.]

Mr. MacDougall, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report, (to accompany bill S. No. 548):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 548, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

Major D. C. Smith was killed by guerrillas on board the steamer Belle, on the Mississippi River, on the night of October 27, 1864, while gallantly defending the property of the United States in his charge. Had he lived and had the settlement of his own accounts, it is clear that he would have been allowed the amount claimed in the accompanying bill. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. This case was before the Senate at the last session, was fully considered, and the bill passed the Senate, and was only prevented from passing the other House because it was not reached upon the Calendar, as I understand from information received in regard to it. The bill was again introduced at the present session. I know the parties concerned in it, and it is certainly unobjectionable.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN A. TORRENCE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 612) for the relief of John A. Torrence; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is, authorized and directed to pay to John A. Torrence, late receiver of public moneys at the land office at Harrison, Arkansas, the sum of $452.95, the same being due him, as receiver, from the United States, and that $164.55 of the above sum be applied by the United States Treasury to the settlement of the balance against him as disbursing agent.

Mr. GARLAND. There is a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office which, if desired, the Secretary will read, and which explains the bill in a few words. The bill is simply for the purpose of settling the accounts of a receiver who also acted in the capacity of a disbursing agent. The matter is succinctly and pointedly stated in the letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The Commissioner recommends the payment in a different way from that prescribed by the original bill; and upon his recommendation the amendment reported by the committee is based.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported from the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF FLORIDA HOMESTEAD LANDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 350) to amend section 2288 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to enable citizens of the State of Florida to transfer a portion of their pre-emptions or homesteads to aid in the construction of railroads; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any person who has already settled, or who may hereafter settle on the public lands in the State of Florida, either by pre-emption or by virtue of the homestead law, or any amendments thereto, shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his or her own acts, any portion of his or her pre-emption or homestead to aid in the construction of railroads in that State; and the transfer for such purpose shall not vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment to add the following proviso:

Provided, That any transfer of land under this act shall be void unless the railroad in aid of which the same is made is constructed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. This appears to be rather a peculiar bill. The provisions of it seem to be antagonistic to the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States, and I should like to hear some explanation of it before I am called upon to vote for the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will state in reply to the Senator's inquiry that a very large portion of the people in the eastern part of Florida are without means of communication. They are endeavoring to build one or two narrow-gauge railroads. They do not ask for any very large subsidies from the Government, but they think that by being permitted to donate a portion of their homestead entries they may be able to get communication with market. I will call the Senate's attention to the section of the Revised Statutes which this bill proposes to amend. It is in the following words:

SEC. 2288. Any person who has already settled or hereafter may settle on the public lands, either by pre-emption, or by virtue of the homestead law or any amendment thereto, shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his pre-emption or homestead for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads across such pre-emption or homestead, and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads.

A very strong and extensively signed petition was left with me by people of the eastern part of Florida asking for this bill. Of course the whole matter is left with the homestead settler. There is nothing in this bill that compels him to part with his right. If he feels disposed to give away a few acres of his homestead for the purpose of securing transportation for the products that he may cultivate upon the remainder, I can see no rational objection to it; and if the railroad should be built it would go to increase the value of the remaining lands, those belonging to the Government as well as those belonging to individuals.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Florida why it is necessary to "amend section 2288 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to enable citizens of Florida to transfer a portion of their homesteads or pre-emptions to aid in the construction of railroads." Why not let that section stand as a general law? This bill would be just as effective by changing the title.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not object to that.

Mr. SARGENT. The body of the bill does not seem to affect that section at all. The object seems to be to extend it. By amending the section you prevent its beneficial operation hereafter.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida a question. If the homestead settler takes advantage of the provisions of this bill in the event that it becomes a law, transfers his homestead to a railroad company, will he or will he not have a right after that to make another homestead entry?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think not.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I presume he would not under the general law.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 34, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allison,	Dorsey,	Kernan,	Morgan,
Bailey,	Eaton,	Lamar,	Oglesby,
Bayard,	Garland,	McDonald,	Paddock,
Beck,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Plumb,
Butler,	Grover,	McPherson,	Sargent,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Matthews,	Teller,
Chaffee,	Hereford,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Merrimon,
Davis of W. Va.,	Kellogg,	Mitchell,

NAYS—6.

Cookling,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Rollins.
Dawes,	McCreery,

ABSENT—36.

Anthony,	Cockrell,	Howe,	Saunders,
Armstrong,	Conover,	Ingalls,	Sharon,
Barnum,	Davis of Illinois,	Johnston,	Spencer,

Burnside,	Hamlin,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill,	Ransom,	Windom,
Christianity,	Hoar,	Sanlbury,	Withers.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to amend the title so as to make it read:

A bill to enable citizens of the State of Florida to transfer a portion of their pre-emptions or homesteads to aid in the construction of railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment by making the title read, "A bill to grant public lands through the medium of a homestead entry to railroads in Florida," which is the true character of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. That is not the object of the bill. If the Senator will look at the section of the Revised Statutes proposed to be amended he will see that the same objection could be made to that provision of the Revised Statutes which provides for doing other things, not granting the land it is true, but granting the right of way to railroads. Now I have received, as I said a while ago before the Senator came into the Senate Chamber, petitions from a large number of people in my State asking for this bill. They say they are remote from a market; they are without transportation; they cannot get their little crops to market; they want to try to build a little narrow-gauge railroad, and they think that by being permitted to donate a portion of their homestead and pre-emption entries for that purpose they can secure transportation for their products. That is the object of the bill. If the road is built the remaining portion of the public land lying along its borders belonging to the Government will be enhanced in value, as the Senator knows, and will according to the laws be worth $2.50 an acre whereas it is now not worth $1.25.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Florida a single question?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to know whether a crowd of settlers might not be induced to go and make entry as settlers and in five minutes afterward transfer a good and sufficient title to any railroad that may be proposed to be built, without coming as settlers but merely having declared their intention—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What would that be worth, let me ask the Senator?

Mr. MORRILL. The railroad would get the title.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The settler would have to comply with the provisions of the homestead law; he would have to cultivate the land and remain upon it during the time required by the law in order to perfect his title.

Mr. MORRILL. As I read the bill, the only condition afterward would be that the road should be built. It would not require the settler to remain upon the land at all.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Oh, yes. That is not my construction of the law, I will state very candidly. I do not think anybody else can give it that construction.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator from Florida to state—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The object of the bill is to make an effectual donation of the land after every condition of the homestead law is complied with, after it has become the party's property.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator from Florida to state how long this road is and how much land is involved.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I cannot state precisely the length of the road. According to my information it is a local road in Eastern Florida. The people of that part of the State are greatly in need of transportation.

Mr. PADDOCK. Is it ten miles or twenty miles long? About what length?

Mr. DAWES. I voted against this bill, and perhaps the Senator from Florida may relieve me of the objection. I should like to ask him if what he has just stated is true that it is to make a donation of land after every condition of the law is complied with, what is the need of any statute to enable a homesteader to donate land after he has complied with every condition of the homestead law?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. He is not able to do it in advance of obtaining title. It is a mere pledge of the parties "that we will give ten or fifteen or twenty acres of our entry to this enterprise when the road is completed and we have complied with the requirements of the law." It is binding only upon the individuals, not binding on the Government.

Mr. DAWES. It estops the party by means of his promise in advance. Is he required personally to occupy the land during the years necessary to perfect a homestead entry, or may not his assignee do that?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Most assuredly he is required to occupy the land. There is nothing waived.

Mr. DAWES. My objection was this: I inferred from hearing the bill read that a man could make his entry as suggested by the Senator from Vermont and the railroad complete the right by occupying the land.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No, sir.

Mr. DAWES. If he has got to complete it by his own personal occupation and the title is obtained by the railroad through the means of his warranty of land to which he has not present title but which title he will perfect hereafter and that will inure to the benefit of the railroad, there is less objection to it than I supposed when I voted against the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will say very frankly that that is the object of the bill as far as I am concerned, and the citizens who are interested in its passage seek nothing more.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I cannot question for a single moment that the object of the bill is what the Senator from Florida says it is. The object of the bill is one thing, but the bill itself may be quite another. The bill says just this:

That any person who has already settled or who may hereafter settle on the public lands in the State of Florida, either by pre-emption or by virtue of the homestead law or any amendments thereto, shall have the right to transfer by warranty against his or her own acts—

That is by a warranty against any claimant claiming under them—any portion of his or her pre-emption or homestead—

That is any portion of the land—

to aid in the construction of railroads in said State; and the transfer for such purpose shall not vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads—

That is the part that they do not transfer—

Provided, That any transfer of land under this act shall be void unless the railroad in aid of which the same is made is constructed.

What that means, to the unsophisticated eye of a mere ordinary lawyer or anybody who reads the statutes, to my mind, is simply this: that if I being a citizen of the United States make a homestead entry on the public lands in Florida to-day for one hundred and sixty acres, or whatever the quantity may be that I am authorized to enter, I may to-morrow transfer that land to the Jacksonville and Key West Railroad Company, and having so transferred it nobody claiming under me or in my right can oust the railroad; that is, I warrant it against anybody claiming under my right. The railroad under the authority of this act becomes the proprietor of this land absolutely, provided the railroad line is built, if the amendment reported and agreed to is carried out.

That is what, in my opinion, is the plain construction of this act, reading it not in the light of what my honorable friend says the object of it is, but in the single light of the existing statutes which provide that a man may make a homestead entry, and if he lives on the land and cultivates it for five years it shall be his absolutely and he may have a patent. Now comes in this act and says that anybody who has settled, that is, has started a homestead claim upon the public lands, may transfer any portion of his claim, his settlement, any part of the land—which would include the whole of it because the whole includes every part—or any future homestead settler, anybody who shall settle may immediately turn over his homestead claim, the section or the quarter section or whatever it may be that he claims, he may turn over to a railroad absolutely, with a warranty against his own conduct and acts; and what then? That it shall not be good unless the railroad is built. That, in my humble judgment—I may be wrong—will be held by the courts, and ought to be held by the courts and by the Departments, as the assent of Congress that anybody who has located a homestead entry or chooses to do so upon any of the public lands, may turn those lands over to a railroad corporation in the State of Florida and the railroad company shall own the land if they build the road. The idea of putting by intention upon this bill the notion that after the settler has transferred his right to a railroad company it is the duty of the settler still, instead of letting the railroad have the land, to go on and occupy it for the five years, is in my opinion in the neighborhood of absurd.

There is the plain statement of the law, what we assent to, which is the latest expression, and that is that anybody who has started a homestead claim may turn the land which is the subject of it over to a railroad corporation to aid in the building of its road; and the only ground upon which the company is to be deprived of that land, if it builds the road, is that if it does not build the road then the railroad company shall not get any title. It is the ordinary land grant. That is what it amounts to, except that it is to be started by the railroad laborers, if you please, they being citizens of the United States or having declared their intention to become such, going to the land office and entering on the line the railroad wants to go, or near it, making a homestead entry, assigning that the next moment to the railroad company; and then, if I correctly understand this act, the railroad company has acquired an indefeasible title to that land, subject only to the contingency that it must build the road. As such I would rather vote for a railroad land grant square out, which we have all promised not to do.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Now, if the Senator will allow me one moment, I will show him that the language of this bill is not new. Anxious to accomplish the object which I stated to the Senate was the purpose of this bill, I adopted the very language to be found in section 2288 of the Revised Statutes, and I do not think that anything which the Senator has said will apply to that section of the Revised Statutes. I do not think, for instance, that a church which might receive a donation under the provisions of this section could be put in the predicament in which he says a railroad company may be put by the provisions of my bill. I disclaim entirely the purpose attributed to me. Section 2288 of the Revised Statutes says:

Any person who has already settled or hereafter may settle on the public lands, either by pre-emption, or by virtue of the homestead law or any amendments thereto, shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his pre-emption or homestead for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads across such pre-emption or homestead, and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads.

This section contemplates in my judgment nothing but the transfer of an inchoate right. The Government is not bound by it at all. It is the act of the individual; and unless he goes on and complies with every condition of the homestead law as it now stands, anything that he might do under my bill would be ineffectual. That is my view of it. That is my purpose. That is the purpose of the men who seek the passage of this bill now. In order to guard that more sufficiently the committee thought proper to interpose the proviso which has been added to the bill and which states that, unless the railroad is completed, even the inchoate right which is attempted to be transferred by the bill shall not be effective against the party transferring it or against the Government. This does not bind the Government. It only enables the settler in advance of the time fixed by law for perfecting his title to the land under the homestead law to make what may be called an inchoate assignment of a portion of his land, leaving the title to depend upon his compliance with the provisions of the general law. That is my understanding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, reading section 2288, that my honorable friend has referred to, I find that it states this:

Any person who has already settled or hereafter may settle on the public lands, either by pre-emption, or by virtue of the homestead law or any amendments thereto, shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his pre-emption or homestead for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads across such pre-emption or homestead, and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads.

Now, what is the spirit and object and scope of that section? It is that these homestead and pre-emption settlers may give away for these necessary public purposes of society, a grave-yard or a school-house or a church site, as part of their homestead entries, and the church and the grave-yard and the school-house may be put upon that public land, and that that giving away of a part shall not interfere with his right to complete his title to the residue by the five years' occupation. That was the object and spirit, and a very wholesome one, of the act; but when you come to railroads it is merely a right of way across the land.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask the Senator if the statute says "the residue?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. In my opinion upon any just construction it does. It says it—

Shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads.

If they have already conveyed by a complete assignment their own title to a part, what is it that they are to complete the title to? It must be to the residue, as a matter of course, because they have no title to the part they have conveyed away by warranty against themselves. As I stated, it must be obvious if you reflect a moment, that the scope and the object of that section was to allow the public lands to be finally disposed of where there had been a homestead entry, for these little necessary public purposes of a grave-yard and a church and a school-house, or a right of way of a railroad to go across, and so far as being given away for those purposes the gift was complete as against the United States and everybody else. As to what was not given away, it should not affect the right of the settler to complete his title.

Now, then, this act comes in. It has passed, and there is nothing more to be said about it except to give it the true ear-mark. Now this act comes in and says a settler may give away his homestead entry in aid of building a railroad, any part of it, which of course includes the whole as the whole includes every part. That is what it is and what in point of law in my humble judgment—I may be wrong—it comes to; and there is very little use perhaps in my discussing that question with my honorable friend. The bill has passed; he has got his land grant; and I will withdraw my amendment, but my statement will explain my view in voting against the bill. I do not care what the title is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.]

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to say just one word in reference to this bill. It was considered by the Committee on Public Lands, and all the questions which have been discussed here were considered there; and it was not our opinion, and it is not mine now, that this bill gives any title or right to these railroad companies to this property unless the pre-emptor or the homestead settler shall fully complete what is required by law and obtain his patent from the United States. Until that time the title to the property remains in the United States. The provision of law requires that these parties shall acquire no title by going upon the public domain, but only in the case of a pre-emptor by proving up his pre-emption claim within the time limited by law and paying the purchase-money, and in the case of the homestead settler by occupying and improving the land for the time prescribed by the law. It was not our understanding, nor is it mine now, that this bill confers any title whatever or any right on the railroad companies in respect to this land that is not subject to the title and claim of the United States, or ever becomes perfect in them until the parties from whom they hold these donations have acquired title in the manner prescribed by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the modification of the title of the bill as proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] is agreed to.

The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

T. AND J. W. GAFF & CO.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like the Senate to pass over the intervening orders down to order No. 331, being House bill No. 2818. It is a very small matter and it will take but a moment to consider it. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Can we not reach it in a short time?

Mr. McDONALD. Perhaps not for some days. It is a measure that I know will commend itself to the Senate as soon as they understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks the Senate to pass over the intervening orders to take up the bill referred to by him. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLAN. Is it intended to pursue the Calendar from the number indicated by the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McDONALD. No, sir; I simply ask for the present consideration of this order, not to interfere with the regular order as to the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will it require any considerable length of time?

Mr. McDONALD. No, sir; it will require but a moment to consider it. It is simply to authorize certain parties to use for a warehouse a building designated in the act under the circumstances stated in the act.

Mr. ANTHONY. That will be reached in its order.

Mr. McDONALD. Not to-day.

Mr. ANTHONY. It had better be reached in its order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill proposed by the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McDONALD. There is no objection I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2818) to authorize T. and J. W. Gaff & Co. to use a certain building in the city of Aurora, Indiana, for the rectification of distilled spirits.

Mr. McDONALD. I will state that under the present law such a building must be six hundred feet in a direct line from the distillery. This is about five hundred and fifty feet in a direct line, but some seven hundred feet by the nearest road that can be taken to it. It stands on one side of a block and the distillery on the other side of the block, and the intervening houses prevent the possibility of their connecting their rectifier with their distillery except by going around through the street, which is some seven hundred feet, more than one hundred feet greater distance than that which the law now requires. The construction that has been put upon the law, in fact the act itself, requires that the distance shall be six hundred feet. This lacks fifty feet of that distance in actual measurement, but is more than one hundred feet over the distance by the only route they can use.

Mr. DAWES. Is it a building erected by them for the purpose?

Mr. McDONALD. It was erected before this law.

Mr. DAWES. Erected for that purpose before the law?

Mr. McDONALD. It was; yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. It was designed for this purpose before the law was enacted making the distance six hundred feet.

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill was fully considered by the Committee on Finance, and the request on the part of these parties was thought to be no more than reasonable, and one that would not result in any injury to the Government interests.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARL JUSSSEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now resume the consideration of bills on the Calendar in their order.

The bill (S. No. 902) for the relief of Carl Jussen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Paymaster-General of the Army to allow and pay to Carl Jussen, late adjutant of the Twenty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, out of the appropriation for the pay of the Army, the difference between the pay and allowances of sergeant-major of infantry and those of adjutant of infantry, from the 3d of August, 1863, to the 12th of December, 1863, inclusive, he having actually acted in the capacity of adjutant during that time and having received therefor only the pay of sergeant-major, not having been actually mustered as adjutant by reason of the non-receipt of his commission.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BURN-
SIDE on the 12th of March:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Carl Jussen, late adjutant Twenty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

It appears from the following report, prepared during the last Congress by the present chairman of the committee, to whose examination a bill for the relief of the applicant had been submitted, that a favorable report should be made, and the committee hereby recommend that that report stand as the report of the present committee:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 798) for the relief of Carl Jussen, late adjutant Twenty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

"This is a bill to pay Carl Jussen, late adjutant Twenty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, the difference of pay between that of sergeant-major of infantry and adjutant of infantry from August 3, 1863, to December 12, 1863, which was disallowed by the accounting officers of the Government upon the ground that department regulations forbid the recognition of any person as a commissioned officer prior to the date he receives his commission and enters upon duty with his command.

"The record shows that Jussen enlisted as a private in the Twenty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, August 14, 1862, was made sergeant-major of said regiment, and on August 2, 1863, the position of adjutant became vacant. Thereupon he was detailed to perform the duties of adjutant, entered upon the same, and was recommended to the governor of Wisconsin for commission therefor by the colonel of his regiment. The then governor of Wisconsin, His Excellency Edward Salomon, commissioned said Jussen in due form as first lieutenant and adjutant of said regiment, to date from August 2, 1863; but, being in the field, the receipt of the commission was delayed until December 12, 1863, when he was mustered as such at Algiers, Louisiana, December 19, 1863.

"During the period between August 3 and December 12, 1863, the said Jussen performed all the duties and incurred all the responsibilities of the position of first lieutenant and adjutant, was subjected to the incidental expenses of his rank and held accountable for property and duty in accordance therewith. Under various precedents established by Congress, notably the report of Senator Abbott on bill S. No. 527, for the relief of William F. Scott, Forty-first Congress, second session, Report No. 54, it has been held that an officer so promoted, performing the duties and incurring the responsibilities of his advanced rank, is entitled to pay therefor when so performed in the field, without being compelled to suffer loss for the time necessarily consumed in sending for and receiving back his commission from the governor of his State, to the end that he may be duly mustered.

"This case certainly comes within the rule. Jussen was recommended by his colonel for promotion from the rank of sergeant-major to that of first lieutenant and adjutant to fill a vacancy, and entered at once upon the discharge of his duties as such. It was the duty of the colonel of the regiment to fill the vacancy, and in this manner. So soon as the governor of Wisconsin could be notified from the remote field of military operations he issued his commission to Jussen, to date from August 2, 1863, the date on which the vacancy occurred and when Jussen entered upon the discharge of his duties under orders from his colonel. The delays incident to the proceeding prevented Jussen's muster until the commission was received, and for the time between his assumption of the duties of adjutant to fill said vacancy and the date of the reception of his commission he asks the difference of pay between that of sergeant-major and first lieutenant and adjutant. The principle involved in the act of July 28, 1866, also covers this case. Your committee, therefore, are of opinion that the claim is meritorious, and recommend the passage of the bill."

It appears from the above that Jussen actually performed the duties of adjutant from August 3, 1863, to the 12th of December of the same year. His commission from the governor covers the same period. There was an actual vacancy when he was appointed. He only received pay as sergeant-major for the period above mentioned.

Mr. MORRILL. I think this bill is faulty in one respect. It ought to mention the amount. Then if there is any member of the Committee on Military Affairs present, I should like to inquire whether there will not be numerous cases of other officers, having discharged the duties of a rank superior to the one that they had a commission for, being presented here for the difference between the pay of one commission and the other. It strikes me that the principle of allowing men to receive pay before they have received their commissions is perhaps a precedent that we ought not to establish.

Mr. PLUMB. I was not present in the committee at the time this bill was considered. I only know about the details as stated through the medium of the report which has been read. I understand the rule of the committee to be this: where a person in the Army has had a commission in a certain rank and he has not been able to muster in on account of no fault of his own and through no lack of his own, he shall be entitled to and receive the pay for that rank, provided he did duty in that rank and was not a supernumerary. I judge by the report in this instance that this is one of those cases. The committee has committed itself fully to that principle, and it has been recognized, I think, by the action of the Senate, for at least two years last past. Now, as to the number of cases, I cannot say certainly as to that. There are probably half a dozen pending before the committee now and on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. Half a dozen thousand, perhaps.

Mr. PLUMB. No; there are only half a dozen or more pending before the committee and on the Calendar together. I think there have been only three or four reported at this session of the Senate. I do not now personally know of any pending before the committee. I think the number of cases is not very large, judging from the information that I have, but still it might be.

However, the principle which has been recognized by the committee, and which the Senate to some extent has heretofore committed itself to, is what I have stated, to wit: that where a man has a commission in a certain rank, has performed the duties of that rank, has failed to muster by reason of no fault of his own, and was not a supernumerary officer, so that no other person could have pay for the same period of time, the committee have recognized that as constituting an equity in his behalf which would entitle him to compensation for the rank in which he actually served.

As I said, I did not happen to be present when this case was considered. I do not know anything about it, except as stated in the report.

Mr. MAXEY. The rule of the Military Committee, as stated by the Senator from Kansas, is correctly stated. There was a general order issued by the War Department in 1861 which prohibited any officer from receiving pay anterior to the date of his muster in. That was the time that controlled it. On that account in all these cases, however equitable they might be, where an officer has actually performed duty before he was mustered in in the rank in which he performed duty, the War Department, rightfully under the law, I think, refused to pay. Some of these cases have been presented to us. Where we believed there was a controlling equity, that it was not the fault of the party that he had not been mustered, and where the party actually performed the service to the Government and had not been mustered in without fault on his part, and the Government received the benefit of his services, it was but equitable and right that he should be paid.

I will state to the Senator from Vermont that so far as my experience goes the number of cases is very few; but there are some few cases which, in the judgment of the committee, are controlled by the equities which do control this rule. So far as this special case is concerned, I only know of it by the reports of the investigations made by the Senator from Rhode Island, which were satisfactory to the committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAMP DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 740) to authorize the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department certain parts of the Camp Douglas military reservation in the Territory of Utah.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the report in that case; but I see it is a good long story. I think the bill had better go over, in the absence of the Senator having it in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under the rule.

MASONIC HALL COMPANY OF ATLANTA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 426) for the relief of the Masonic Hall Company of Atlanta, Georgia; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to the Masonic Hall Company of Atlanta, Georgia, of $475 for property rented from them under contract by the United States, and for which duly certified vouchers, now on file in the Treasury Department, were given.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to inquire of some member of the Committee on Claims why the amount has not been paid? I see the bill is reported favorably from the Committee on Claims. Some member of the committee present can inform us why this account was not settled.

Mr. McMILLAN. The claim is one for rent of buildings. Under the act of Congress the quartermaster of course could not allow for rent; but a contract existing for the rent of the premises, the committee allowed the claim to the extent stated.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MACON, GEORGIA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1888) for the relief of Macon, Georgia.

Mr. SARGENT. I see that is adversely reported.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

COMPENSATION OF TELEGRAPH OPERATORS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 770) fixing the compensation of the telegraph operators of the Senate and House of Representatives; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that from and after the 30th of June, 1878, the compensation of the telegraph operators of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be $1,200 each per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND IN KINNEY COUNTY, TEXAS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 909) to authorize the Secretary of War to accept an absolute gift of the land necessary for military purposes; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War, on the part of the United States, to accept an absolute gift or grant of land, donated to the United States by the San Felipe Agricultural, Manufacturing and Irrigation Company, of the county of Kinney, Texas, comprising two hundred acres of land in that county, to be used as a site for a military post if the same is in his judgment needed for military purposes and the gift be unincumbered with provisions; whereupon the Secretary of War is authorized to accept the deed therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMEN AS LEGAL PRACTITIONERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1077) to relieve certain legal disabilities of women, reported adversely by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SARGENT. Let that bill be considered notwithstanding the adverse report. I want to make an amendment to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be reported with the understanding that it is objected to.

The bill was read.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to offer this amendment to that bill; and as I see my friend from West Virginia desires to object to the present consideration of the bill I will ask him not to object until I have exhausted less than the five minutes allowed me, and then I will move that the bill be referred, with the amendment which I offer, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That no person shall be excluded from practicing as an attorney and counselor at law from any court of the United States on account of sex.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the best evidence that members of the legal profession have no jealousy against the admission of women to the bar who have the proper learning is shown by that document which I hold in my hand, signed by one hundred and fifty-five lawyers of the District of Columbia, embracing the most eminent men in the ranks of that profession, [exhibiting a petition.] That there is no jealousy or consideration of impropriety on its part in the various States is shown by the fact that the Legislatures of many of the States have recently admitted women to the bar; and my own State, California, has passed such a law within the last week or two. Illinois has done the same thing; so have Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, and North Carolina; and Wyoming, Utah, and the District of Columbia among the Territories have also done it. There is no reason in principle why women should not be admitted to this profession or the profession of medicine, provided they have the learning to enable them to be useful in those professions, and useful to themselves. Where is the propriety in opening our colleges, our higher institutions of learning, or any institutions of learning to women, and then when they have acquired in the race with men the cultivation for higher employments to shut them out? There certainly is none.

We should either restrict the laws allowing the liberal education of women or we should allow them to exercise the talents which are cultivated at the public expense in such departments of enterprise and knowledge as will be useful to society and will enable them to gain a living. The tendency is in this direction. I believe the time has passed when it is considered a ridiculous thing for women to appear upon the lecture platform or in the pulpit, for women to attend to the curing of diseases as physicians as well as nurses, to engage in any literary employment, or appear at the bar. Some excellent lady lawyers in the United States are now practicing at the bar, behaving themselves with propriety, acceptably received before courts and juries; and when they have conducted their cases to a successful issue or an unsuccessful one in any court below, why should the United States courts to which an appeal may be taken and where their adversary of the male sex may follow the case up, why should they be debarred from appearing before those tribunals?

In Shakespeare's time it was thought unfit that a woman should appear upon the stage as an actress, but since that day a long roll of illustrious women have adorned and dignified that profession and have shown the possession of great histrionic abilities, and now a play presented to the stage which left women out, if it were decent and moral, would be like leaving Hamlet out of the play of that name. So in the ranks of literature, from the first feeble beginnings of a few years ago of Miss Austin and others of that character we now find some of the most successful novelists of the present day and also writers upon general literature. There is scarcely any department of literature which they have not invaded, from the profession of journalists up to the higher walks requiring sustained effort, and they have borne themselves successfully there.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from California if the courts of the United States cannot admit them upon their own motion anyhow?

Mr. SARGENT. I think there is nothing in the law prohibiting it, but the Supreme Court of the United States recently in passing upon the question of the admission of a certain lady said that until some legislation took place they did not like to depart from the precedent set in England, or until there was more general practice among the States. The learned Chief-Justice perhaps did not sufficiently reflect when he stated that there were no English precedents. The fact is that Elizabeth herself sat in aula regina and administered the law, and in both Scotland and England women have fulfilled the function of judges. The instances are not numerous but they are well ascertained in history. I myself have had my attention called to the fact that in the various States the women are now admitted by special legislation to the bar. I do not think there is anything in the law properly considered that would debar a woman from coming forward into this profession. I think the Supreme Court should not have required further legislation, but they seem to have done so, and that makes the necessity for this legislation which I have now offered.

The chairman of the committee in reporting this bill back from the Judiciary Committee said that the bill as it passed the House of Representatives—and I glory in the fact that the House of Representatives passed this bill and by a very handsome majority upon a call of the yeas and nays, as I remember—said that it gave privileges to women which men did not enjoy; that is to say, the Supreme Court can by a change of rule require further qualification of men, whereas in regard to women if this provision were put into the statute the Supreme Court could not rule them out, even though it may be necessary in its judgment to get a higher standard of qualification than their present rules prescribe. Although I observe that my time is up, I ask indulgence for a moment or two longer. As this is a question of some interest and women cannot appear here to speak for themselves, I hope I may be allowed to speak for them a moment. Now, there is something in the objection stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary—that is to say, the bill would take the rule of the Supreme Court and put it in the statute and apply it to women, thereby conferring exceptionable privileges; but that is not my intention at all, and therefore I have proposed that women shall not be excluded from practicing law, if they are otherwise qualified, on account of sex, and that is the provision which I want to send back to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to ask one question of the Senator from California. Suppose the court should exclude them, but not on account of sex, then what is their remedy?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not see any pretense that the court could exclude them except on account of sex.

Mr. GARLAND. If I recollect the rule of the Supreme Court in regard to the admission of practitioners, (and I had to appear there twice to present my claim before I could carry on my profession in that court,) I do not think any legislation is necessary to aid them by giving them any more access to that court than they have at present under the rules of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SARGENT. I believe if the laws now existing were properly construed (of course I speak with all deference to the Supreme Court, but I express the opinion) that they would be admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court, and the courts of the United States; but unfortunately the courts do not take that view of it, and they say they will wait for legislation. I propose that the legislation shall follow. If there is anything in principle why this privilege should not be granted to women, if they are otherwise qualified, then let the bill be defeated on that ground; but I say there is no difference in principle whatever, not the slightest. There is no reason because a citizen of the United States is a woman that she should be deprived of her rights as a citizen, and these are rights of a citizen. She has the same right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and employment, commensurate with her capacities, as a man has; and, as to the question of capacity, the history of the world shows, from Queen Elizabeth or Isabella down to Mrs. Dudevant and Mrs. Stowe, that capacity is not a question of sex.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. McDONALD rose.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator from California to move to recommit the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I am compelled to do it under the objection. I trust my friend from Indiana will be allowed to express his views, however.

Mr. McDONALD. I have simply to say, Mr. President, that a number of States and Territories have authorized the admission of women to the legal profession, and they have become members of the bar of the highest courts of judicature in the States. It may very frequently occur, and has in some instances I believe really occurred, that cases in which they have been thus employed have been brought to the Supreme Court of the United States. To have the door of the Supreme Court closed against them when the cause is brought there, not by them, or when in the prosecution of the suits of their clients they find it necessary to come here, it seems to me is entirely unjust. I therefore favor the bill with the amendment. The proposed amendment is perhaps better because it does away with any tendency to discrimination in regard to the admissibility of ladies to practice in the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SARGENT. I have the promise of the chairman of the committee that the bill shall soon be reported back, and therefore I am willing that it go to the committee, and I make the motion that it be recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the amendment which I propose be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order to print will be made.

METHODIST CHURCH SOUTH.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the bill (S. No. 910) for the relief of the book-agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South some days ago was fixed as a special order for the 18th of April. After the action of the Senate fixing it for that day, the resolution introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] was passed, which gave a preference to the Calendar, and now this bill would be reached in the regular order of business if it had not been taken from its place and transferred to the head of the Calendar. I ask the Senate to take up the bill and consider it. I do not care to press it to a vote this evening, as the Senate is very thin, and I think the Senate should be a full body when a vote is taken upon the question. It is a question of very considerable interest, at all events to the persons concerned, and it may present some questions of interest to the Senate.

I simply ask that the bill be taken up and made the order of business, and that it be laid over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. ANTHONY. Manifestly that bill cannot be discussed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I was going to ask further that the Senate shall rescind for the purposes of this case its direction limiting debate to five minutes. There should be no such limitation upon this bill; there should be the freest discussion of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then it should take its place at the foot of the Calendar, because we are going through the Calendar under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that unless there shall be some order it will take its place at the foot of the Calendar; but I trust the Senator from Rhode Island will not throw this case to the foot of the Calendar, I appeal to him not to do it, and for the reason that it is a case of great interest and has to be settled here in the Senate one way or the other in time for the action of the House of Representatives. I assume that the Senator from Rhode Island does not wish to postpone action upon this case with a view to have it defeated by the want of time for its consideration in the House of Representatives. It is not that kind of a case, Mr. President. I urge its consideration in order that we may have time here fully to consider it and that the House of Representatives may have time fully to consider it. I ask the Senate, therefore, that the bill be taken up and made, not a special order, but the order of business for to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that it be taken up immediately after the unobjected cases are disposed of.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be called in its regular order, and let us go on with the other cases.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. All I want is the consideration of the bill in time for it to be acted upon by this body and receive the action of the House of Representatives.

Mr. TELLER. I do not see any reason why this case should be taken out of the regular course, and I object to fixing a time for its consideration. Let it go with the other special orders and be considered when we get through with the unobjected cases on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made; and the Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. BAILEY. I appeal to the Senate from the objection made by the Senator from Colorado and ask that some order be made in regard to this matter, either to take it up now or to fix a time for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee submit a motion?

Mr. BAILEY. As suggested by the Senator from Iowa, I ask that the bill be taken up as soon as the unobjected cases are disposed of. I ask general consent for that purpose.

Mr. SARGENT. After we finish the Calendar?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks that the bill be taken up for consideration immediately after the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I object to that. I insist on the case taking its regular course unless the Senate takes some action otherwise.

Mr. SARGENT. It takes the regular course in this way.

Mr. TELLER. No, it does not. There is a special order on the Calendar ahead of it.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that the bill be made the special order immediately after the consideration of all the unobjected cases on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will come up as a special order as soon as the Calendar is gone through with.

Mr. BAILEY. I take it the Senator from Colorado wants this question settled, and settled by a full Senate, and after due notice, so that all who take an interest in the question may be here. I take it that he wants the public questions which are involved in the consideration of this case determined, and determined fairly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As I understand, it is altogether at the option of the Senate whether it will proceed with the consideration of the bill at this time, notwithstanding the objection of any Senator, without general consent to waive the rule requiring us to consider only the unobjected cases. Why not say that when all the unobjected cases are gone through with on the Calendar this bill shall be taken up immediately afterward? I hope the Senator from Colorado will not object to such an arrangement. If he objects I can see no way for the Senator from Tennessee (who certainly has a right to have his bill taken up if he desires it or if the Senate desire it) but to move to proceed with it now. That is his right.

Mr. HEREFORD. I rise to a question relating to the construction of the rules. I ask whether the bill having been made a special order, it does not come up as a matter of right? The consideration of this bill was some days ago made a special order, and it seems to me under our rules it comes up as a matter of right whenever any gentleman desires to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will come up after the consideration of the Calendar is gone through with.

Mr. HEREFORD. It having been made a special order, it seems to me under the rules that we have a right to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that after the Calendar has been gone through with, under the rule the bill will come up as a special order. The rule itself sets aside special orders.

Mr. TELLER. Then the Senator from Tennessee does not require any order to secure the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That being the ruling of the Chair, it will be generally understood that as soon as the Calendar of unobjected cases is through this bill will come up.

Mr. ANTHONY. It will come up itself as a special order, unless it is superseded by the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. That being the ruling of the Chair, I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next case on the Calendar will be reported.

DISAPPROVAL OF TERRITORIAL ACT OF ARIZONA.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) in reference to the disapproval of an act of the Territory of Arizona; which was read.

Mr. TELLER. I object to the present consideration of that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the joint resolution goes over under the rule.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. HEREFORD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4236) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and by a readjustment of the grants, without increasing the appropriation, to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that we had better go on a while longer with the Calendar.

Mr. OGLESBY. Oh, yes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Say for half an hour.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it is the wish of the Senate, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. SARGENT. Is the motion withdrawn to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. SARGENT. I renew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 22, noes 17; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and seventeen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 22, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour, which begins at five minutes past twelve o'clock. This being Monday, the first business during the morning hour is the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions for introduction and reference to appropriate committees. During this call memorials and joint resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures are in order for reference.

When the call of States and Territories was interrupted on last Monday at two o'clock by business of the Committee for the District of Columbia, the question was on the reference of the joint resolution presented by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] from the Legislature of that State authorizing judicial proceedings to give effect to the electoral vote of Maryland. The pending motion was that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to refer the resolution to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUTLER. Was not there a prior order of unfinished business, to wit, a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is the unfinished business after the morning hour; this is the unfinished business of the morning hour.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MILLS; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. SWANN to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary; and it was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call still rests with the State of Maryland.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Before the call is proceeded with, I would ask unanimous consent that the order be made that all the States and Territories be called to-day.

The SPEAKER. That order was made on Monday last, but was not carried out; and the rule requires that the call shall be resumed to-day where it left off last Monday.

Mr. CUMMINGS. What I mean is, that the morning hour be extended until all the States and Territories have been called.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HUBBELL. I object.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not see why the gentleman should object.

TAX ON SALES OF SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS.

Mr. ROBERTS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4428) to levy a tax on the sale of spirituous and malt liquors in bar-rooms and all places where intoxicants are sold by the drink in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MULBROW. I ask by unanimous consent that memorial be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned delegates, representing the Cherokee, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole Nations of Indians, respectfully call attention to the several bills and other propositions now before Congress to establish a territorial government for the Territory owned and occupied by their people and other Indian tribes, and having for their object in whole or in part—

First. The opening to white settlers of country set apart by law and treaty exclusively for Indians.

Second. The extension of the laws of the United States and of the jurisdiction of its courts to all causes of action, civil or criminal, on the part of one Indian against the person or property of another Indian.

Third. The abolition of tribal relations and the adoption of Indians as citizens of the United States.

Fourth. The change of land titles from a national tenure in common to an individual tenure in severalty.

All of which propositions are in violation of numerous treaty stipulations and guarantees, especially of the fourth article of the Choctaw treaty of 1830 and the fourth article of the Cherokee treaty of 1835, which provide that no part of the lands granted to either nation shall ever be included without their consent in the limits of any State or Territory, and secures to them forever the right to be governed by their own laws.

The fourth article of their treaty of 1856 contains a similar guarantee to the "Creek and Seminole tribes of Indians."

The guarantees to the Choctaws are repeated in the seventh article of the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of 1835, which secures the "unrestricted right of self-government and full jurisdiction over persons and property within their respective limits," and provides for the exclusion of all persons not "citizens or members of either tribe found within their limits."

The same guarantee, in nearly the same words, is given to the Creeks and Seminoles in the fifteenth article of their treaty of 1856.

The first article of the Cherokee treaty of 1846 provides that the Cherokee lands "shall be secured to the whole Cherokee people for their common use and benefit."

The Choctaw lands were ceded by the United States to the Choctaw Nation, second article, treaty 1830, 7 Statutes, 211. The Chickasaws having subsequently acquired an interest therein, the first article of the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of 1855 guarantees the lands embraced within their limits "to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, their heirs and successors, to be held in common, so that each and every member of either tribe shall have an equal, undivided interest in the whole."

The country of the Creeks and Seminoles was originally granted to the "Creek Nation of Indians" by the third article of their treaty of 1833, to be theirs "so long as they shall exist as a nation and continue to occupy."

The third article of the Creek and Seminole treaty of 1856 repeats the same guarantee to the Creeks and to the Seminoles who had acquired part of the Creek country.

The third article of the two treaties, one with the Creeks, the other with the Seminoles in 1866, contains similar provisions. Their lands are to be held by each nation, in the one case "as a home for said Creek Nation," in the other as the "national domain of the Seminole Indians."

All the treaties of 1866 with the five nations referred to in this memorial reaffirm the provisions of former treaties not inconsistent therewith.

The twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh articles of the Cherokee treaty of 1866 provide for the exclusion from their country of those who are "not citizens of the Cherokee Nation." The seventh article of the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of 1855 and the fifteenth article of the Creek and Seminole treaty of 1856 contain provisions of like character.

No one of the Indian nations embraced in the foregoing guarantees has asked for any change in its relations with the United States. They have all done well under the system of self-government, isolation, and tenure in common intended to be secured in their treaties. Under that system they were growing in wealth and strength in their former homes. Disease and exposure, consequent upon removal and change of climate, cut off on an average one-third of each tribe. When thoroughly acclimated they again increased in numbers, and were increasing and otherwise improving when the war checked their progress and again heavily reduced them, more than a third of the Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles having perished during the contest, and the two or three ensuing years after that they again began to increase and are now increasing in population. That they are in other respects doing well under the present system is abundantly proved by the official statements not only of Government agents specially in charge, but also of heads of bureaus and of the board of Indian commissioners.

The report of that board for 1872, page 12, gives the comparative statistics of the Territories, ten in number, showing that the Indian Territory, in the language of the commissioners, "in population, number of acres cultivated, products, wealth, valuation, and school statistics, is equal to any organized Territory of the United States and far ahead of most of them."

The detailed statement on page 14 shows that the foregoing remarks apply chiefly to the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles as distinguished from twenty-one other enumerated bands, constituting more than one-fourth of the population, the proportion of wealth, acres cultivated, grain produced, schools, teachers, and scholars being overwhelmingly in favor of the five nations and that notwithstanding the fact noted by the commissioners on page 13, that they "had their lands devastated and their industries paralyzed during the war of the rebellion in the same relative proportion as other parts of the South and have not fully recovered from the effects."

They add that "the partially civilized tribes, (the five nations,) numbering about fifty thousand souls, have in proportion to population more schools and with a larger average of attendance, more churches, church-members, and ministers, and spend far more of their own money for education than the people of any Territory of the United States. Life and property are more safe among them and there are fewer violations of law than in the other Territories."

The undersigned request that the foregoing statements and others of like tenor in the annual reports of the Indian Office may be compared with the official accounts of those Indians upon whom the experiments of United States citizenship, tenure in severalty and contact with white settlers have heretofore been tried.

Without going into detail it is sufficient for the purposes of this paper to refer to two of these accounts.

One is in the treaty on pages 839-852 of the Revision. Previous treaties having made the Wyandottes and Ottawas citizens with allotments in Kansas, the preamble virtually declares the experiment a failure, the object of the treaty so far as they are concerned being to restore them to their former tribal condition as Indians and to provide homes for them in the Indian Territory to be held not as individuals, in severalty, but as tribes in common.

The other is the summing up by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his report for 1876, page 25, of the results in the case of the Pottawatomies "who, after becoming citizens, squandered their substance, and have now returned as Indians depending upon the bounty of the Government."

It is the conviction that disastrous consequences would result from the proposed changes which causes the nearly unanimous opposition to such measures on the part of the five nations. Their own experience tells them exactly what the system of allotment and citizenship means. Provisions for that purpose were made in the treaties of 1817 and 1819 with the Cherokees, of 1830 with the Choctaws, and of 1832 with the Creeks. Hundreds of Indians entitled to patents for land under those treaties have never secured a single acre. Many more whose rights were recognized by the Government were shamefully wronged by the whites and have to this day been unable to obtain relief or redress.

The mischievous working of that system under those three treaties induced President Jackson to prohibit the introduction of similar features in other treaties made during his administration; and it is believed that no treaties containing such provisions were made under his successors until the accession of President Pierce. Since then the experiment has been frequently reported with results in the main such as those above indicated in the case of the Wyandottes, Ottawas, and Pottawatomies.

Another serious objection to the proposed system of allotment and citizenship is found in the litigation which in case it is adopted must necessarily result from the land grants to railroads running through the Indian Territory to take effect "when-ever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise."

The Indian title is held by each nation over whose land the railroads pass. It will of course be contended:

First, That when any one of those nations by the dissolution of its tribal relations ceases to exist, or Second, When its title is transferred from the nation holding in common to individual members holding in severalty, who have become citizens of the United States and have thus practically ceased to be Indians, that the "Indian title" will necessarily be extinguished.

While deprecating any action that might lead to such litigation, the undersigned wish to place on record the conviction universally prevailing among their people that the Indian title rests on too firm a basis to permit them to doubt the ultimate result of a judicial test. It is true that they regard the railroad land grants as a perpetual menace to the owners of the soil, and feel that they have been the main cause of the majority of the territorial bills introduced during the last ten years. That the grants do harm rather than good, the companies claiming them have begun to discover, and have signified their willingness to have them repealed. The undersigned trust that they will be, and that Congress will relieve their people from further risk of annoyance on that account.

But whether those grants are repealed or not, the undersigned feel confident that the courts will never decide that the Indian owners can be deprived of the soil without their own consent.

Whatever words may have occasionally been used in describing the Indian title, on carefully sifting the controlling decisions they will be found to concur in the opinion that the Government interest in Indian lands is simply a right of pre-emption, or rather of purchase, and the history of the country from its earliest settlement shows that such lands have almost invariably been acquired by purchase from the original owners.

The transfer of the main body of the southern nations to their present homes was preceded by the act of Congress of May 28, 1830, authorizing an exchange of territory based upon the idea of perpetual possession, with the assurance to the "tribe or nation making the exchange that the United States will forever secure and guarantee to them and their heirs and successors the country so exchanged."

The same idea runs through the treaties made immediately before and after that act. The preamble to the treaty of 1828 expresses the "anxious desire" of the Government to secure to the Cherokees "a permanent home which shall under the most solemn guarantees remain theirs forever." Its second article agrees "to guarantee it to them forever."

The preamble to the Creek treaty of 1833 states its objects to be to establish boundaries which will "secure a permanent home to the whole Creek Nation and to the Seminoles," and the same idea is expressed in the third and fourth articles of the treaty. The Choctaw title rests on the same basis of perpetuity, though its history is materially different. Their country was acquired by the second article of the treaty of 1820, which makes an unqualified grant, without limitation or restriction of any kind. (7 Statutes, 211.) In 1837 they sold an undivided interest in the same to the Chickasaws.

In 1855 a treaty was made between the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, and the United States, by which the title was changed. The grant of 1820 was from the United States to the Choctaw Nation. The treaty of 1855 "forever secures and guarantees" their lands to "the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, their heirs and successors, to be held in common, so that each and every member of either tribe shall have an equal undivided interest in the whole."

Before this transfer to the "members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes" two patents had been issued to the Choctaw Nation, one by President Jackson, the other by President Tyler under the treaty of 1830, which provides for a special conveyance of the country previously granted in 1820. These patents conform to the treaty under which they were issued in describing a smaller area and in certain restrictions not in the original grant; but they had no effect in injuring the Choctaw title, as the binding force and superior validity of the treaty of 1820, which was made under authority previously given by Congress, and under which the higher grade of title was acquired, was in various ways acknowledged both by Congress and the treaty-making power down to 1855, when the convention between the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, and the United States, by its twenty-first article, was made to "supersede and take the place of all former treaties." Fortunately that convention is so framed that, while providing for and recognizing to the fullest extent the national existence and government of both Choctaws and Chickasaws, their title is placed beyond the reach of interference in the event and because of tribal dissolution, should any such calamity befall them. So long as a single Choctaw or Chickasaw is left, or the heir or successor of a Choctaw or Chickasaw, and occupies the country described in the treaty of 1855 east of the ninety-eight meridian, so long will the courts recognize and enforce the right to hold that country against all adverse claimants.

The qualifying words in the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty and in the other treaties herein referred to, as applied to their title, obviously mean nothing more than the general principle under which, in the absence of legal representatives, land always reverts to the State and by which it may be lost through a failure to occupy. The history of Indian legislation from the first settlement of the country shows that the restrictions upon alienation were meant for the benefit of the Indian, having their origin in the desire to guard against danger from the designs of evil-disposed white men. The wisdom of retaining those restrictions and the ancient safeguard of tenure in common as a protection against fraudulent devices the undersigned cannot doubt will be appreciated by every member of Congress who carefully examines the subject. Such examinations cannot fail to show the evils of the allotment system and of the proposed disintegration by making citizens of such tribal members as may desire it, which can only serve to stimulate efforts in behalf of a few individuals to divide national funds held for the good of the whole.

The Indians constituting the five leading tribes have felt that the various evils pointed out in this paper could be made known and by making them known could be averted only through the active agency of delegations at Washington. The expense incurred, however heavy it may be, counts for nothing in their estimation compared with the ruin threatened in the bills annually introduced in Congress.

FRANCIS YATES.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4544) for the relief of Francis Yates, of Jefferson County, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS KOTZ.

Mr. MARTIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4545) for the relief of Francis Kotz, of Jefferson County, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CAREY THOMPSON.

Mr. MARTIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4546) for the relief of Carey Thompson, of Jefferson County, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN T. HARRIS.

Mr. MARTIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4547) for the relief of John T. Harris, of Jefferson County, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO ZACHARY TAYLOR.

Mr. McKENZIE presented joint resolutions of the Kentucky Legislature in relation to the erection of a monument at the tomb of Zachary Taylor; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND LAKE MICHIGAN CANAL.

Mr. SAMPSON asked that, by unanimous consent, the memorial and joint resolution of the Legislature of Iowa in reference to securing a commercial highway by water between the Mississippi River and Lake Michigan, via the valleys of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolution is as follows:

Memorial and joint resolution in reference to securing a commercial highway by water between the Mississippi River and Lake Michigan via the valleys of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers.

Whereas the General Government has entered upon the task of opening up a commercial highway from the valley of the Mississippi River to Lake Michigan via the valleys of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers; and

Whereas the people of the Western States especially feel an absorbing interest in the speedy and successful accomplishment of this desirable result: Therefore, Be it resolved, That we again repeat our request to our Representatives and Senators in Congress that they be diligent in securing, if possible, such legislation in Congress as will enable the commerce of the central States of the continent to pass unfettered and unvexed to the markets of the world.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to forward a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, with a request that the same may be laid before each House of Congress, and that a copy be sent to each Senator and Member of Congress from this State.

Approved March 15, 1878.

BOARD OF ASSISTANTS UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1974, a bill (H. R. No. 4548) providing for the establishment of a board of assistants for the Navy of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

The SPEAKER. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

NAVAL COURT-MARTIAL PRISONERS.

On motion of Mr. DANFORD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of a letter of the Secretary of the Navy of March 12, 1878, relative to expenses of prisoners sentenced by naval courts-martial to confinement in the penitentiary; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, For the purpose of speedy settlement of questions of vital importance to the country, the House will hereafter and until further notice meet for the transaction of business at eleven o'clock a. m. instead of twelve o'clock as heretofore.

ENFORCEMENT OF REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I ask, by unanimous consent, to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and is hereby, requested to inform this House of the number of United States marshals and other persons employed in enforcing the revenue laws since the 1st of November last, that have been killed or wounded by persons interfering with such enforcement.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

PROHIBITION OF SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) proposing an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting special legislation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Civil Service Reform, and ordered to be printed.

CURRENCY.

Mr. BUTLER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, pending when the House adjourned on Monday, 8th instant, to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 423) to supply a convenient currency by which the minor business transactions of the people may be done. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue United States notes of denominations for the fractions of a dollar representing fifty and twenty-five cents each, only to the extent and according to the provisions of sections 3572, 3573, 3574, 3575, and 3576 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. And the same may be redeemed either in other notes of the United States, as provided in section 3574 of the Revised Statutes, or in coin.

SEC. 3. Any person paying into the Treasury either United States legal-tender notes or coin shall receive therefor such amount of said fractional currency as he may desire, equal to the amount so paid in, until the limit of issue of said fractional currency shall be reached.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay out one-sixth of all payments made from the Treasury in redemption of national bank notes in United States legal-tender notes of the denominations of one, two, three, and five dollars, each in equal proportions, and all payments for the current expenses of the Government in like proportion, until the amount of such notes in circulation shall be equal to one-sixth of all the legal-tender notes and bank notes shown by the books of the Treasury to have been issued, and to remain uncanceled until the amount of one-sixth thereof shall be reached. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, thereafter pay out United States legal-tender notes of such small denominations, in payment of current expenses, in such proportion with the other notes as to maintain the proportion of one-sixth of small legal-tender notes of the whole amount of bank notes and legal-tender notes which shall appear to have been issued and to remain uncanceled by the books of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ATKINS. Has that bill been before any committee? Has it been before the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. BUTLER. It has been before the Committee on Banking and Currency and has been reported favorably.

Mr. EWING. The committee ordered it to be reported. It has not yet been reported.

Mr. EAMES. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the Committee on Banking and Currency be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that the same be passed.

Mr. COX, of New York. That bill ought to be debated. It brings back the old, shabby, shinplaster currency.

Mr. POWERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: I should cheerfully vote for so much of the bill as provides for the issue of small bills, but do not desire to vote to issue fractional currency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot debate the bill.

Mr. POWERS. I do not wish to debate the bill, but I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry whether the proposition is divisible.

The SPEAKER. It is not. The motion is to suspend the rules, and that rule with the rest which allows the division of a question.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the proposition covering both small bills and fractional currency is voted down, will it be possible under the rule adopted by the Chair as to a list on Monday for a resolution to be offered immediately covering only the small bills? Will the Chair entertain a motion to suspend the rules for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot do that. The Chair will conform to the list. That is a matter of individual right.

Mr. BRIGHT. Would it be in order to have the bill again read?

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HANNA. I call for the reading of those sections of the Revised Statutes which are referred to in the bill.

The SPEAKER. That would be in the nature of debate.

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—yeas 46, nays 117.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON. Before the roll is called I would be very much gratified if the House would hear the gentleman from Massachusetts explain the object of the bill.

Several members called for the regular order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 124, not voting 46; as follows:

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH, of Michigan. If he were here, I would vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. YEATES, is paired on this question with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. If Mr. YEATES were present he would vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. SCALES, is paired with Mr. VAN VORHES, of Ohio. If he were present Mr. SCALES would vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. BROGDEN, is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. FORNEY. I am paired with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky. My colleague, Mr. BOONE, is paired with Mr. SAMPSON, of Iowa. If he were present, Mr. BOONE would vote "ay."

Mr. CABELL. I am paired with Mr. PUGH, of New Jersey. If he were here, I would vote "ay."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I am paired with Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts; but as I understand he would vote "no" on this question, I desire to vote. I vote "no."

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee.
Mr. CAMP. My colleagues from New York, Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. VEEDER, are paired.

Mr. VAN VORHES. On this question I am paired with Mr. SCALES, of North Carolina.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. JORGENSEN, of Virginia, is paired with Mr. PRIDEMORE, of Virginia.

Mr. MAISH. I am paired with my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. SMITH.

Mr. TURNER. I am paired with Mr. MCGOWAN, of Michigan.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. SAMPSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BOONE.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER. If he were present, he would vote for the bill and I should vote against it.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. REAGAN. By direction of the Committee on Commerce I report the river and harbor bill, and move that the rules be suspended and that the bill be put upon its passage. I will state that since the bill was printed there have been added to it eight items, amounting to $160,000, and some surveys that cost no money.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a point of order upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUBBELL] was the next member upon the list entitled to move a suspension of the rules, but this is a public measure, and therefore the Chair has given the floor to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUBBELL. I will state that unless the gentleman from Texas had been recognized, I should have availed myself of my right to the floor to report this bill from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, although he recognizes the right of the gentleman from Texas to the floor on a public bill, yet he strikes the name of the gentleman from Michigan from the list.

Mr. REAGAN. The list should not be allowed to interfere with important public business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never has allowed it to interfere with important public measures, but the Chair is not willing to exercise his own choice in the recognition of members to move to suspend the rules or to take the responsibility of asking members for what purpose they wish to move to suspend the rules. The Chair thinks that that is not within his province.

Mr. COX, of New York. Do I understand that the gentleman from Texas moves to suspend the rules and pass a bill which has not yet been read?

The SPEAKER. The bill, of course, will be read before the vote is taken.

Mr. KENNA. There is no desire on the part of the committee to suspend the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Parliamentary law covers that question. Every body of legislators have a right to hear what they are going to vote upon.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will make my point of order now, and it is, that there are items in this bill not within our constitutional power to appropriate. The Constitution, in section 8 of the first article, gives Congress power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States; but it never intended to pay money by the million for local improvements to inconsiderable rivers and creeks. Here is a bill for seven millions. It is sought to pass it through without consideration in committee; and even if the bill were right in detail, it is a vicious practice, never to be done and cannot be done without protest. The shrieks of locality may be loud; for one I will not heed them by making precedents whose effect is to destroy constitutional limitations and beget a log-rolling system utterly subversive of fair legislation and actually destructive of the just appropriations in a bill loaded down to its sinking point.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman's point of order is an objection to the bill; it cannot lie against a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. KENNA. I submit that the gentleman's remarks were not addressed to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is that the Constitution prohibits the passage of this bill for the reason that it contains items that are unconstitutional. That is a question for each member of the House to determine for himself, and not for the Chair.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I hope this House will not pass a bill which will not bear the test of discussion.

Mr. FINLEY. And which looks like a steal.

Mr. HUBBELL. I object to debate. [Cries of "Regular order!"]
Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to reserve all points of order upon the bill until after it has been read.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I desire to know the contents of this bill, but it is impossible to hear anything in the present condition of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from New York should have that right and the Chair will suspend all business until gentlemen are seated and are in order.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the bill.

Mr. FORT, (interrupting.) I trust the gentleman from Texas is not desiring to deceive the House, as the bill now being read is not the printed bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I stated at the outset that there had been seven or eight items added since the bill was printed, increasing the amount $160,000.

The SPEAKER. This bill is introduced as an independent bill, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. FORT. The bill now being read is not the bill which has been printed.

Mr. KENNA. It is except in regard to four or five items, and the gentleman from Texas stated that they had been added.

Mr. REAGAN. It makes no matter whether the bill has been printed or not; it is before the House for consideration.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

A bill making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the repair, preservation, construction, and completion of the public works hereinafter named:

- For improving Chester River, at Kent Island Narrows, Maryland, $3,000.
- For improving harbor at Baltimore, Maryland, $75,000.
- For improving Wicomico River, Maryland, $5,000.
- For improving James River, Virginia, $70,000.
- For improving Appomattox River, Virginia, $30,000.
- For improving Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, $222,000.
- For improving New River, from Lead Mines in Wythe County, Virginia to mouth of Greenbrier River, $15,000.
- For improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, $85,000.
- For improving mouth of Occoquan River, Virginia—completing the improvement—$10,000.
- For improving Aquia Creek, Virginia—completing the improvement—$5,000.
- For improving mouth of Nomoni Creek, Virginia—completing the improvement—$5,000.
- For improving the Rappahannock River, Virginia, $13,500.
- For improving South Branch of Elizabeth River, Virginia, $5,000.
- For continuing the construction of ice-harbor at New Castle, Delaware, $10,000.
- For improving harbor at Norfolk, Virginia, $20,000.
- For improving Nansemond River, Virginia—completing the improvement—$2,000.
- For improving Roanoke River, North Carolina, $4,000.
- For improving harbor at Charleston, South Carolina, $5,000.
- For improving harbor at Savannah, Georgia, $70,000.
- For improving harbor at Cedar Keys, Florida, $20,000.
- For improving Choctawhatchee River, Florida and Alabama, $10,000.
- For improving Appalachicola River, Florida, $8,000.
- For improving Chattahoochee River, Alabama and Georgia, $18,000.
- For improving Alabama River, $25,000.
- For removing bar at Urbana, Virginia, $10,000.

Sec. 3. That for the examinations and surveys herein provided for, and for incidental repairs of harbors for which there is no special appropriation, the sum of $120,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

This bill appropriates the sum of $7,293,700.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COX, of New York. I made a point of order which I would like to have a ruling upon by the Chair.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRIGHT. Should this bill fail to receive a two-third majority, would it still remain—

The SPEAKER. It would not be before the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. Would it be competent then to refer it to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The bill would remain with the Committee on Commerce, as that committee have instructed its chairman to make the motion he has.

Mr. COX, of New York. My point of order is, that under the Constitution regulating commerce between the States this bill is not properly a bill for the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for each member to determine for himself, not for the Chair.

Mr. KENNA. I insist upon the regular order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am on a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. My point of order is that the power to regulate commerce between the States does not mean commerce between congressional districts or any individual districts. I would like, moreover, to amend this bill so as to provide water for some of these creeks mentioned in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman's point of order is not in order. Whether this bill is constitutional or not, is a question for the House to decide.

Mr. REAGAN. If there is a want of water in the composition of this bill, a stranger listening to the arguments of gentlemen opposing the bill would come to the conclusion that there was a superabundance of some other fluid in them. [Laughter.]

Mr. SOUTHWARD. I desire to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOUTHWARD. It is whether, if this motion is voted down, this bill can be reported from the committee on the regular call and be referred to the Committee of the Whole for discussion?

The SPEAKER. It can at such times as the Committee on Commerce may be called.

Mr. MILLS. Everybody knows that. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SOUTHWARD. I have a point of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOUTHWARD. The latter portion of Rule 77 requires that bills shall state the amount appropriated by them.

The SPEAKER. That applies to bills reported from the Appropriation Committee.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill does state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. How much is it.

Mr. REAGAN. It is $7,293,700.

Mr. KENNA. And even if it did not state it, this is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. FINLEY. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—yeas 33, nays 138; not one-fifth in the affirmative.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. FINLEY called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were 30 in the affirmative, one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were ordered; and Mr. FINLEY and Mr. REAGAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—yeas 39, nays 148.

So (more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 33, nays 207, not voting 51; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made: Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. YEATES, is absent on account of a death in his family. My colleague, Mr. SCALES, is absent by leave of the House, and paired on all political questions. My colleague, Mr. BROGDEN, is confined to his room by illness. Mr. GLOVER. I have been requested to state that Mr. JORGENSEN, of Virginia, is paired with his colleague, Mr. PRIDEMORE. Mr. MAISH. I am paired on the river and harbor bill with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey, and therefore I decline to vote on this motion. Mr. MCKENZIE. I am paired with Mr. YEATES, of North Carolina. If he were present, I would vote "ay" and I suppose he would vote "no."

Mr. HAMILTON. I am paired with Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If present, he would vote in the negative and I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I am paired with Mr. BANKS, of Massachusetts.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On the river and harbor bill I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FOSTER. If he were present, I presume he would vote "no" on this motion and I would vote "ay."

Mr. SINICKSON. My colleague, Mr. PUGH, is paired with Mr. CABELL, of Virginia. If present, Mr. PUGH would vote "no."

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Mr. TUCKER, is paired with General GARFIELD, of Ohio.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. REAGAN, to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask the Speaker whether Rule 121 applies to the bill now before the House. That rule reads as follows:

Upon the improvement of any bill making appropriations of money for works of internal improvement of any kind or description, it shall be in the power of any member to call for a division of the question, so as to take a separate vote of the House upon each item of improvement or appropriation contained in said bill, or upon such items separately, and others collectively, as the members making the call may specify; and if one-fifth of the members present second said call, it shall be the duty of the Speaker to make such divisions of the question and put them to vote accordingly.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules, which includes that rule among others.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is the mischief of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MITCHELL. I observe, also, that by another rule of the House it is required that the amount appropriated in a bill shall be stated.

The SPEAKER. That applies only to appropriation bills reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is an appropriation bill, as I understand. I wish to know, as a matter of information to which I think we are entitled, how much is appropriated by this bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. Seven million two hundred and ninety-three thousand dollars.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the amount to be what has just been stated by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does that include all the appropriations in this bill? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays, which have been called for by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise to another point of order. [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Gentlemen may call "Order!" but I have rights here as much as other members, and my constituents have rights equally with those of other gentlemen. I desire to know whether it is not the privilege of a member of this House to have before him in print a copy of the bill on which he is required to vote. I understand it is stated by the committee that certain items which they propose to appropriate are not included in the printed bill.

Mr. REAGAN. If allowable, I will state—

The SPEAKER. It is not allowable.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the fact about the matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a point of order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, [cries of "Regular order!"] I desire to protest against this bill as omnibus legislation on the "log-rolling" principle, "You help me and I will help you."

Mr. COX, of New York. I have raised a point of order under the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that he is not to construe the Constitution for members of the House. It is the province of each member to determine for himself such questions arising in regard to any proposed legislation.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 66, not voting 58; as follows:

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ROBBINS. My colleague, Mr. SCALES, is absent on leave and is paired, but I do not know with whom. My colleague, Mr. YEATES, is absent on account of affliction in his family, and is paired with Mr. McKENZIE, of Kentucky. Mr. YEATES, if here, would vote "ay."

Mr. TURNER. I am paired with Mr. MCGOWAN, of Michigan; and as his State is well provided for in the bill I presume he would vote "ay." My State is not provided for, and if he were here I should vote "no" on the proposition to suspend the rules and pass the bill, because it cuts off all debate and amendments and all opportunity to get appropriations to the rivers of Kentucky, and does not do my section justice; and not because I am opposed to the policy of improving rivers and harbors.

Mr. BEEBE. I am paired with Mr. PHELPS. If he were here, I would vote in the negative.

Mr. CABELL. I am paired with Mr. PUGH. If he were here, I would vote in the negative and he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I am paired with Mr. YEATES. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. CARLISLE. I am requested to announce that my colleague, Mr. DURHAM, is paired with Mr. BLOUNT, they having been called to the other end of the Capitol on a committee of conference. I also announce that my colleague, Mr. BOONE, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. HAMILTON. I am paired with Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. He would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I am paired with Mr. BANKS. If he were here, I understand he would vote in the affirmative, and therefore as I also would vote in the affirmative I ask to have my vote recorded accordingly.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. GARDNER. I am paired with Mr. EVANS, of Indiana. He would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. BROWNE. I am paired with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. BAYNE. I am paired with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. HUNGERFORD. I am paired with Mr. HISCOCK. He would vote in the affirmative and I would vote in the negative.

Mr. STEELE. My colleague, Mr. BROGDEN, is still detained at his room by illness. If he were present, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER. I would vote "ay" and he would vote "no."

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On this question I am paired with Mr. FOSTER, of Ohio. If present he would vote "aye" and I would vote "no."

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of presenting a protest against the passage of this bill, signed by members of Congress, and I ask to have it read.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. Has the gentleman any such right?

The SPEAKER. The right was established in the Thirty-ninth Congress by the democratic side of the House—

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have the floor on a question of privilege, and I do not yield for debate.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire whether the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is not of higher privilege, being a motion to adjourn, and having been submitted before the gentleman from New York took the floor?

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from New York was recognized by the Chair on a question of privilege.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. MILLS. Do the rules provide for the entering of a protest?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have read an instance in the nature of a precedent.

Mr. MILLS. Is there any rule authorizing it?

The SPEAKER. Is the Chair to understand it is a protest against the bill?

Mr. COX, of New York. It is.

Mr. BURCHARD. Then is it of any more effect than a vote against the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BURCHARD. Has it any effect upon the bill?

The SPEAKER. It has none.

Mr. COX, of New York. Several gentlemen are signing it and more wish to sign it. I ask it to be read.

Mr. WADDELL. Does it require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does not. In the Thirty-ninth Congress a precedent was established in reference to a like condition of things.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let the protest be read.

Mr. FORT. The title of the bill should be amended so as to read "An act to legalize log-rolling," for that is what it is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks to have read this paper as part of his remarks explanatory of the question of privilege he has raised.

Mr. GARFIELD. No remarks can be allowed.

Mr. WADDELL. In the absence of any rule allowing this, I object.

The SPEAKER. It is universal custom—

Mr. WADDELL. Does it not require unanimous consent to go upon the Journal?

Mr. COX, of New York. It is done in accordance with universal custom.

The SPEAKER. It does not go upon the Journal. It is not read to go upon the Journal, but whatever occurs in the House goes in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of the proceedings.

Mr. KENNA. The reading of the paper has not yet taken place.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for its reading.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KENNA. My point of order is that this cannot go into the RECORD as a part of the gentleman's remarks, because the remarks themselves are not in order under the rules.

Mr. ROBERTS. That is the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. KENNA. Then I insist he must state his question of privilege, in order that the House may know what action to take upon it.

The SPEAKER. Certainly the gentleman from New York has the right to send forward this paper to be read as part of his remarks in stating the question of privilege.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. Ought we not to know in the first instance what is the question of privilege?

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has the floor.

Mr. COX, of New York. I claim that this is a question of privilege on the ground of general usage for many years.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. MILLS. Is it a privilege accorded to a minority of this House to protest against the action of the majority?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York rises to a question of privilege, and as a part of his remarks thereon submits this paper. The Chair is unable, until the paper is read, to rule whether or not it embraces a question of privilege.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. What is the question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to find out.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would suggest that the Chair might inspect the paper to see if it embraces a question of privilege or not, before allowing it to go upon our records.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The paper may contain charges against members.

Mr. FRANKLIN, Mr. FINLEY, Mr. BUTLER, and others addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize any one until order is restored. The House will come to order.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is not on the floor for that purpose.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAGAN. It is that the gentleman from New York has stated his object to be to protest against the passage of a bill. I submit that the protest itself cannot be admitted, and that it cannot be converted into a question of privilege, the object of the paper having been stated when presented. I ask the ruling of the Chair upon that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York rose in his place and was recognized, and stated that he rose to a question of privilege. He then sends to the desk a paper which he desires to have read as relating to the question of privilege. The Chair is unable to state whether it is a question of privilege or not till he hears that paper read.

There is an example of this: when Mr. James Brooks, then a member from New York in the first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress, had entered at length upon the record a protest against the conduct of the Clerk of the House as to the manner in which he made up the roll, which was largely signed by democratic Representatives of that Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to inquire whether the question was then made. If not, that case has no authority.

The SPEAKER. The question was raised. The Clerk declined to receive the protest, but still it is in the RECORD, having been read.

Mr. GARFIELD. But was the question raised whether it should go into the RECORD? If the question was not raised, it does not make a precedent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is on the floor on a question of privilege. He is entitled to be heard, and in that connection sends this paper to the desk to be read.

Mr. ROBERTS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. My parliamentary inquiry is this: has any man claiming the floor on a privileged question a right to prevent the House from adjourning?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is on the floor, and declines to yield to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ROBERTS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBERTS. I call the attention of the Chair to the paragraph on page 289 of the Manual:

It is not a matter of right and parliamentary privilege to have received and entered upon the Journal a protest of members against the action of the House.

I submit that the rule is explicit, and that the gentleman from New York cannot submit this matter as a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled that the gentleman from New York is entitled to have this paper read as a part of his remarks on the question of privilege, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MILLS. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule 141, which states that when the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Pending the appeal of the gentleman from Texas, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to submit that the Chair has not yet ruled upon the question raised by the gentleman from New York, whether it be a question of privilege or not. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The Chair has stated that he would rule on that when the paper was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did rule that the gentleman from New York had a right, rising to a question of privilege, to have the paper read as a part of his remarks, and from that decision the gentleman from Texas appealed.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. And pending that, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] moves that the House do now adjourn. The Chair would prefer to have the gentleman withdraw that motion so that the House may vote on the ruling of the Chair as to the right of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to have the paper read as part of his remarks on a question of privilege.

Mr. BUTLER. It is after four o'clock, and I think we should adjourn.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to make a point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I think if we adjourn now the appeal would be withdrawn in the morning.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish the House to understand the grounds on which I rest my appeal from the Speaker's decision. The gentleman from New York arose and presented a protest. Afterward it was claimed that it was a question of privilege; but when he rose it was to present a protest against the action of the House. And I insist that as the protest was not admissible the pretense of its being a personal explanation or a matter of privilege should not enable him to get it before the House.

Many members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York stated to the Chair that he rose to a question of privilege, and was recognized for that purpose. He has the right to be heard on that, and the Chair has ruled that he has a right to have that paper read as a part of his remarks, showing in what the question of privilege consists.

Mr. BUTLER. The Chair recognized me to make the motion to adjourn. If we can have a vote at once upon the appeal and then I can be recognized to renew the motion, I am willing to withdraw it; if not, I stand by the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a point of order upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and it is that my colleague [Mr. COX] having the floor it was not competent for the gentleman from Texas to raise a point of order in order to allow any gentleman on the floor to move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that an appeal from his decision is in order, and pending that, that a motion to adjourn is in order, but the Chair asks the gentleman from Massachusetts not to press that motion.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Is it in order for a member to have read a decision upon this point at the Clerk's desk? If it is I desire to have it done.

Mr. BUTLER. I insist upon the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that the House will let the vote be taken upon the appeal.

The question was taken on Mr. BUTLER's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 120, noes 77.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. COX of New York, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 124, noes 81.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry: if the House adjourns will this matter come up as the unfinished business to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. As a question of privilege, it must be proceeded with until it is disposed of.

Mr. MILLS. Will it not be in order to enter a protest against calling the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. That is the constitutional privilege of one-fifth of the members present.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 101, not voting 70; as follows:

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BRAGG: Memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, relative to the improvement of the condition of the Oneida Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CANDLER: Papers relating to the claim of R. H. Caldwell—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLARK, of Iowa: Joint resolutions of the Legislature of Iowa, favoring the construction of a commercial highway between the Mississippi River and Lake Michigan by way of the valleys of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COX, of New York: The petition of William McGovern, for the erasure of "deserter" from his Army record—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Frederick Buckner and other pensioners of the war of 1812, to be relieved of biennial medical examinations—to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: Joint resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, favoring the construction of a commercial highway between the Mississippi River and Lake Michigan by way of the valleys of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FORNEY: The petition of J. W. Moore and others, citizens of Blount County, Alabama, for a favorable consideration of House bill No. 1670—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER: The petition of Hon. John Walz, of New Harmony, Indiana, for the distribution by Congress of public documents to public libraries containing two thousand volumes and over—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. GARDNER: The petition of T. Worthington, of Ohio, late colonel Forty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 23, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 4420) for the relief of Horace E. Mullan;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) authorizing Lieutenant T. B. M. Mason, United States Navy, to accept a medal conferred by the King of Italy for extinguishing a fire on a powder-ship; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Bushrod B. Taylor.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. No. 4055) to create a revenue in the District of Columbia by levying a tax upon all dogs therein, to make such dogs personal property, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4425) to alter and amend a law of the District of Columbia relative to the inspection of flour; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4426) relative to the Washington Market Company.

The bill (H. R. No. 4413) to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for encouragement of the arts or sciences, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 4416) referring the claim of the legal representatives of Captain John G. Todd, of Texas, to the Court of Claims was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 4422) to amend section 4695 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. No. 4222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JAMES SHIELDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 931) granting a pension to James Shields; which, on motion of Mr. SARGENT, were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MATTHEWS presented the petition of Thomas Worthington, of Ohio, late colonel of the Forty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, praying that he may be placed on the retired list of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of legislation by Congress for the improvement of the condition of the Oneida tribe of Indians located on the reservation in the counties of Brown and Outagamie, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the proposed transfer of the life-saving service from the Treasury to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of John Thomas and 100 other citizens of Hokendauqua, Pennsylvania, and the petition of John Williams and 400 others, citizens of Catasauqua, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill authorizing the construction of the Texas Pacific Railroad; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the memorial of John R. Bean and others, workmen of Kennebunk, Maine, engaged in the manufacture of cotton twines, remonstrating against any reduction of the duties on foreign imports and against the reimposition of the war tax on tea and coffee; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of James Garland, of Lynchburg, Virginia, who served in the war of 1812 as a sergeant in the Second Regiment Virginia militia, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Richmond, Virginia, in favor of a uniform tariff on imported sugar and molasses; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the Norfolk and Portsmouth Cotton Exchange, in favor of an appropriation for the establishment of automatic signal-buoys at the entrance of Norfolk Harbor; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORGAN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Alabama, in favor of a grant of land for the Tennessee and Warrior Rivers Railroad. As I desire to offer some remarks in regard to the subject-matter of this memorial before it is referred to a committee, I move that it lie upon the table for the present and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have been requested to present a memorial of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company, which relates to the bill that was under consideration yesterday. I move that it lie upon the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 19) for the relief of Captain James M. Beeber, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 827) to provide for the sale of certain portions of the Fort Leavenworth military reservation, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the General of the Army, recommending the amendment of section 1216 and the modification of section 1285 of the Revised Statutes so as to entitle the holders of certificates of merit to the additional pay of $2 per month while in the military service, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1121) to amend section 1216 of the Revised Statutes, and a bill (S. No. 1122) to amend section 1285 of the Revised Statutes.

The bills were severally read twice by their titles, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAXEY also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Lieutenant Marcus W. Lyon and other officers of the Ordnance Corps, praying legislation authorizing the Secretary of War to amend the relative rank of certain first lieutenants of the Ordnance Corps, United States Army, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. MAXEY. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Albert Ivers, late captain Company C, Eighty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension, to submit an adverse report thereon. This petition was first referred to the Committee on Pensions and afterward reported to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Military Affairs report it adversely and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged and the report will be printed.

Mr. MAXEY, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 588) to change the rank of Robert C. Buchanan, colonel on the retired list of the Army, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 986) for the relief of William S. Morris, William S. Mann, Charles A. Oakman, George W. Hillman, the Union Transfer Company, all of Philadelphia, the Union Transfer Company, of Baltimore, Maryland, and John R. Graham, late of Philadelphia, now of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 251) for the relief of James J. Waring, of Savannah, Georgia, to report it without amendment, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill, as it is reported unanimously from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection, and the bill goes on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD. The bill is accompanied by a report. It is a House bill for relief. Probably if I state the case the Senator from Vermont will see its justice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I dare say that it is perfectly right, but I am constitutionally opposed to passing bills the moment they are reported. I have not the least objection to this bill; I do not know anything about it; but I think it is a bad practice, and that is my reason for objection.

Mr. BAYARD. As the Senator objects, I am aware that the bill goes over. I ask that the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1889) for the relief of David W. Cheeseman, of Lake City, in Lake County, in the State of Oregon, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1048) for the relief of Ethan A. Sawyer, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 151) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the Society of the Sons of St. George, established at Philadelphia, the sum of $1,440.25 in gold, being the amount paid by said society upon a colossal statue of St. George and the Dragon, to report it adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask present consideration?

Mr. MORRILL. I will, if there is no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution goes on the Calendar.

THE TWENTY-CENT PIECE.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4394) to prohibit the coinage of the twenty-cent piece of silver, to report it without amendment. As I presume there will be no objection, I ask the action of the Senate upon this House bill. It is understood by all, I think, that the coinage of the twenty-cent piece was originally a mistake, and that being so nearly the size and weight of the twenty-five-cent piece the two are often confounded. I therefore move that the bill may receive present action.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not object to the passage of the bill, but the measure itself would have been very effectual originally if it had been coupled with a provision doing away with the half dollar, making a forty-cent piece and a decimal system all the way through. I think the measure was originally designed as the commencement of an improvement in that direction and to avoid the anomaly of twelve and a half cents, or half a quarter of a dollar, there being no coin in which such change can be made. But, as the twenty-cent piece has been coined and we have gone no further and as the twenty-cent piece is very near in size to the twenty-five-cent piece, I think such legislation as is now proposed is judicious. I am sorry the committee did not take into consideration, however, the whole value of the decimal system and introduce a measure accordingly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 313) to repeal an act authorizing the coinage of a twenty-cent piece of silver, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1123) to grant certain public lands in Alabama in aid of the Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1124) for the relief of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin and to aid them to obtain subsistence by agricultural pursuits and to promote their civilization; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DENNIS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1125) to provide for the care of all animals to be slaughtered in the District of Columbia and to incorporate the District of Columbia Stock-Yard, Abattoir, and Rendering Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSTON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1126) for the relief of Moses Myers, executor of Myer Myers, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1127) to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide-water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1128) for the relief of Lyman F. Munger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1129) to amend section 4916 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to patents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1130) to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages, &c., in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, it was Ordered, That Maria B. Wolfe have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying Senate bill No. 487 upon leaving copies.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Commerce have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Northern Pacific Railroad bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 238) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad; and by a readjustment of the grants, without increasing the appropriation, to secure the construction of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad, the pending question being on the amendment reported from the Committee on Railroads as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the bill went over yesterday the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] called attention to the fact that the bill provided that the road should run in part through the State of Oregon and that no provision was made for obtaining the consent of the State, or something to that effect. I desire to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the original act which I have this moment examined, and which I had not examined when I talked with the Senator this morning. The original act of July 2, 1864, incorporating the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, provided in section 18 as follows:

That said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall obtain the consent of the Legislature of any State through which any portion of said railroad line may pass, previous to commencing the construction thereof; but said company may have the right to put on engineers and survey the route before obtaining the consent of the Legislature.

The law simply provides that they may put on engineers and survey the route before consent is had, but they cannot appropriate property, they cannot commence work, they cannot do anything except to make the surveys until they have the consent of the Legislature of the State.

It will be remembered, furthermore, that the greater portion of the completed road that has been constructed under and in pursuance of this act is constructed through the State of Minnesota, the company first obtaining the consent of the Legislature of that State. I think calling attention to this fact will obviate the objection made by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. EATON. But this is a new bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Has not the completed road been constructed in part through the State of Oregon?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir; no part of the road has been constructed in the State of Oregon. A considerable portion of the road is constructed in Washington Territory, but no part has been constructed in the State of Oregon.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Some part of it has been surveyed in the State of Oregon, I understand.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think surveys have been made, though I cannot speak positively upon that point.

Mr. GROVER. Surveys have been made in Washington Territory, but the line has not been surveyed in Oregon at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No surveys have been made, then, in Oregon.

Mr. GROVER. I think not; none have been necessary; they follow the river bank all the way through the State.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no question about the practicability of the route at all, and I think my colleague is entirely correct in regard to the matter of surveys.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend section 14 of the amendment, the print of April 16, by striking out in line 4 of that section the words "having due regard for the rights of said companies." Those words, "having due regard for the rights of said companies," seem to have been imported into this section out of the original Union Pacific act, and it was contended here in debate on the funding bill—I thought without good foundation but others thought it was with a good foundation—that those words had some effect in limiting the power of Congress, and that Congress could not amend, alter, or repeal the act unless some court should say that it could be done with due regard to the rights of the companies. I do not want to set up this charter open to any such casuistry as that, and therefore I wish to leave this section giving Congress the complete right, in the exercise of its own judgment and sovereign jurisdiction, to alter, amend, or repeal. I move to strike out those words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to strike out the words he has named.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not wish to take up time in regard to this matter. I am one of those who believe that Congress has no power, and if Congress had the power it is one that it should not exercise, to interfere with any corporation in such a manner as to affect the rights of the company that have vested under the act. But I cannot waste the time of the Senate on this matter now.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the amendment to the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 14, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the words:

Having due regard for the rights of said companies.

So that, if amended, the section would read:

That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time and the acts and resolutions of which this act is amendatory or supplemental, and to provide by law against unjust discriminations and excessive charges on the part of said company.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In section 4, line 6, before the word "years," I move to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Actual settlers on any agricultural or grazing lands embraced within the grant to said company, who shall have settled thereon before the completion and acceptance of the section of the road opposite thereto, and actual settlers on any agricultural or grazing lands embraced within the said grant remaining unsold at the expiration of five years from the completion and acceptance of the section of the road opposite thereto, if said last-mentioned lands shall, at the time of such completion and acceptance, be surveyed by the Government, and if not, then at the expiration of eight years after the Government surveys shall be extended over the same, shall be entitled each to purchase from said company one quarter section, or a legal subdivision thereof, on which they shall have settled, at the price of not exceeding $2.50 per acre, excepting coal, iron, and timber lands and lands within the right of way for said railroad: Provided, however, That this section shall not apply to the lands already earned by said company.

I will state that the Union Pacific act provides that this may be done within three years instead of five. I think five is a fair period of time after the completion of the road. It is two years more than was given to the Union Pacific. I think the friends of the bill ought not to complain if we make it five.

Mr. MITCHELL. Personally I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment. Eight years was the time fixed by the committee, however, and I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted. The Committee on Railroads have certainly imposed all the conditions and restrictions upon this company that ought to be imposed if there is any hope of securing means to build the road. The conditions of the land grant are materially changed from any we have ever made before that I remember. The Senator from Colorado speaks of the difference between this measure and the Union Pacific act, and says that that act requires the lands to be sold in three years. If I remember aright, the Union Pacific act does not provide that actual settlers may go upon those lands to take prior to the construction of the road. But the bill now pending before the Senate radically changes the principle heretofore acted upon in land grants, in this, that it opens the whole of those lands to actual settlement at $2.50 per acre. I think that has never been done before. Has it been done within the recollection of the chairman of the Committee on Railroads?

Mr. MITCHELL. I think that principle was substantially incorporated in the act granting lands to the Oregon Central Railroad.

Mr. WINDOM. Well, with the exception of one or two, perhaps local roads, it has never been the principle acted upon by Congress. In this case you have departed from that principle so as to throw open these lands to settlement before the completion of the road. Then the company will have control of them under the bill for eight years, and if not sold then they are thrown open again to actual settlers and anybody may go and take them. There is no tying up of these lands. There is no monopoly in the public domain created. The committee have imposed these conditions, which I think are rather severe upon the company, but as they may be considered beneficial to the settlers I have agreed to them. I hope the Senate will not on the motion of the Senator from Colorado go any further in this direction. To go further in imposing conditions is to cripple the company so as to lose all hope of the construction of the road.

Mr. TELLER. As to allowing these settlers to go upon this land, it is only until they have gained the land, and the time for gaining it will be extended, if the bill is passed, for ten years. It would be very unreasonable and very unfair to prevent the settlers from going on this land for ten years, the committee believing that made a provision that until the road was completed a settler might go on the land, and instead of paying $1.25 an acre pay $2.50 an acre for the land, which goes to the company if it turns out to be their land that is taken. The act under which the Union Pacific Company was organized provided that after the road was built and accepted the land should be theirs, but if they did not dispose of the land within three years it should be open to settlers at $1.25 an acre. I am quite willing that this company should have two years longer than the Union Pacific, and I think five years is ample time.

Mr. WINDOM. I will ask the Senator if the land was open to settlement on the Union Pacific prior to the completion of the road?

Mr. TELLER. It was not. I think the friends of this bill understood very well that it was important to extend the time of this company for ten years, and it should be done upon the express condition that the land on the end of the road should be open to settlement; for there is no certainty that the road ever will be built, and to withdraw the land for ten years from the settlers would be a great hardship upon them. I think the friends of the bill ought to accept five years instead of eight.

Mr. MITCHELL. Although something of this principle was incorporated in the act I referred to a few moments ago, no bill ever presented to Congress, from any committee at least, has given that full and complete protection to settlers that is proposed by this bill. All the lands along the line of the non-completed road are thrown open to settlement. All grazing lands, all agricultural lands, are thrown open to settlement at a price not exceeding $2.50 an acre. When the road is completed and accepted, or any particular section of it, then the lands are to be withdrawn for a period of eight years, under the provisions of the bill as reported by the committee. At the expiration of that time they are again, as stated by the Senator from Minnesota, thrown open to settlement. It does occur to me that the provision as it stands is one that the settlers cannot reasonably object to. The matter was carefully considered by the committee and agreed to as reported.

Mr. TELLER. I would say, so far as the committee is concerned, that as a member of the committee I reserved the right to object to certain provisions of this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is true.

Mr. TELLER. I believe other members of the committee did so also. We consented generally that the bill should be reported with the right reserved that if we saw fit we would move amendments.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly; that reservation was made by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out "eight" and inserting "five."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I propose an amendment on page 10, which is not a matter of any interest at all, as I understand it, to this railroad company. I move to strike out the first proviso of section 10, in the following words:

Provided further, That all persons who, under the restrictions of the existing laws granting lands to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, have taken homesteads of not exceeding eighty acres shall have the privilege of increasing the amount of their said homesteads, so that the aggregate taken by any one person shall not exceed one hundred and sixty acres; this to be done under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

This proviso proposes an entirely different rule with reference to the disposition of the public land so far as the lands along the line of this road are concerned from what exists as to land in every other section of the United States. It seems to me that it is not fair to give the people in that section of country one hundred and sixty acres for a homestead when under like circumstances in other sections only eighty acres are given. It is not a matter of any consequence to the railroad company one way or the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope that the amendment to the amendment will not prevail. While it may not be a matter that the company is particularly interested in, it is a matter of vital interest to the people within the limits of this grant. If the amendment to the amendment should prevail, the right of homestead is entirely taken away, as I understand it.

Mr. PADDOCK. The homestead would apply to eighty acres instead of one hundred and sixty.

Mr. MITCHELL. The purpose of the Senator would be to simply leave it as it stands in the original act, to limit it to eighty acres; but I think the amendment goes further, and would exclude homesteads entirely.

Mr. TELLER. My proposition is to leave the matter exactly as provided for by the general law, and not to make an exception in favor of settlers on the line of any particular road. That is the only objection I have to the proviso. I am in favor of the general principle of giving settlers one hundred and sixty acres as a homestead.

Mr. MITCHELL. This proviso, of course, relates solely to the even sections within the limits of this grant. It has no reference to the lands of the company. I have this to say, Mr. President, that it is known to all that an eighty-acre homestead is insufficient. A man desiring a homestead requires more than eighty acres. There is a bill now pending before the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate providing that the law shall be so changed as to entitle homesteaders to one hundred and sixty acres within the limits of all railroad grants. I admit the force of what the Senator from Colorado says when he refers to the fact that there should be no discrimination made, and that, if homesteaders are limited to eighty acres within the limits of other grants to railroads, they should not have one hundred and sixty acres within the limits of this grant; but, if it is an evil, if it is an error, if it is an injustice to the homesteader, then the sooner we commence to correct that error the better; and no better opportunity could be presented than is presented now to give homesteaders the benefit of one hundred and sixty acres of the even sections within the limits of this grant. Then there is no difficulty if Congress desires to change the law in reference to other railroad grants; they certainly have the power to do it; so that it does not interfere with any of the rights of any company. That question cannot arise, and I think the amendment should not be made.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon if it is intended that they shall take contiguous land in order to make up the one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. MITCHELL. This bill leaves that to the Secretary of the Interior under such regulations as may be prescribed.

Mr. SARGENT. Then it leaves it, no matter who is Secretary of the Interior, to a very bad tribunal. We have seen the effect of additional soldiers' homesteads, the additional eighty acres being a mere float and the means of great frauds. It became at one time a matter of serious question in Congress whether we should not have to repeal the whole grant in regard to soldiers' additional homesteads on account of the frauds. Where a person comes and shows that he has in a certain place an eighty-acre homestead and wants to increase it to one hundred and sixty acres by taking contiguous land, every objection is avoided; but if the additional eighty acres is to be floated anywhere and everywhere, to be taken anywhere else, the man has either got to abandon his original eighty-acre homestead or not settle upon the eighty acres that he takes in addition, so that the idea of homestead applying to the additional eighty acres is a fallacy.

Mr. WINDOM. I would call the attention of the Senator from California to the provision in the eighth line and ask him if in his judgment that does not answer his objection?

Mr. SARGENT. "Under the restrictions of the existing laws."

Mr. WINDOM. "To be taken in conformity to the existing pre-emption and homestead laws."

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir; because the proviso goes on and makes provision for another class of persons:

That all persons who, under the restrictions of the existing laws granting lands to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, have taken homesteads of not exceeding eighty acres, shall have the privilege of increasing the amount of their said homesteads, so that the aggregate taken by any one person shall not exceed one hundred and sixty acres.

I do not object to that. I believe with the Senator from Oregon that eighty acres is too limited a homestead, and that in that country where there is so much wild land it is the interest of the Government to induce homesteaders to take it up and give them one hundred and sixty acres for reclaiming the wilderness; but I would require their land to be contiguous. A man cannot possibly keep one foot upon one homestead of eighty acres and another on some other place of eighty acres; one or the other becomes speculative.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just put in the word "contiguous."

Mr. SARGENT. I want to put in "by taking contiguous land," and I move an amendment to insert after the word "homestead" the words "by taking contiguous land."

Mr. MITCHELL. I admit the force of what the Senator from California says. It will have the effect, however, of making an invidious distinction between those who have settled on homestead lands, because in very many cases it will doubtless have the effect that the party will be so hampered that it will be utterly impossible for him to increase his homestead.

Mr. SARGENT. He may not then be able to take his additional eighty acres, but he has this consideration in his favor, that he is in such a thickly populated community, settled all around, that his land is increased in value, and it is not much of a hardship to him.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from California permit me to call his attention to the fact that in line 8 of section 10 it is provided that these homesteads and pre-emptions must be taken in conformity to the existing law?

Mr. SARGENT. It does not so provide. The proviso refers to a particular class.

Mr. McMILLAN. But if the Senator will observe the portion of the section preceding the proviso commencing in line 8 refers to homesteads and pre-emptions under existing laws. Now, under the existing laws the homestead must be, as I understand it, of contiguous land.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no question but that part of the section provides that the new selections shall be one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then, if the Senator will observe, this proviso merely permits those who are upon lands under the claim of a homestead to extend it to one hundred and sixty acres, and of course refers to the homestead referred to in the previous part of the section, and it requires no such amendment as the Senator from California suggests, and the increase would have to be in accordance with existing law and must be contiguous land.

Mr. SARGENT. Then the Senator will certainly agree to my amendment which makes it plain.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, if you consider it necessary.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not think there is any objection to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. The first part of section 10 refers to homesteads hereafter taken up. The proviso refers to those now taken up. One does not relate back in its provisions to the other.

Mr. WINDOM. I have supposed that the bill meant precisely what the Senator from California desires it should mean, and I have no objection to the amendment he proposes so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported. The CHIEF CLERK. In section 10 of the committee's amendment, line 13, after the word "homesteads," it is proposed to insert "by taking contiguous lands."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose it would be proper that some bill of this kind, covering an extension of time for the building of the road, should be passed in order to secure the completion of the road, and also if possible to protect those who have invested largely in the four or five hundred miles that have been completed.

Now I desire to inquire of the Senator who has this bill in charge, as I discover by the report made that the committee have reduced the number of acres of land that was heretofore granted to the extent of eleven million acres, what additional burdens have been placed upon this road by which it may be possible, as it seems to me, that the road may not be completed; and if the Senator in charge will explain how much more this company has got to build in addition to the original main stem, and what the conditions are in relation to any other road taking possession of this grant provided the Northern Pacific Company shall fail to complete the road, and what the conditions are in relation to a combination of roads to take place hereafter, I should be very glad to hear from him. It seems to me that they have imposed large burdens upon this company, much greater than were contained in the original grant, while they have reduced the original grant as asserted in the report by the sum of eleven million acres.

Mr. MITCHELL. In answer to the Senator from Vermont I will state that I do not understand that this bill imposes any burdens whatever in reference to building any branch roads, or any other roads whatever. In fact, so far from imposing burdens on the company, they are absolutely released from the construction of something like three hundred miles of road. There is no provision in this bill from the beginning to the end authorizing the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, or any other company connected with it or connected with this bill, to build any branch road whatever. It simply extends the time for ten years within which they are compelled to construct and complete their main line of road upon certain conditions; for instance, they must resume work within nine months from the passage of this act; they must construct and equip at least one hundred miles a year on the main line, because that is the only line they can construct any road on. It provides where a portion of these hundred miles of road each year shall be constructed. That is all. For instance, it provides that twenty-five miles shall be constructed the first year at or near the mouth of Snake River on the Columbia River, and to be constructed eastward. It also provides that within two years from the passage of this act they shall construct on their main line and as a part of their main line some four or five miles of road beside the Cascades of the Columbia River, and also within two years and a half from the passage of the act that they shall construct and equip as a part of their main line some fourteen or fifteen miles of road around The Dalles of the Columbia River; so that there is no restriction, no imposition, no burden, as I understand it, placed by this bill upon the Northern Pacific Company; none whatever. They are simply to construct one hundred miles each year on their main line of road, and that is all there is of it. There is no branch. Under the original act they were compelled to construct not only a main line down the Columbia River and to Puget Sound, but they were compelled to construct a branch across the Cascade Mountains to Puget Sound. It is not extended to that.

Moreover, I will say to the honorable Senator from Vermont that there is no provision in this bill as I understand it but is consented to by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as it stands now. There were a number of provisions proposed by the bill as originally introduced by myself, and by the bill as reported by the committee in the first instance before its recommitment, to which there was violent opposition made by the company, and it was only because of that opposition and because of the fear the friends of this great enterprise had that they would result in defeating the legislation that the Committee on Railroads asked a recommitment of the bill and made the attempt to reconcile conflicting interests and to tender a bill to the Senate that would receive the approbation of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] striking out the proviso which has been read.

Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered. Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, let the amendment be reported that we may hear what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the following proviso in section 10 of the amendment of the committee:

Provided, further, That all persons who under the restrictions of the existing laws granting lands to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company have taken homesteads of not exceeding eighty acres shall have the privilege of increasing the amount of their said homesteads by taking contiguous lands, so that the aggregate taken by any one person shall not exceed one hundred and sixty acres; this to be done under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope this amendment will not be adopted by the Senate. Certainly the extent of one hundred and sixty acres for a homestead is not too much. Settlers are permitted by the general law of the country to have homesteads to that extent. The only departure from that principle—

Mr. PADDOCK. Not within other railroad grants.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am about to explain. The only departure from that principle is where a settler attempts to take a homestead within a grant of lands made to some railroad. Now if this company will accept this grant and permit the settlers to have one hundred and sixty acres for a homestead when a settler on any of the public lands of the United States can have that amount, why not incorporate that provision in this bill? Why restrict the settler to eighty acres of land on his homestead upon these railroad lands, when a settler upon the public lands can have a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres? What reason can be urged in behalf of the public interests that would require any opposition to such a provision as this in a railroad grant; and if this company is willing to accept such a provision, certainly it is not a privilege to them but it is a privilege to the citizen of the country who wants to go anywhere on the public lands and get a homestead which he can cultivate and upon which and from which he can make a living? To ask a settler to go out upon the public land upon the line of this road and take a homestead of eighty acres, is asking too much of him; and it seems to me that there is no reason why there should be opposition to this proviso.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator from Minnesota could make this provision general and applicable to other grants there would be no objection to it. I agree with him that one hundred and sixty acres is quite little enough for a homestead; but it is a discrimination against States in which there are other grants in favor of this particular section which I should be very sorry to see made. If there is to be a change of principle it should be a general change affecting all the others as well as this.

Mr. McMILLAN. I certainly concur with the Senator from Nebraska in regard to what should be the policy upon all railroad land grants; but we cannot now adopt a general principle in regard to corporations who have existing rights and do not come here and ask for this change. If these other corporations come here and ask for such a change then it will be advisable for Congress to grant it, and I certainly shall go for granting that privilege. But they are not here asking that privilege; and if a general law were passed to the effect suggested by the Senator from Nebraska it would still leave the question open whether or not the particular privilege having been granted to a corporation under its organic law it is affected by a general law passed by Congress upon a subject of the same general character.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota if the railroad companies have any interest in this at all, if it is not a simple question of the disposition of the public lands?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not ask it in the interest of the railroad companies, I ask it in favor of the settler. This is a privilege granted to the settler, and I am in favor of conferring that privilege upon the settler. If any of our citizens choose to emigrate to the West upon the line of this road, I think they are entitled to a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres instead of being restricted to one of eighty acres. I ask not this in favor of any corporation; far from it. It is in the interest of the settler. I apprehend the proviso was inserted for that express purpose, and not in the interest of the corporation; but if the corporation is willing to accept it, certainly we may well confer it.

Mr. TELLER. The corporation has nothing at all to do with this; it has no interest in it.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator will allow me to explain. I merely referred to the corporation being willing to accept it in the sense that they are not here to oppose the granting of this privilege to the settlers on the public lands.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question? Does he not think that it is a hardship to the settler to accept one hundred and sixty acres of land anywhere outside of a railroad grant, and if it be a hardship ought not the difference to be made up at a dollar and a quarter an acre to those who do not get their homesteads within a railroad grant.

Mr. TELLER. My objection to this proviso is simply that it discriminates in favor of the settlers in a particular section of country. All that the Senator from Minnesota has said with reference to the propriety of giving abundance of land to the settler I agree with; but why should you give to settlers on the line of this road what you deny to settlers on the line of every other road that the Government has ever granted a subsidy of land to within the United States? Why give a homestead in Minnesota of one hundred and sixty acres while you deny that privilege to the citizen of Colorado, of Nebraska, of Kansas, of New Mexico, and of many other States and Territories in the Union? All I ask is that we shall legislate here with reference to all the citizens alike. If anybody can show that the citizens of Minnesota and of Dakota, or the people who go there, are entitled to any greater privileges and rights than the people in my State, then I will yield; but, until that is shown, I am opposed to discriminating legislation in favor of the people of any particular section of the United States, whether it is under the pretense of helping a railroad or under the pretense of helping the hardy settlers who go out to settle up the lands of the West. The rule should be uniform, not legislation for one section of the country that you deny to another. If there has been anything in the history of your legislation for a few years that has made ill-feeling and trouble it is this very principle, that you legislate for one section of the country differently from what you legislate for another. I demand that they shall be bound by the same laws on the line of this North Pacific Railroad that they are on the line of the Kansas Pacific or the Union Pacific and other roads in the United States that have received subsidies of lands from the Government. No reason can be given why a different rule should prevail. The land is as rich and as valuable there as in any other portion; acre by acre it is worth ten times as much as the majority of the land that was granted to the Kansas Pacific outside of the State of Kansas, and to the Union Pacific on its whole course outside of the river belt of the Missouri River. There is no reason, then, why we should say here, "You shall have one hundred and sixty acres, while citizens in other sections shall be content with eighty."

Mr. PLUMB. One suggestion that I should like to make in connection with that matter that I have not heard adverted to, is that we are undertaking to legislate in reference to the disposal of the public lands in a bill to which that subject is really not germane. This is a bill, as I have understood it—I have not read it carefully—simply to extend the right of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to acquire these lands for a certain period of years; and incidentally to that the right to control in some way the manner in which they shall dispose of their lands. It seems to me that is a good place to stop, and that we ought not to interfere with the disposal of the public lands within the same limits. It is mixing the legislation up. The main matter under consideration is that which pertains to the Northern Pacific Railroad. Why should that be connected now with a matter in reference to the disposal of the public lands? Why should not this other question as to the increase of the homestead entry, as to the right to enter one hundred and sixty acres within railroad limits, come up by itself?

I may say as pertinent to that suggestion that there is a bill already pending and now being considered by the Committee on Public Lands proposing to do that thing. That is the proper committee to consider it. It is proper that it should be considered as a substantive proposition by itself, not in connection with a railroad grant; and that it seems to me is the one reason why this bill should be amended as proposed.

There is a question, of course, as the Senator from Colorado has suggested, that this is giving privileges to one section of the country that are not given to another; and there are questions which will come up growing out of that; as, for example, where men have already entered and made final entries of eighty acres of land within the limits of this railroad grant, they will be wanting another eighty acres in order to make them equal to those who are to come after them; and that will bring up the question as to what shall be done within other railroad grants, because settlers there will want the same thing. The Committee on Public Lands, no doubt, will consider all those questions together in a manner in which it cannot be properly considered by the Senate in this connection, no previous consideration having specially been given to it by the committee charged with this branch of the public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the committee's amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 4, nays 50; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar under the rule.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to call attention to a point in this bill, so that it may be considered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the regular order be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks that the Senate proceed with this bill until the regular order is called for. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think we ought to proceed with the Calendar. Every day we try to lay aside the Calendar and take up something new. There is nothing made by it. One day's work upon business unobjected to on the Calendar will make great progress with it, and we know that the Senate yesterday evening unanimously said that as soon as we acted on the unobjected cases the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] should call up a bill that he was interested in. I do not see any good reason why we shall not proceed in the order that we a few days ago resolved that we would; and without some very good reason I shall ask that the Senate proceed with the regular order.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not insist on a vote upon that question. We can finish this bill a great deal easier now than we can hereafter; it will take much less time now than if it be laid over. Certainly a bill that interests so large a portion of the country demands the attention of the Senate as much as private bills. We have given two or three days to the consideration of private bills. Why not let us finish this, as it is now before the Senate? It can be done within a very short time. I know of no speeches of any length that are to be made.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Minnesota is wrong when he speaks of private bills. Proceeding to the Calendar is not considering private bills alone. It includes a bill of this character as well as any other bill that is unobjected to. We resolved a few days ago that we would proceed regularly. Now I suggest to my friend from Minnesota, why not go on as we have resolved, and finish up the Calendar, and then take up objected cases, and let this bill come up among others. I shall not insist on the order if other Senators do not. The Senator from Minnesota knows his power over me; he knows that his persuasive power I have never yet resisted.

Mr. WINDOM. If I have any blandishments that I can exercise over the Senator, I hope they will have their effect now, for I should really like very much to have the Senate finish this bill.

Mr. GORDON. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota how much time he thinks it will take?

Mr. WINDOM. A half hour or so ought to finish it. I cannot say how many amendments there will be; but it cannot certainly take long.

Mr. GORDON. Then I think we had better go on and finish it. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senate proceeding with this bill subject to a call for the regular order? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to call the attention of the chairman or some member of the committee reporting this bill to sections 4 and 11. Under section 4 actual settlers are authorized to enter upon these lands and become owners of them, and under certain limitations as to time to purchase them. Now I say very frankly that but for that section I could not vote for this bill. I have seen so much of the evils of allowing large bodies of land to be tied up indefinitely in the States and Territories by railroad corporations and held by them year after year for the purpose of enhancing their value to the injury of the State or Territory where they may be, that, but for this section 4, I would not vote for this bill.

Section 11 authorizes this company to mortgage all its property; to issue bonds "and to secure the same by mortgage on the whole or any part or parts of its railroad and property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions." The query I wish to address to the committee is whether or not under this mortgage when it shall be executed these purchasers will not take subject to the mortgage, and thus in effect section 11 defeat what I conceive to be the good intent of section 4?

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to draw the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill to an omission from the bill, as I understand, that ought to be supplied. I think that when the lands are segregated, set apart to the railroad company so that they know what lands they will get, the railroad should pay taxes upon those lands according to the laws of the State or Territory through which the road passes, the same as any private individual would have to do. If the Senator will turn to page 11, at the last part of section 10, there is this proviso:

Provided, That the grants, privileges, and franchises herein made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are on the express condition that said company shall, within five years from the date of the passage of this act, definitely survey and locate the whole line of their said railroad, and file in the Department of the Interior a map showing such definite location.

By that proviso the railroad company has, after the passage of this act, five years in which to have the lands segregated and set apart; but if we turn further on to section 12 we find this:

That when said company shall sell or contract to sell, or shall convey, except by way of mortgage or deed of trust, to aid in the construction of its railroad, any of said granted lands after the same shall be earned by said company as aforesaid so as to entitle them to sell or convey the same, the lands so sold, contracted, or conveyed shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory within which the same may be situated.

So that this railroad company pays no taxes on these lands at all, to either State or Territory, until it shall have sold them, and then the private citizen of course, and not the railroad company, pays taxes upon them. I do not see, after the great donation to this road that we made by the original act and the extension of time in this bill, why, after the lands have been segregated and set apart to the railroad company as they are by the last proviso of section 10, the railroad company themselves should not pay taxes to the States and Territories through which they pass. Why is it, I ask the Senator having charge of the bill, that as soon as the company parts with the title and the private citizen obtains the title, then the private citizen pays taxes to the State or Territory? Why should the distinction be made between the railroad company and the private citizen? I ask the Senator who has charge of this bill what is the reason of this distinction? What is the reason that the railroad company, as soon as land is set apart to it and it owns specific land, should not pay taxes on that land?

With these views of mine, I have prepared an amendment to come in at the close of section 10:

And provided further, That when the map shall thus be filed all said lands shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory within which the same may be situated.

So that it will read, as amended:

Provided, That the grants, privileges, and franchises herein made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are on the express condition that said company shall, within five years from the date of the passage of this act, definitely survey and locate the whole line of their said railroad, and file in the Department of the Interior a map showing such definite location: And provided further, That when the map shall thus be filed all said lands shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory within which the same may be situated.

I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would say, in answer to the Senator from West Virginia, that the provisions of the bill upon this general subject of taxation are similar to the provisions in other bills which have been passed heretofore in aid of the construction of railroads. It is said that to compel the company to pay taxes on all unearned land—and that is the proposition of the Senator from West Virginia—would be to impose a burden on the company which would be very oppressive indeed. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, if I understand it correctly, is to the effect that whenever these lands are segregated by the filing of the map of definite location in the Department of the Interior, then all lands included in the grant, whether earned or unearned, are to be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory in which they may happen to be. That raises the very important question whether we should impose that restriction upon this company when the very object of the legislation is to aid the company in the construction of this great national enterprise.

Mr. BAYARD. The object of this amendment, as I understand it, seems to be a very fair and just one. It is to subject the corporate property in land to the same taxes that individual property would be subject to; and further than that it gives them five years exemption absolutely. If an individual settler shall become the owner of any portion of this domain, eo instanti he is subject to taxation upon his land. It certainly would be equitable that property held in corporate title or by artificial persons should be subject to the same taxation as that held by individuals, natural persons. Therefore, unless some such modification be made as is suggested by the honorable Senator from West Virginia, by which there may be at some period a subjection to local taxation of lands held by the company in its corporate capacity, it seems to me the bill should not pass.

While the United States Government desire to facilitate the creation of railroads in the country, they do not propose that the States whether actually organized or States in embryo shall be deprived of the natural fund by which they may support themselves and their governments by taxation. I am therefore inclined to consider it reasonably just that some such amendment as that offered by the Senator from West Virginia should be adopted now, unless it is expressly understood that the corporate property is not to bear its share of burden in any community that applies to the property of individuals.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can readily see the force of the proposition to make the lands subject to taxation after they have been earned and patented to the company; but the proposition to subject all the unearned lands to taxation the moment they are withdrawn by the filing of a map would certainly impose a very heavy burden on the company, and it would be to inaugurate a policy in reference to this matter that never has been insisted on in any former legislation of this character.

Mr. HEREFORD. The amendment that I offer is to come in at the end of section 10, and is in these words:

And provided further, That when the map shall thus be filed all said lands shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory within which the same may be situated.

The Senator from Oregon says that these lands should not be taxed until the railroad company has earned them; but we know as a practical fact that the citizens of California and Nevada and the Territories east of them had to deal with this question in connection with the present Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies. The States and Territories through which these railroads pass are deprived, and have been, of power to tax the lands of these companies. The practical operation in these cases—and I have no doubt it will be here—is that, if you wait as suggested by the Senator from Oregon until a patent is taken out, the railroad companies will not take their patents out at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. Compel them to take them out.

Mr. HEREFORD. There is no provision in this bill to compel them to take them out.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to a provision of that kind.

Mr. HEREFORD. There is no provision in this bill to compel the railroad company to take out patents at any time. There is provision in it to have the lands segregated, surveyed, and a map filed showing what lands they claim, so that no settler can go thereupon without becoming an intruder on the railroad lands; but there is no provision in this bill compelling the company to take out patents at any time; so that we do not know as the bill stands to-day when the company will commence to pay tax on these lands at all. The framer of this bill has been very careful to make the private individual, as soon as he buys from the company, although it may not have gotten a patent, pay taxes eo instanti on his making a purchase. If the private individual should pay tax, why not, the moment before the deed to him is executed from the railroad company, require the railroad company itself to pay it? Why should not the large incorporated property-holder pay taxes as well as the private individual? I suggest to the gentlemen who live in those States and Territories that in this way they can better than any other obtain taxes from the railroad companies to help support their States and Territories.

Mr. WINDOM. A single word in answer to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia. It would tax the lands before the road was completed. The road might never be completed, and if it never should be it would simply transfer this strip of Government land into the hands of tax speculators, which I think would not be a good thing to do.

Mr. HEREFORD. I do not think that is sufficient, because it would not pass the title. The Senator from Minnesota is too good a lawyer to say that by their paying a tax on it that would pass the title. The title has not yet passed out of the General Government.

Mr. WINDOM. No, Mr. President.

Mr. HEREFORD. The patent has not yet been issued, and all the railroad would lose by that would be the taxes they had paid to the various States and Territories; but the title would not have passed by any machinery whatever, because the title yet remains in the General Government, no patent having issued.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator proposes to authorize the Territories to tax these lands before the road is built, as a matter of course we must presume that the Territories will have some way of enforcing that taxation. There is no other way but by sale; and if his amendment would have any effect at all, it would have the effect to authorize the Territories to sell the public lands and hand them over to speculators.

Mr. McMILLAN. The General Government parting with her title.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota, granting the power of taxation in the territorial Legislature or in the Legislature of the State in which these lands may lie, does not that premise an ownership, and must not that ownership be in the company before the company can be called upon for the tax? Then will not the case stand thus, that you are imposing upon the corporate owner the same duty of responding to his share of the burdens of government that you ask of the individual? Is there any hardship in it? And can there be a taxation upon this corporation for which it and its property will be responsible, until the fact of ownership has accrued under this grant?

Mr. WINDOM. Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia, yes; the land would be subject to taxation upon the filing of the map; but the company might never complete the road, and consequently we authorize taxation upon the Government land and land that may always be owned by the Government.

Mr. BAYARD. If I understand the object of the honorable Senator from West Virginia, it is simply to put the corporate owner of real estate upon the level of the individual owner. Indeed I think the present amendment is more favorable to the corporate owner, because it provides for the possibility of a postponement of the assessment or collection of taxes from him for five years, whereas, as I understand, if to-morrow any individual natural person purchases land within these Territories, ipso facto he would become liable for taxation to the Territory.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Delaware will observe that if the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia is adopted it is a consent upon the part of the Government of the United States that these lands, public lands of the United States, shall be taxed. The tax is in rem, and not upon the corporation. A tax upon land is a tax upon the land itself, and of course all the proceedings under the tax will be against the land, and the land may be disposed of, the General Government assenting to the taxation of her own land. That it is entirely competent for her to do; and all these lands would pass under a title of that kind to whoever should become the purchaser at a tax sale.

Mr. HEREFORD. All there is in that is what the Senator from Minnesota is very familiar with, as are all Senators from the Western States. I know especially in the States of California and Nevada all that would amount to would be the taxing of the possessory right of the railroad. In the States of California and Nevada to-day, they tax the possessory right of parties there upon Government property. Persons are settled all over those States and Territories upon the Government land, and the States tax their possessory right.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator will look at his amendment he will see that it is not a tax upon the possessor's right; it is a tax upon the land; it is a permission of the General Government that these lands belonging to the General Government shall be taxed, and of course any title obtained under a proceeding resulting in a tax sale would vest the title in the purchaser.

Mr. HEREFORD. It seems to me this matter ought to go over for a day anyhow.

Mr. McMILLAN. To put the lands along this continual line of railroad in such a position that tax speculators could acquire title to them would be a proceeding that I should not be willing to consent to.

Mr. TELLER. It does seem to me, Mr. President, that neither this railroad company nor any one else ought to pay taxes on land until it becomes the owner of the land. Until it has earned the land it seems to me the company ought not to pay taxes on it. After it has earned the land, or at least within a reasonable time after, it should pay taxes. I had proposed to strike out the twelfth section and insert in place of that a provision that after a certain time the lands should be subject to taxation. I think the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia goes too far in taxing the land in accordance with the rule adopted in Nevada and California, before the railway company had a legal title to the land. I think the amendment ought to be modified in that particular, or else it ought to be rejected.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that this section 12 is a fair provision in such a bill. It is to be remembered that this company takes nothing in the way of a subsidy. Nothing has been granted to it except this grant of lands. From these it must receive all the proceeds for building the road. Section 12 provides that this land shall be subject to taxation when the company shall sell or contract to sell the land or shall convey it, except by way of mortgage or deed of trust. This exception must be made in order to make the lands at all available. Certainly they could not be used at all if they were taxed to a greater extent than is provided by this section.

Now, with such a grant as is proposed here, this company proposes to build a line of road across this continent, benefiting all the communities through which it shall pass, conferring greater benefits upon the Territories, upon the political communities who will be affected by it than any benefit they could receive in the way of a tax upon the lands. They will receive benefits indirectly from the construction of this road, which will more than compensate them for this privilege or reservation, partially reserved from taxation as these lands are; and it seems to me that the provision in section 12 is a fair one, fair to the settlers, fair to the political communities along the line of this road, and fair to the road itself.

Mr. HEREFORD. I think enough has been developed in the discussion of this matter to satisfy the Senate that there ought to be some provision here, whether it take the form of the amendment I offered or that of the Senator from Colorado or some other, to compel this railroad company to take out a patent at some time and to fix a time when the rights of the States and Territories to tax the lands shall commence. Therefore I think the bill had better go over until to-morrow and then it can be completed.

Mr. MITCHELL. The object of the honorable Senator from West Virginia and also of the honorable Senator from Delaware is, as they have stated, to secure the same liability on the part of the company as on the part of the settlers, to make their liability to taxation the same. The amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia does not do that. The bill does not provide as it stands now that all lands as soon as contracted or sold to a settler or any person else shall be subject to taxation, but only those that are sold that have been earned by the company. Now, the proposition of the amendment is to make the company pay taxes on all lands, earned and unearned, within the limits of the grant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment of the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senator's amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will modify it, at the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, so as to read:

And provided further, That when the map shall thus be filed all said lands, when the same shall have been earned by the said company, shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory within which the same may be situated.

Mr. WINDOM. I admit the plausibility of the argument of the Senator from West Virginia; but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the railroad grants which have been made hitherto the provision he seeks to insert has not been imposed. In some cases in my own State the courts have held that the lands were subject to taxation under the general provision. Now, I am perfectly willing that the same conditions that have existed heretofore shall exist with reference to this road; but I want to say to the Senate that, if the object in passing this bill be to enable the company to raise money to construct the road, I think the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia would defeat that object, for this reason: no one would buy the bonds of a company whose lands were subject to be sold out under taxation by one of the Territories. I do not think anybody would purchase the bonds under those conditions. We know that legislation in the Territories is not always of the best considered character, and everybody to whom the securities of the company should be offered would see that under this amendment the lands might be sold out from under them. I think that we might safely rest this, as other companies have rested, upon the provisions which have existed in other bills, and leave the courts to construe this power of taxation as they have done in other cases. I hope the amendment will be voted down, and I will not take any more time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HEREFORD called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. So far as any irregularity of legislation by the Territories is concerned, that is always within the remedial power of Congress. If any discrimination of a hostile character against this corporation or its property shall be made by a territorial Legislature, it will be within the power of Congress to remedy it always. I think that disposes of that objection. But I submit to the Senate and to the honorable Senator from Minnesota whether there is not a very grave question at stake here in this amendment. It is the exemption of any property within an organized government from a fair contribution to the support of that government. It seems to me very plain that as the power of taxation is necessary, is essential to the maintenance of any autonomy worthy of the name of government—

Mr. WINDOM. May I interrupt the Senator by asking a question at that point?

Mr. BAYARD. I was about to state a proposition, but I will hear the Senator.

Mr. WINDOM. Excuse me.

Mr. BAYARD. Therefore it is a very serious question, when you shall establish any property within a government not subject to its jurisdiction as to taxation. I think it is anti-republican; I think it is dangerous under any form, and, with the amendment as it has now been modified by the Senator from West Virginia, the company is placed precisely, as to its corporate property, on a level with the natural person who owns property in the same jurisdiction. If I wanted—a desire which I am very far from entertaining—to create a popular jealousy against any class of property-owners within a community, I should arbitrarily exempt them from their fair share of the public burdens, and when the inequity of that exemption should come to be known by the community, depend upon it they would find means in some way or other to make that property less secure. There can be no hardship in insisting in the present case upon the correlative duty of taxation and protection. Wherever there is the expense gone to of a government, then every description of property within that jurisdiction should bear its fair share of the burdens necessary to carry it on. Corporate property should bear the same and no more than the property of natural persons.

Mr. WINDOM. The question I wished to ask the Senator from Delaware was this: his argument is based upon the theory that this bill does exempt these lands; I do not find the provision exempting them.

Mr. BAYARD. Then this amendment goes no further than to subject to taxation the corporate property equally with private property.

Mr. WINDOM. But the Senator assumed that there was something in the bill which positively exempted them from taxation.

Mr. BAYARD. If this shall provide for that expressly, it does no harm.

Mr. WINDOM. No. The difference is this: without this amendment we say nothing on the subject; at least we do not prohibit taxation; there is no express exemption; but with this amendment you expressly provide that these lands shall be put under the control of the Territories and the States for taxation.

Mr. BAYARD. If the principle of the amendment is unobjectionable, I can see no reason why it should not be adopted.

Mr. WINDOM. The principle of the amendment is very objectionable, and the Senator's argument is objectionable too, because it is based on an assumption that does not exist in the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I can see no sound objection to it.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, as I shall vote against this amendment, I ought to give my reason, and I shall do so very briefly. Here is a bankrupt company coming to us asking for an extension of its time in order to be able to complete the road. Now, in giving them that extension, it seems to be desirable and necessary not to inflict upon them new terms, differing entirely from anything that has been heretofore prescribed, as I understand, for any railroad grant. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Railroads if I am right?

Mr. MITCHELL. What does the Senator refer to?

Mr. EATON. I refer to the taxation of the lands granted to railroads as being different in this case from the exercise of any such power by Congress heretofore.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know that I understand the Senator.

Mr. EATON. Here it is proposed to tax property unearned as belonging to the railroad company.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is not the proposition of this bill; that is the proposition of the amendment.

Mr. EATON. I know it is, and so far as I know it has never been legislation which Congress has heretofore approved.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand the Senator now. It is entirely different from anything ever heretofore proposed.

Mr. HEREFORD. I expressly provide in the amendment that they are to be subject to State and territorial taxation when they shall have earned a right to a patent for this land; or, in other words, that when they are in equity the owners of the land they shall pay taxes on it.

Mr. EATON. And I understand that the same general law which heretofore has been made to apply to other railroad companies under similar circumstances will be made to apply to this road by the bill in this respect. That is all that I desire. I never shall give a vote hereafter, if I should live and a vote should come up, to grant lands for railroad purposes so that there will ever be a discussion in this body with regard to taxation upon those lands. I never have done it, and I never will do it; but I do not desire to inflict a punishment upon this company that comes here and asks for a concession at our hands.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not precisely understand what the Senator from West Virginia means by saying "when the land shall have been earned."

Mr. HEREFORD. When they shall have conformed to the stipulations of the contract with the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. And received title to the land?

Mr. HEREFORD. When they shall be entitled to demand a title; when they shall have done all that is required by the Government; then they have the right to demand a patent. When that period has arrived, although they may not ask for the patent, as they do not in the case of other railroad companies, yet if they have earned their right to it, then the amendment provides that they shall pay taxes upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose the lands have not been surveyed?

Mr. HEREFORD. The previous part of the provision provides that they shall be surveyed and the map filed. The Senator certainly has not read the first part of this same provision.

Mr. SARGENT. The surveys proceed in accordance with our appropriations, sometimes large, sometimes small, for the last two or three years so small as to be scarcely enough to pay the office expenses, and complaint comes from the whole country they cannot get surveys made. Suppose that policy of stinginess in appropriations for surveying land continues, what then? How are people to acquire title to their homesteads? You arrest the settlement of the States and Territories. If that policy continues a few years more, of what advantage is it to put a brutum fulmen in the bill that there shall be surveys? You put the company in the position of having earned the land and not able to get a patent to it from the Government, and you say nevertheless it shall be taxed therefor and be liable to be sold out by territorial authority.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from California has said that there is a brutum fulmen in this amendment of mine and has said that by the stinginess of Congress these lands may not be surveyed. The proviso says, that has already been adopted—

Mr. ALLISON. What proviso?

Mr. HEREFORD. This:

Provided, That the grants, privileges, and franchises herein made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are on the express condition that said company shall, within five years from the date of the passage of this act, definitely survey and locate the whole line of their said railroad, and file in the Department of the Interior a map showing such definite location.

So that I say, in answer to the Senator from California, it does not depend upon the stinginess of Congress; but the railroad company itself is compelled, after we have donated the lands, to survey them, so that it does not depend, and its right to a patent for the land cannot be thwarted by the stinginess of Congress. By the proviso the committee has reported, the company is compelled to survey these lands, and the time when it is entitled to the patent depends upon its own act.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator from West Virginia is entirely in error in regard to this bill requiring the survey of this land by the railroad company, or by the Government, or by anybody else. The provision of the bill which he has read on page 11 provides for the location of the railway line, not for the survey of the public lands. It is simply the location of the line, the track, and has nothing whatever to do with the survey of the lands. That location probably will be made twenty years before a good deal of this land will be surveyed by the Government; and if his amendment be adopted, the railroad company will be in the attitude of paying taxes upon land that had never been surveyed at all.

Mr. HEREFORD. It may not be sectionized, but the part they are entitled to has been surveyed by them, for the proviso compels them to do it. There may not be a governmental survey and sectionizing of it, but the provision is—there can be no mistake about it—

That the grants, privileges, and franchises herein made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are on the express condition that said company shall, within five years from the date of the passage of this act, definitely survey and locate—

Mr. McMILLAN. Survey what?

Mr. HEREFORD. "The whole line of their said railroad."

Mr. McMILLAN. "The line" of the road.

Mr. HEREFORD. Then the general terms of the bill fix where their lands are.

Mr. MITCHELL. But the survey is had simply of the line of the road.

Mr. HEREFORD. Does not the bill provide for that?

Mr. SARGENT. There my friend from West Virginia has demonstrated that he does not understand the bill, and that perhaps is the best argument against his amendment. This is simply a provision that within five years the company shall name through what valleys and over what hills they design to run their road; that is, they shall definitely survey and locate the line of their road, a narrow line indicating where the railway track shall subsequently be built. The hardship I pointed out to him was that if there was any provision in the bill that the United States should survey this land, nevertheless on account of pinching appropriations the United States was not surveying these lands or any others scarcely in all the States and Territories. The appropriation for such purposes is pinched down so low that there is one universal complaint against the false economy of Congress, and I say it is retarding the settlement of the Western States and Territories, involving the land titles in inextricable confusion, and producing embarrassments of various kinds.

The proposition is this: the company builds twenty miles of its road, and is entitled under this bill if it passes to receive patents therefor from the Government. Then by the amendment it is put within the power of the territorial Legislature or the State Legislature to impose taxes upon the land, because in the language of the bill they have earned that, they have built the road. Meantime the Government has not surveyed the land, sectionized it, so as to separate the odd from the even sections, so that the railroad can know which belongs to it, and it cannot sell the lands. It has a mass of inert land upon its hands, unsectionized, unsurveyed, upon which it is taxed enough to bankrupt any company, with no opportunity to derive any revenue from it unless it sells it at hazard. There is the trouble with this amendment. If the amendment went only so far as to say that after the land shall have been sectionized by the Government of the United States and the parties are entitled to their patents, then they shall be liable to local taxation, there would be no objection to it; I think it would be a wholesome provision, and I should vote for it; but providing that they shall be taxed merely because they have earned the land, when they cannot receive it from the Government, shows that the amendment is wrong.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I did not mean to vote for any bill granting lands or subsidies to railroad companies, certainly not with the lights now before me; and I sympathize with the apparent object of the Senator from West Virginia; and yet I cannot vote for his amendment, and for a reason that seems to me very obvious.

This, as the Senator from Connecticut said, is an insolvent corporation; it is a corporation into whose losses, unfortunately, great numbers of meritorious people have been drawn. I can speak advisedly in that regard, because the people of the State of New York of almost all sorts and conditions suffer seriously by buying and holding the bonds of this corporation. The purpose of the bill, not speaking alone in the interest of this unfortunate corporation, but speaking for the beneficiaries—I hope they will be beneficiaries at some time—is to attempt to give an opportunity of retrieve, and thus it extends the time within which they may complete their work and re-establish themselves. It donates no added lands, but diminishes the quantity of lands to which the corporation was originally entitled. It imposes, as I am assured by Senators better instructed than I am, conditions advantageous to settlers and advantageous to the Government, not found in the original bill.

Now stopping my statement here, it must be perfectly manifest to every Senator that the proposal is to extend that measure of relief found in added time and somewhat restricted opportunity to this corporation. If that be our purpose, surely as the Senator from Connecticut said, we do not wish to make a vain motion, we do not wish to pass a bill in the name of relief for this multitude of parties concerned and at the same time throttle and defeat it.

Then what does the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia propose? Taking hold of the words that the company are to survey the line of their road—not lands, but the line of their road—he hinges upon that provision a condition that that survey being made and in the language of the amendment they having earned these lands (and I confess for one I am unable to construe that word, I think I can put at the moment half a dozen cases that might arise in which the Senator himself would have great doubt as to the operation of that word "earned") but no matter, he proposes when they have surveyed their line that all the lands to which they shall then become constructively entitled shall be subjected to the absolute will of the Territory in which those lands may be. Now every Senator knows that in the States and in the best conducted States there is among assessors, naturally enough, an inclination to distinguish invidiously against all non-residents, and especially against corporations, and still more especially absent corporations. So that the Senator in the beginning, should his amendment prevail, would subject them to the will, to the hostility—using a word which I believe some other Senator has employed—of all the territorial Legislatures, the majorities, the factions, the coalitions which from time to time may hold sway in those Legislatures. It is perfectly obvious to me, it seems to me it must be obvious to the Senator, that that is a provision in derogation and in defeat of the object of the bill. The purpose is, in common phrase, to give this corporation another chance. It is perfectly idle to assume to do that and hope that the bondholders will ever realize some part of their great losses if at the same time we so fetter them, we put manacles upon them so that we know that they cannot avail themselves of the provisions of the bill. I suggest, therefore, to my honorable friend that he and I are bound by our votes to express our judgments whether, with the existing state of case, we ought to give another opportunity to this corporation or not; if not, vote down the bill; if we should, do not be Indian-givers; do not give a thing and take it back by the provisions with which you impede it and load it down.

Then it seems to me this bill, as Senators have insisted, is a fair exception to the general rule of judgment which I hope prevails in the Senate, to set our faces like flint against subsidies for railroads, against fresh grants to railroads. I do not say that some case might not arise which would be an exception. I speak of the general rule. Here is not a grant, but it is the continuance of a restricted opportunity for this corporation, to retrieve itself not so much as to retrieve the fortunes of unnumbered people upon whom great calamities have fallen. It is within my knowledge that in the State of New York persons not of that class most able to take care of themselves were induced by proper means or by others—I do not know—to invest in these bonds nearly the whole, if not absolutely the whole, of the earnings which they had accumulated or which had been bequeathed to them. In the interest of those persons, saying nothing about this corporation, if there is an opportunity upon fair and just terms for them to work out the original destiny of this grant, let them do it, and particularly I say let them do it under a bill which has already, as Senators familiar with it assure us, numerous safeguards which were not originally found in the act under which they originally proceeded.

I shall vote for the bill upon that understanding; and I hope the honorable Senator from West Virginia will see that his amendment is so far in hostility to that general purpose that although we may all sympathize with his wish in that regard, he may see that he ought to withhold it in this instance.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has not satisfied me; he may have satisfied the rest of the Senate; but he has not given me sufficient reasons why the property of railroad companies should not be dealt with exactly as the property of private individuals; in other words, when they own land or are entitled to a deed therefrom from the General Government, I do not see why they should not be compelled to pay taxes the same as a private individual.

Mr. CONKLING. Will my honorable friend let me interrupt him for a moment? Can he put any case, whether the Government be the grantor or anybody else be the grantor, in which taxes are visited upon heirs or descendants or any parties until they become seized, until the title inures to their benefit. Does the Senator know of a case of taxes imposed upon an incorporeal right, at some future date to become possessed of land? Does the Senator know such a case?

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from New York is too good a lawyer to think that that is a parallel case. In the first place I will try to restate the question that the Senator puts to me. Do I know of any instance where the heirs or the devisees of an estate are taxed before they come into possession of it or have the title? I do not know that I do know a case where the heirs or devisees are so taxed; but I will put this question as an answer to the Senator from New York: Does he not know that the property is taxed which those parties inherit? In other words, if A died and devised certain real and personal property to B, C, and D, although B, C, and D, the devisees, may not co nomine pay taxes, the property itself pays taxes; and that is all that we ask here, that this property shall pay these taxes.

Mr. ALLISON. The property belongs to the United States.

Mr. HEREFORD. The property does not belong to the United States as soon as these parties have gained the title.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I desire to suggest to the Senator from West Virginia one difficulty in his way. He must recognize the fact that it is impossible to tax these lands as the lands of the company until they are identified. It is but a mere floating right until the Government has surveyed the lands into townships and sections so that the Government can identify its own alternate sections and so that the alternate sections of the company also may be ascertained. Until then it is utterly impracticable to impose any tax whatever upon the lands. That I think must be evident to every one. The company certainly have no authority to survey the public lands of the United States for the United States and to establish their principal meridians, their township and their range lines; nor is it likely the Government would ever give to any corporation any such power. I suggest this as one of the difficulties in the way of the amendment as it is now worded. If the Senator wishes to make his amendment specific and to make it practicable at all, he should make the lands taxable when the company become entitled to a patent.

Mr. HEREFORD. That is exactly what my amendment does, if the Senator from Michigan will allow me.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I understood the Senator's amendment to be when they had earned the land.

Mr. HEREFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. They may earn the lands five or ten or fifteen years before the Government surveys a foot of them, and those lands that are not yet surveyed certainly cannot be taxed. There is the difficulty. They cannot become entitled to their patent until the lands are surveyed, so that they can be identified.

Mr. HEREFORD. That brings us back to right where the whole discussion started. In the latter part of section 12, to which I have drawn the attention of the Senate, is the provision—I will read the whole section—

That when said company shall sell or contract to sell, or shall convey, except by way of mortgage or deed of trust, to aid in the construction of its railroad, any of said granted lands after the same shall be earned by said company—

The very language that I use with regard to the railroad; I will go back again:

Sec. 12. That when said company shall sell or contract to sell, or shall convey, except by way of mortgage or deed of trust, to aid in the construction of its railroad, any of said granted lands after the same shall be earned by said company as aforesaid so as to entitle them to sell or convey the same, the lands so sold, contracted, or conveyed shall be subject to taxation.

So that in the hands of a private citizen the lands are subject to taxation by the terms of this bill, subject to taxation when the railroad company shall have earned them. I only desired to have the same restriction "when they shall have earned them" applied to the railroad company that is applied by the bill to the private citizen.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what he will tax before the Government surveys have been made?

Mr. HEREFORD. Allow me to ask the Senator from Michigan how they will tax the private citizen under that section.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. They can tax neither until there has been a survey to identify the land taxed.

Mr. MITCHELL. The answer to the Senator from West Virginia is that there will be no contracts made until the lands are surveyed.

Mr. HEREFORD. I do not know about that.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate, but to say that I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia; and, so far from misunderstanding its import, I think he has absolutely demonstrated that the amendment is totally impracticable, for the reason that it is impossible to tax these lands until they are surveyed. That must be evident. Now, the Government is to survey the lands. Here are two thousand miles of country for an extent forty miles in width, and no portion of the lands can be identified until the Government places its surveys there.

Mr. BAYARD. Then they cannot be taxed.

Mr. ALLISON. Then they cannot be taxed; but in the mean time they may be absolutely earned by the company; and that is the difficulty with the amendment, because, the moment the railway is completed in a given number of sections, that moment the company has earned the land. But the lands cannot be taxed until they are surveyed by the Government, and when they are they may be sold by the railway company; and even under section 12 those lands cannot be surveyed until the Government surveys are applied to them.

Mr. HEREFORD. I think lands that this railroad company can mortgage or put a deed of trust upon can and ought to be taxed. They have a right under this bill to mortgage or put a deed of trust on this whole line of road and all the lands; and if they have a right to mortgage or put a deed of trust on the land, why not tax that land which they mortgage, why not tax that which they put a deed of trust upon? They have got to find something to mortgage. They can identify it well enough to place a mortgage upon it; they can identify it well enough to put a deed of trust upon it; and if it can be identified well enough for that purpose, why can it not be well enough identified to allow the States and Territories to tax it, to tax the very thing that they mortgage?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator will allow me, I will answer that question. A mere right, a mere floating right to land not yet identified by a particular location, is subject to mortgage. It can be mortgaged; but it is mortgaged as a mere floating right, and it does not become a mortgage on the land itself until that land is identified by an authorized survey. That is the difference.

Mr. HEREFORD. Do I understand the Senator from Michigan to say that when they give this mortgage it is not a mortgage on land?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. It is not a mortgage on land strictly. It does not touch any specific piece or parcel of land.

Mr. HEREFORD. But is it not a mortgage on land?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. It is a mortgage on a mere right to have some particular tract of land to a certain amount set out by a survey, and when thus set out it will be and will operate as a mortgage of the land itself, but not before.

Mr. HEREFORD. Does not this mortgage and do not all similar mortgages profess to mortgage land? They do not profess to mortgage a possessory right, an illusory something; they profess to mortgage land.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. It may profess what it pleases, and so you may profess to tax land when the land is not ascertained by a survey and the grant is to consist of alternate sections of land when it is surveyed. But let me ask the Senator this question: Suppose land is sold under a tax of that kind, what sort of a title would the Senator get if he bought it off? Can he tell me where his land is?

Mr. HEREFORD. I cannot tell where the identical land is.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Then it is not his land.

Mr. HEREFORD. I can find no trouble in giving the States the right to tax that land according to the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the phrase used by the honorable Senator from West Virginia, that the lands shall be taxed only when they have been earned by the company, seems to me to be a term of clear signification. In order to ascertain what you mean by "earned" you refer to the land grant, and by that grant ascertain that pari passu with the building of the road, the title to certain lands shall accrue to the corporation, and when they have performed certain conditions precedent they shall become the owners of a certain body of land. Therefore it is not difficult of ascertainment; it is not a vague and uncertain phrase to say that taxation shall follow the period of the earning of the land. I think there can be no obscurity, because the terms of the act itself explain it. Now it is very plain that if there shall be such a lack of power to identify the land that is to be taxed, then the power of taxation will not be exerted, then the tax will not be levied and it will not be paid, and no hardships whatever can accrue to the company.

There was thrown out just now by the Senator from New York the suggestion that there should be a sense of personal sympathy accompanying our legislation on this subject, because the land grants, made, I may say, with such recklessness to this company, have entirely failed in their object, and because their mismanagement or misfortune has brought bankruptcy and ruin upon a vast body of the most deserving citizens, and that therefore we should exempt this property from the ordinary burdens to which property everywhere else is liable, as a gratuity to a great body of distressed citizens. I respectfully demur to that.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether or not in all instances heretofore that has not been the case, and that any departure from that would be an exception distinguishing against this company?

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that this bill is in substance the recreation of a new corporation. The old corporation, whether by fault or misfortune, has become practically defunct, and all the property, franchises, powers, privileges, and advantages which were of the old corporation are hereby vested in a new one in order that there shall be a new start, free and unembarrassed from the calamities caused by prior mismanagement or misfortune, as the case may be. It seems to me when we are providing for that and providing for it by a mere gratuitous act, if there were any omissions, any want of care in the acts that preceded this in regard to the original Northern Pacific Company, we should take care to supply them.

Mr. McMILLAN. But I referred not to the original company under this grant, but to other railroad corporations to which land grants have been made. That was the reference.

Mr. BAYARD. I think that this act should stand or fall by its own merits. I do not think the demerits of other legislation should be suffered to control this present act. I do not propose now to speak of the recklessness with which Congress has legislated in respect to the public domain and the public credit. The past I suppose cannot be recalled; but it may teach us something for the future; and now when it is proposed to establish in these embryo States a class of property which shall have the right to claim protection from the laws and shall not be called upon to respond for any portion of the public burden that does so protect them, I must enter my protest and against it I shall record my vote. The grant is munificent enough without creating a class of property that shall not be responsible for its fair share of public expenses.

I believe the amendment of the honorable Senator from West Virginia as now modified by him will prevent the assessment or the collection of one dollar of tax upon this property until it is as capable of identification and of subjection to taxation as the property of any private individual, and I do not think that more should be asked for the corporate property than for the property of natural persons, but that both should respond alike to a fair share of the public burdens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to the committee's amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Is this amendment open to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I move to amend so that the section shall read as follows:

That when said lands shall have been surveyed and the company shall have become entitled to a patent for the same, they shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or territory within which they are situated.

Mr. HEREFORD. I accept that amendment. That will carry out the very idea.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I had prepared a similar amendment to take the place of section 12.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to vote for the bill, but I cannot do so if the lands of the company are exempt from taxation.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where does the Senator from Tennessee propose that the amendment shall come in?

Mr. BAILEY. I propose to strike out all after the word "when" the second word in the twelfth section, down to the word "conveyed" in the sixth line, and insert this.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will withdraw the amendment which I offered so that the Senator from Tennessee can offer the one that he has indicated. It meets my view.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the amendment be reported so that we may understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will please send his amendment to the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say only one word. I wish to vote for this bill, because I think it is fair and right that the persons who have been encouraged by an act of Congress to invest capital to the amount of $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 in the endeavor to build this Northern Pacific Railroad shall not forfeit all their rights and forfeit all their capital simply because a great misfortune has befallen the country, simply because they have lost their rights under former acts of Congress by reason of commercial disaster. But it seems to me that when this railroad company shall have become entitled to these lands, so that they have vested, or by any act of their own the title may vest in them, they should be subject to the same laws, the same impositions, the same taxation, and the same burdens with the people of the States or Territories in which the railroad lands may be located; and I for one, shall never consent to vote for any bill that will give to a corporation powers, rights, and privileges, not necessarily incident to the corporate existence, that are not accorded to individuals. Therefore, I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ALLISON. That is so essentially different from the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia that it seems to me it can be agreed to without the yeas and nays. I see no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call for the yeas and nays will be recalled by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, I ask that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the twelfth section, commencing in line 1, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Said company shall sell or contract to sell or shall convey, except by way of mortgage or deed of trust, to aid in the construction of its railroad, any of said granted lands, after the same shall be earned by said company as aforesaid so as to entitle them to sell or convey the same, the lands so sold, contracted, or conveyed;

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The lands shall have been surveyed and the company shall have become entitled to patents for the same, they;

So as to make the section read:

That when the lands shall have been surveyed and the company shall have become entitled to patents for the same, they shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory within which the same may be situated.

Mr. MITCHELL. I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee if he has any objection to inserting after the word "surveyed" the words "by the Government." I think it will be satisfactory to all concerned if he inserts those words.

Mr. BAILEY. Unless the bill provides or some previous legislation provides that these lands shall be surveyed by the companies themselves and not by the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand the previous legislation provides they shall be surveyed by the Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Otherwise those words would make the amendment inoperative altogether.

Mr. HEREFORD. Unless I am misinformed as to the law, it is true that the General Government surveys the lands. It reserves always that right, but it surveys them at the expense of the company. That I believe is the general law. There is a law of Congress that does provide that while it is the duty of the General Government, and she reserves to herself the power, to survey these lands, yet it is to be done at the expense of the company.

Mr. MITCHELL. That would not touch this question, would not affect it at all.

Mr. HEREFORD. I think it would, unless it be said "surveyed by the Government at the expense of the railroad company."

Mr. WINDOM. No, Mr. President, I cannot consent to that proposition. I would rather have the vote on the amendment as it is.

Mr. HEREFORD. Why not?

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand the Senator from Tennessee assents to the proposition to insert the words "by the Government of the United States." Certainly there can be no objection to that.

Mr. BAILEY. My assent was given conditionally, as I do not understand what the former legislation upon the subject may have been. I understood it to be asserted in debate here that it was provided by former legislation that the lands should be surveyed by the company.

Mr. HEREFORD. Surveyed by the General Government, but at the expense of the company.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not aware of any provision of law by which railroad companies are permitted to make Government surveys. I apprehend that the Government, through its Congress, would never permit a railroad company to survey the public lands into subdivisions when the railroad company was to receive the lands that were thus surveyed. Certainly the Government has reserved that right to itself.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that nobody has asserted that right in the company. I have distinctly asserted the contrary doctrine. I say that the Government reserves to itself the right and power to survey these lands, but at the expense of the company.

Mr. McMILLAN. I suppose this amendment would merely serve to identify the lands which are to be taxed, that is, lands granted for railroad purposes or otherwise shall be surveyed by the Government of the United States, not by the States through which the roads may pass at their pleasure, in any way. There certainly can be no objection to inserting those words. They fully identify the lands which are to be taxed. I hope the Senate will see the propriety of permitting these words to be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee accept the amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will accept it and let it pass.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; let the amendment read "surveyed by the Government under the existing or any future laws."

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no objection to that. Say "surveyed by the Government under the existing or any future legislation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment, as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of section 12 down to and including the word "conveyed," in line 6, and in lieu of those words to insert:

That when the lands shall have been surveyed by the United States and the company shall have become entitled to patents for the same, they;

So as to read:

That when the lands shall have been surveyed by the United States and the company shall have become entitled to patents for the same, they shall be subject to taxation according to the laws of the State or Territory within which the same may be situated.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. BAILEY. I accept the modification of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] to suggest an amendment to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Tennessee has accepted that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the insertion of the words "under existing laws" after the word "surveyed" to be suggested.

Mr. HEREFORD. Yes; "surveyed under existing laws."

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Tennessee has accepted my amendment that the survey shall be made by the United States simply.

Mr. HEREFORD. "Surveyed under existing law." We did not accept the whole of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. I made no such suggestion as that.

Mr. HEREFORD. The idea of the Senator from Tennessee, as I understand, is that it is to be surveyed by the United States under existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Tennessee has heard the amendment read, and I think it is satisfactory to him.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the amendment as it stands now substantially reaches the object. If the law already provides that the expense of the survey shall be borne by the company, I do not see that this language changes that law in the slightest degree, and so I am content with the amendment as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment as modified. The call for the yeas and nays has been withdrawn.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to call attention again to a matter that I alluded to a short time since in section 11. I move to amend that section by inserting after the word "descriptions," in line 7, the words "subject to the provisions of section 4 of this act;" so as to read:

That the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company is hereby authorized to issue its bonds, from time to time, not exceeding $25,000 per mile, to aid in the construction and equipment of its road, and to secure the same by mortgage on the whole or any part or parts of its railroad and property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, subject to the provisions of section 4 of this act, with the rights, privileges, and franchises thereto appertaining, &c.

A single word, Mr. President, will explain my purpose and show whether my amendment affects it or not. As I before said, I could not vote for this bill did it not contain section 4, which opens these grants of land to actual settlers. In other words, I could never consent to vote for a bill that would allow a railroad company to hold the grant as lands are still held in the State of Iowa, and as they might be held under the former system of granting lands, for twenty years, in order to enhance their price and keep them from settlement. Section 4 allows these lands, under certain restrictions, to be occupied, settled, and brought into use. Section 11 authorizes the company to mortgage the whole of its property. The question has arisen with me whether or not section 11 does not nullify section 4. If they can mortgage their entire property, then the person who enters upon and settles the land and buys it and pays for it runs the risk of having to pay for it again under the mortgage. Therefore I move to insert the words I have named in section 11, so that when mortgaging the land the mortgagees will understand that they are taking the mortgage subject to the rights of the persons named in section 4 of the act. The result will be, I apprehend, that the mortgagees would contain a stipulation that the moneys paid shall go into the hands of a trustee for the benefit of the mortgagees all the time, and thus the mortgagees be made safe, and the company in no way a loser.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not sure that I understand the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. If I do, I think there is no objection to it. He proposes that when a mortgage is made the rights of the settlers under the fourth section shall not be disturbed, but that the amount paid for the lands shall go to the payment of the mortgage debt.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I propose to provide that all moneys paid under section 4 shall go into the hands of a trustee for the benefit of the mortgagee, so as to save both parties.

Mr. WINDOM. I think that is the effect of the bill as it stands, and I make no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is my understanding of the bill, and the amendment only makes it plainer.

Mr. WINDOM. I think that is the meaning of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to propose an amendment to the seventh section, and to show the pertinency of the amendment I will read that portion of the section on which the question turns. It is provided here that the company—

Shall transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroad for the Government whenever required to do so by any department thereof; and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the rates paid by individuals for like transportation and telegraph service.

Here is a discrepancy which arises in this way: the amount charged to individuals is made the measure of the charge to the Government, and among the things that are to be transported are the United States mails; it so happens that the United States mails are never transported for individuals; and therefore there is no measure fixed as the bill now stands. The same difficulty exists in the act of 1862 in reference to the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, and some difficulties have already grown up between the companies and the Department growing out of that fact. To avoid that, I propose to strike out the word "mails," between "transport" and "troops," in the fifth line, and to insert in the eleventh line, after the word "services," the following:

And shall transport the mails for the United States for a compensation not exceeding the average rate which shall at any time be paid for like services on railroads in the States of Iowa and Kansas.

I take those States simply as a measure. Perhaps some other States might be better or a single State instead of two, but that would fix a uniform measure and put an end to all dispute between the Post-Office Department and the company.

Mr. WINDOM. I suggest to the Senator to insert "Minnesota."

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If it is preferred to have Minnesota inserted, I have no objection to that.

Mr. WINDOM. I think there is no objection to the amendment, unless the chairman of the committee has some objection to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I see no objection to the proposition.

Mr. KERNAN. I submit that the eleventh section should be amended, and I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. KERNAN. Before we vote on that, or at some other time, I wish to call attention to the fact that section 11 provides that this corporation may "issue its bonds, from time to time, not exceeding $25,000 per mile, to aid in the construction and equipment of its road." I think that ought to build the road pretty well. Then follows this proviso:

That such bonds or mortgages shall not be issued or executed unless on the affirmative vote of the holders of not less than two-thirds of the stock represented at a meeting of the stockholders of said company, duly called for that purpose.

They may call a meeting, but very few of the stockholders may go to it. Two-thirds of those who are represented there may mortgage the road away from the preferred stockholders. I think they should not have a right to mortgage the road unless at least they get the assent of two-thirds of the preferred stockholders, not merely those who are represented at a meeting. After the pending amendment to section 7 is disposed of, unless there is some explanation given, I shall offer an amendment to section 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. In line 14 of section 11, commencing with the word "represented," I move to strike out the residue of that line and all of line 15, so as to make the proviso read: "that such bonds or mortgages shall not be issued or executed unless on the affirmative vote of the holders of not less than two-thirds of the stock." And before the word "stock" I would insert the words "entire preferred;" so as to read, "not less than two-thirds of the entire preferred stock."

Mr. WINDOM. Would that require the presence of the owners at the meeting?

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator can readily suggest an amendment so as not to require that. In our State in reference to corporations the law requires the written assent of the stockholders.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator will reduce his amendment to such language as will express that idea, so that it will not require the presence of two-thirds but allow them to vote by proxy, I shall make no objection to the amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. Then I will move to strike out the words "the affirmative vote" and insert "the written consent;" so as to read:

The written consent of the holders of not less than two-thirds of the entire preferred stock.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to that amendment. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I suggest to the Senator to so frame his amendment as to insert the word "or," and let it read, "the affirmative vote or written consent."

Mr. WINDOM. I thought that was the language of the amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. I will modify it in that way. I ask the Secretary to report the amendment to the amendment, as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be reported as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after the word "vote," in the thirteenth line of the eleventh section, the words "or written consent," and before the word "stock," in line 14, to insert "entire preferred;" and after the word "stock" to strike out the rest of the section; so that, if amended, the proviso would read:

Provided, however, That such bonds or mortgages shall not be issued or executed unless on the affirmative vote or written consent of the holders of not less than two-thirds of the entire preferred stock.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Railroads in reference to a provision of the bill which I find here.

Mr. MITCHELL. On what page?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. On pages 7 and 8. The provision is as follows:

And in the event of any failure to complete and equip said railroad portages at the Cascades and The Dalles of the Columbia River, or either of them, within the times and in the manner hereinbefore specified, then all the rights, grants, privileges, and franchises herein granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, so far as the same relate to the construction of a railroad between Portland and Umatilla, Oregon, shall vest in and inure to the benefit of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company.

I wish to ascertain what this Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company is, whether it is a corporation created by Congress, or whether it is a corporation created by the State of Oregon, or whether it is not yet a corporation at all?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a corporation created some years ago under the general incorporation law of the State of Oregon.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Then I wish to say that I see some difficulties in the way of this proposed act, because the State of Oregon neither under a general law nor a special charter can create a corporation extending from Portland, Oregon, to the South Pass or to Salt Lake, inasmuch as either place is some hundreds of miles beyond her borders. I wish some information upon that point.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no proposition before the Senate to build a road from Portland to Salt Lake or any other place except from Puget Sound to the Missouri River. That is a mere description of a particular corporation; it is the name of a company. Whether they ever build the road to Salt Lake or to South Pass is a matter for the future. Certainly this bill confers no rights upon them whatever.

Mr. McMILLAN. I suggest to the chairman of the committee whether in view of this difficulty it would not be better to strike out the language which the Senator from Michigan has just read, providing for the forfeiture of franchises by the Northern Pacific to the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the very thing I have been insisting on from the first in regard to this bill. If that is stricken out I shall feel very much inclined to vote against the bill myself.

Mr. McDONALD. I move to amend the bill by striking out that provision. It seems to me it is time enough to determine whether another corporation shall be entitled to these rights and privileges after the Northern Pacific Company shall have failed and when the rights thereof become forfeited. I move, if it is in order, to strike out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves to amend the bill as he has indicated. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out after the word "jurisdiction," in line 49 of section 8, the words:

And in the event of any failure to complete and equip said railroad portages at the Cascades and The Dalles of the Columbia River, or either of them, within the times and in the manner hereinbefore specified, then all the rights, grants, privileges, and franchises herein granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, so far as the same relate to the construction of a railroad between Portland and Umatilla, Oregon, shall vest in and inure to the benefit of the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the amendment of the Senator from Indiana should prevail, all that the North Pacific coast has been contending for for the last three or four months in reference to the construction of this road along the Columbia River would be defeated. It will be observed that under the provisions of this bill the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are not compelled to construct any portion of the road along the Columbia River except that portion around the Cascades and The Dalles until the road across the continent is completed from the headwaters of the Columbia to the Missouri River, a distance of nearly twelve hundred miles.

Mr. McDONALD. I will ask the Senator from Oregon if it is not the real purpose, then, of this bill, so far as that part of it is concerned, to confer these rights and privileges on the Oregon company, on the presumption that the company named in the bill will not comply with the provisions of it, and that therefore the road will become forfeited in the manner indicated in the words I have moved to strike out, and if it is not therefore the real purpose to make this bill cover a grant to another company?

Mr. MITCHELL. The real purpose, so far as I understand it—and

I think that is the real purpose the committee had in view when they prepared this bill—is to compel the Northern Pacific Railroad Company not to build a road all along the Columbia River but to build these two roads at these two portages within the next two years and a half. So great are the arguments in favor of some measure of relief for the people of the Northwest by the loosening of the fetters of the monopoly that now controls the Columbia River that it was thought by the committee that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company ought to be compelled to construct that portion of the main line around these portages. It amounts altogether to less than twenty miles of road, or about twenty miles of road; about fourteen or fifteen miles at The Dalles and about four or five miles at the Cascades.

Mr. EATON. Ode is fifteen and the other is six miles.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will say about twenty miles of road are required to complete both these portages. Now, then, it is believed that it is not asking too much of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the interest of all the people of the great Northwest, if this grant is extended to them as it is proposed to extend it to them by the provisions of this bill, in requiring them to complete that much of their road where it will be of such infinite advantage to so large a section of the country as is to be benefited by its construction.

Mr. McDONALD. I beg to state that I have no desire, of course, to affect any provision of this bill that is intended to enforce, so far as can be done by legislation, the construction of this part of the road by the Northern Pacific Company; but I do object to saying that in the event the Northern Pacific shall fail to construct this part of the line, then their rights and franchises to the whole line extending from there to Portland shall become forfeited, and another company, herein named, shall become entitled merely by that forfeiture to take the rights and privileges conferred by the bill and go on and complete the road. I think it is enough if we declare the forfeiture, and leave it hereafter to be determined by what other company, if any, that part of the road is to be completed.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator from Indiana will examine the other provisions of the bill, he will find it is provided in the bill that the road along the Columbia River between the town of Umatilla and the city of Portland shall be a common road not only for the Northern Pacific but for the trains of such parties as may hereafter build a road from Umatilla to connect with the present transcontinental line; and furthermore that the use of this common road shall be on such terms as the two companies may agree upon, or, if they are unable to agree, then the use shall be upon the terms that may be fixed by three competent and disinterested persons to be appointed by the President of the United States.

I would say to my friend from Indiana that the provisions in relation to this common road and in regard to this forfeiture have been consented to by the Northern Pacific Company. I have never wished from the first, I do not wish now, and do not intend now to advocate, any single provision in this bill, in so far as imposing burdens on the Northern Pacific Company is concerned, that they are not willing to consent to, and I think that is saying considerable. I have labored zealously for certain conditions in reference to this matter that I thought the company ought to have conceded, which they did not concede; I abandoned those conditions because I did not wish to defeat a great national enterprise like this, nor did I wish to embarrass a great national enterprise like this or to embarrass a company engaged in the construction of a great national as well as a great international work like this is destined to be. As these provisions have received the assent of the gentlemen who represent this company, I do not think that we ought to undertake to mangle the bill at this stage of the proceedings. There is no necessity whatever and in fact there is no room really for a portion of the way for but one railroad down the Columbia River, through the great passes of the Cascade Mountains. There can be no kind of question but that the wants of the commerce of the great Pacific Northwest will at no distant day, aid or no aid from the General Government, force the construction of a railroad from the headwaters of the Columbia River to connect with the present transcontinental road. The Northern Pacific Company in all their negotiations for funds with which to carry on their enterprise must negotiate in the face of the fact that such a road is inevitable, that it is bound to be built, and at no very distant day. Is it not wisdom, Mr. President? I appeal to the Senator from Indiana to compel this work to be done in the manner provided by the bill.

Mr. McDONALD. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator from Indiana and I shall not continue my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. EATON. I requested my friend from Indiana to withdraw his amendment because I had one or two that I desired to offer in the interest of the bill simply. I read now from the bill, beginning with line 7 of section 8:

That the extensions, franchises, and privileges granted by this act to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are on the further express condition that such company shall, within nine months from the approval of this act, commence the construction of its said railroad at some point at or near the mouth of Snake River.

That is one of the conditions. The whole act is to fail if that condition is not complied with. I go further down the page and come to where I desire an amendment. Here is another condition:

And shall also, within two years from the passage of this act, construct and equip their said railroad around the portage at the Lower Cascades of the Columbia River, on the south side thereof, to suitable points of junction with navigable water in said river, above and below said cascades.

I desire to amend by saying, instead of "two years," "three years from the passage of this act," and by adding after the word "cascades," in the twenty-seventh line, "the State of Oregon consenting thereto;" so as to read:

And shall also, within three years from the passage of this act, construct and equip their said railroad around the portage at the Lower Cascades of the Columbia River, on the south side thereof, to suitable points of junction with navigable water in said river, above and below said cascades, the State of Oregon consenting thereto.

I hold that it is absolutely necessary for the State of Oregon to consent.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Connecticut proposes to change the time, I understand.

Mr. EATON. I do, from two years to three years.

Mr. MITCHELL. In what line?

Mr. EATON. In line 23 I move to strike out the word "two" and insert "three;" and in line 29 I move to strike out the words "two and a half" and insert the word "four;" so as to make that part of the eighth section read:

And shall also construct and equip their said railroad around The Dalles of the Columbia River, on the south side thereof, within four years from the passage of this act.

I desire briefly to give my reasons for moving thus to amend the bill. There are other conditions in addition to these, as any Senator will see by reading the bill, such as that one hundred miles of railroad are to be constructed in each year. Here is a poor company, a bankrupt company. What will be the expense of constructing these twenty and a half or twenty-one miles of road around these portages at The Dalles and the Cascades? Not less than $700,000. Gentlemen have said to me this morning that it would cost $1,000,000. The lowest sum is $600,000 that I have heard mentioned. It is utterly impossible, in my mind, that this company can go on and construct one hundred miles of railroad annually that it would be bound to construct under the bill, and in two years, or in two and a half years, expend from $600,000 to $1,000,000 upon these portages about the Cascades. One must suppose that there is a reason why my friend from Indiana should have insisted upon his amendment. One would almost suppose that the object was to so strip this company that it would be compelled to give up its franchises, that some other company named in this bill might grasp them. I do not say that, for I do not believe my friend from Oregon has any such idea. But I say to the Senate that this company cannot do this work in the time that is expressed in the bill; it would be utterly impossible; and we shall have them here again two years from now asking for a further extension of time.

I think the amendment I offer ought to be made in the interest of the company and in the interest of the people. The United States have already expended $100,000 in the construction of a canal about one of these cascades. A further appropriation of $250,000 is required at the hands of Congress this year for that very purpose. Mr. President, let us act fairly with this bantling of ours. I first fixed the time at four years and five years, but in order to gratify my friend from Oregon I have put it at three years and at four years for the building of these two points about the cascade.

I move, first, to strike out in line 23 the word "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

And shall also, within three years from the passage of this act, construct and equip their said railroad around the portage at the Lower Cascades of the Columbia River, &c.

I put it at three years, if the Senator from Oregon does not object.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator can fix the amendment to suit himself.

Mr. EATON. It is fixed to suit myself.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course the Senator from Connecticut offers this amendment in perfect good faith.

Mr. EATON. I do.

Mr. MITCHELL. And because he thinks the bill ought to be so amended.

Mr. EATON. I do.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator says in connection with the amendments suggested that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company will be unable in the next two years and a half to construct the twenty miles of road at this point; that it will cost $700,000, and that somebody has said it would cost $1,000,000. I have lived within sight of these cascades almost for the last eighteen years; I think I know something about them. Although I know but little about railroad building, I think I have some general knowledge of the character of the line at that point, and some general knowledge of what it would probably cost to construct those two portage roads.

Mr. EATON. How much?

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator inquires how much. Although I am no railroad contractor or railroad builder, I should be very glad to get the contract for constructing these two portage roads at $400,000, and I think I would make a very nice bonus at that figure.

Mr. EATON. Will my friend permit me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. Then the Senator would propose to construct twenty miles of railroad at $20,000 a mile, when his very bill gives them the right to borrow $25,000 a mile on bonds.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why? Because any number of miles of that road that they will be compelled to construct in going across the continent will cost perhaps twice $25,000 a mile. If that is not an answer to the proposition of the Senator I do not know what is.

The effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, should it prevail, would be simply to fasten upon the necks of the people of the Northwest, or to continue it rather, because it is fastened now, a monopoly on the Columbia River that is very hard to be borne, to say the least of it. When the Northern Pacific Railroad Company themselves, through their president and their representative, say that they can complete this road and will complete it within the time specified in the bill, namely, two years and a half, why should we insist that they cannot do it? Moreover, for the construction of these twenty miles, or whatever the distance may be, that amount is to go to make up the hundred miles that they are to build in the particular year in which these portages are constructed. They are not, under the provisions of the bill, to complete these portage roads in addition to the hundred miles, but in the particular year they are called upon to construct them they are to count these roads, or whatever portion of them they may build around the portages, as a part of the one hundred miles.

This matter was discussed in committee at length and considered carefully and finally agreed upon, as I believe, unanimously. While I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate, because I am very anxious to get a vote upon this bill, I desire to state that I am in earnest in my opposition to the amendment of the honorable Senator from Connecticut. The representatives from the State of Oregon and from Washington Territory and from Idaho, feel instructed to have such reasonable provisions in the legislation for the extension of time to the Northern Pacific, that upon the one hand it will not be an embarrassment to that company, and will, on the other, have the effect of opening up the waters of the Columbia River to free navigation. It is a sad commentary upon the history of things that a great river like the Columbia River, the second upon this continent, should be virtually owned, possessed, and controlled by one company, and that the commerce of that whole Northwest should be compelled to pay tribute in the shape of charges such as I adverted to yesterday to this same company. I ask, Mr. President, in behalf of that people, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut may be voted down, and that the bill as reported by the committee may be sustained.

Mr. McMILLAN. I believe the amendments suggested by the Senator from Connecticut are most reasonable in their character, and should be adopted by the Senate both as to the three years and as to the four years. The Senator from Oregon has referred to the navigation of the Columbia River, to the fact that there are obstacles there, and that there is some oppression under which the people of Oregon labor. If that be so, what reason is that for imposing upon a railroad company the burden of relieving that people? The Government has already appropriated $250,000 to build a canal around the Cascades in Oregon. It has entered upon a series of appropriations which will amount to millions.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understood the Senator to say that the Government had appropriated $250,000 for the construction of locks at those points?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Connecticut also made a similar allusion. The Senators, both of them, are entirely misinformed upon that subject.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator then state the fact in regard to it?

Mr. MITCHELL. The fact is that two years ago in August—it was in 1876—

Mr. McMILLAN. The last river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the last river and harbor appropriation bill an appropriation of $90,000 was made to inaugurate the work, and there never has been a cent appropriated since, and not one dollar of that appropriation has yet been used except to procure the right of way and make the definite, permanent surveys.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then the proceeding has been inaugurated. There is to be a canal built by the Government around the Cascades, and it will require a very heavy expenditure of money. But why load this railroad company with the relief of the people there? This railroad company had this original land grant and it had the privilege of passing down the Columbia River upon the other side of the river, and would have received twenty sections per mile of land for the distance it passed down that river, amounting to seven million acres. By this bill it is deprived of one-half the amount of the land and compelled to go upon the other side of the river and pass the Cascades and The Dalles, and all this burden which is imposed upon them is to be performed within the short period of time named in the bill. It is unreasonable that the burden should be imposed upon them at all; but if they are to assume it, certainly there should be a reasonable time to perform the work. The time indicated by the Senator from Connecticut is very reasonable.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if the representatives of the company do not agree to the bill as reported to the Senate?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not know what the representatives of the company have agreed to. I know that the company have been called upon to submit to exactions here which no company should have submitted to, and which they should not have agreed to. So far as all the other conditions are concerned, they are right and perhaps should pass, if the representatives of the company have agreed to them; but with reference to the amendments suggested by the Senator from Connecticut they are so reasonable in their character that I am surprised that the Senator from Oregon does not assent to them without hesitation.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Minnesota knows that I could not consent to those amendments and represent the people who sent me here to represent them. Therefore why should he say that he is surprised that the Senator from Oregon does not consent to an amendment like that?

Mr. McMILLAN. Because I believe the Senator from Oregon can perceive what are the public interests.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I do.

Mr. McMILLAN. And that the Senator would assent to the public interests.

Mr. WINDOM. This is an old question in the Committee on Railroads. It was considered for several weeks. A great deal of discussion was had there upon it; there were consultations back and forth between those who represented the interests of the company and those who desired to restrict them as far as possible; and after a great deal of thought and careful consideration the proposition contained in the substitute reported from the committee was unanimously agreed to, as being one that could be practically carried out. I hope that the Senate will permit the bill to pass as the committee has recommended it. I think that such a course would save a great deal of time. I believe that the company can carry out these conditions. Even if, as my colleague states, they are onerous, they are such as have been accepted by them, and I hope the Senate will not change them.

Mr. EATON. A great deal has been said by my friend from Oregon with very great emphasis. Senators have been told that the company have agreed to these conditions and the question is asked why should the Senator from Connecticut stand up here and object to a matter that the company have agreed to? I have known people to agree to things sometimes when they were told "if you do not do this, worse will come." I have heard of agreements of that character. I do not say this is one of them; I am not about to say that this is one of them; but I am about to say that the condition of that company forbids me to believe that they can go on and construct this hundred miles of railroad. My friend says it is not a hundred. True, it is only ninety, in addition to the track around the Cascades. My friend said that these twenty miles could be built for $400,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state in answer to that proposition that I heard the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company say at one time within the last month that he thought it could be built for a quarter of a million of dollars. He told me since, however, that that estimate was too low, and that it would cost considerably more than that.

Mr. EATON. I heard an engineer say this morning that it could not be built for a hundred thousand dollars less than a million.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is nonsense.

Mr. EATON. It may be nonsense; but whether it be nonsense or not, my friend from Oregon is not a good judge, for he has already told the Senate that he knows nothing about the building of railroads.

Mr. MITCHELL. I admit that, but I claim at the same time that I know as much as the Senator from Connecticut about building this road.

Mr. EATON. I have not asserted that it would cost anything; they may build it for nothing; but my good friend says he knows nothing about the building of roads, and yet he says that the opinion of an engineer in regard to its cost of construction is nonsense. I never happened to see those cascades; I never lived in the neighborhood of them.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the reason the Senator knows nothing about them.

Mr. EATON. I hope I know something about things that I have not seen. I know something about the nature of the soil in the neighborhood of those cascades. I know something about the amount of water-fall per mile, and I know it is rocky, and I know it will be expensive to build a railroad through those rocky cuts. That I know; and therefore I believe what the engineers say, that it will cost from $700,000 to $900,000 to build those twenty and a half miles of railroad. Mr. President, do not let us make a harsh trade with these people. Let us do what is just and right. Do not crowd them; do not put upon them a duty that they will not be able to perform, so that they will come here two years hence and ask for an extension of time to be given them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would be in favor of giving it if any misfortune should happen to the company.

Mr. EATON. Give it now. Place the time now at three years for one point and at four years for the other point. Let us be reasonable with this child of ours. It is a great work, as my friend has said.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me tell the Senator from Connecticut that this company by the construction of the road which they will build from Snake River in the next two years after the passage of the bill will have one of the best paying roads, in my judgment, in the United States. It will run through one of the most fertile wheat countries in the world. It is settling up now thick and fast, so that there will be no trouble, in my judgment, (and I think that is the opinion of the company,) in their being amply able at the end of the time specified in the bill to go on and construct these roads which will be of such great importance to our people.

Mr. EATON. I certainly hope that the road which they build from Snake River, if that is the name, will be of vast importance to them and of great profit; but there is an old adage that we had better not forget, and that is not to count chickens too early. We have seen these things before. We have seen a great deal of rose-color with regard to what the amount of freight would be upon railroads. I have had occasion myself to examine these matters not infrequently and with a great deal of care. Inserting the word "three" instead of "two" does not prevent, let me say to my friend from Oregon, the completion of this road if the company can complete it in two years. They will desire to complete it if they can in two years, but let us give them three years in which to construct it. I hope the amendment which I have offered will prevail.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, this particular feature in the bill was a matter of very considerable discussion in the committee. The railroad company applied for an act of Congress extending the time within which they might complete their road and save their franchises and land grants. Although Portland by their own act had become the western terminus of the road, they desired to build a portion of the road that was intermediate between the terminus, commencing at the head of navigation on the Columbia River and penetrating to the interior in a northeasterly direction for a distance I think of about two hundred and eight miles, for the reason that the construction of that portion of their road would be the most profitable to them immediately, on the ground that the line so constructed would pass through a very fertile region of country, the settlement of which was imminent, in reference to which they already had applications for the purchase of large quantities of the lands belonging to their franchises.

The committee was confronted with the fact that the navigation on the Columbia River as now necessarily pursued was in the hands of a monopoly, a navigation company owning a line of steamboats, and which had constructed around its two natural obstructions portages which enable them to handle as against every competition all the freight that was required to be transported and all the travel that sought to pass to and fro over that river, at any price that they saw fit to exact, and who, in point of fact, holding this monopoly, were doing just as others do who hold monopolies, they were improving it to their advantage but to the detriment of the public, by charging excessive rates for the transportation of freights on that great highway. Inasmuch as this very line along the banks of that river was the chosen and ultimate line for the location of this railroad, and inasmuch as this railroad company were seeking to enlarge their privileges and obtain new franchises from the public, it was thought no more than right and fair and just and equal that they should do something to relieve the public by way of compensation for that which they asked the public to do for their relief.

It was proposed, therefore, that everything else should be conceded to them, and while nobody desired to throw a straw in the way of the successful prosecution and final completion of this great highway across the continent, it was nevertheless thought by the committee to be no more than a very reasonable thing to ask that they should expend a portion of their capital in the construction of two short portages which would enable other navigation companies to put upon the Columbia River other steamboats for the purpose of establishing competing lines of transportation between Portland and the head of navigation. The reasonableness of this demand was conceded by the company, and the point in dispute was as to the question of time. All they asked was that they should not be limited in point of time in respect to the construction of these two portages in such a way substantially and materially to interfere with the progress of their work in the selected place where it would be most profitable for them to push it. Some of the committee were for a shorter time, others were willing to grant a longer time. The times as now fixed in this reported bill were the times fixed by the railroad company itself. This is their proposition; this is their offer; this is what they say they are willing and able to do, and what they propose and consent to do as a consideration by them for that which they have asked from the public.

I understand the objection to be that this is oppressive upon the company; that it is a hardship upon the company; that it limits them so in point of time as that they will not be able to comply with the conditions. Who is authorized to speak for the company in that behalf? Who knows what the company is able to do? Who can undertake to say that this is more than they will be able to perform? I suppose that the president of the corporation and the directors of the corporation, those who are interested in its success and those who will be required to furnish the means, are better able to speak for it than any one else. It is a question for them to answer; it is a question directly between Congress and the corporation. It certainly is immaterial in this discussion to say that we neither know nor care what the company choose, or are willing, or are able to do, for the very point of the objection is that this is a hardship upon the company. If the company says it is not a hardship; if it says that it can undertake and will undertake, and does undertake to do this thing, certainly every consideration of public convenience and public policy not only authorizes but requires us to take it at its word, for the sooner that navigation is made free and open to competition the better it is for every man, woman, and child throughout the whole continent, for it benefits the entire public. If it could be opened to-morrow, it would be a great public advantage.

I submit, therefore, that we ought not in the interest of the company to make an objection which the company does not make of its own, and that the arrangements which are contained in this bill, and which were the result of conferences between the committee and the company, ought not to be disturbed inasmuch as in this particular at least it is what the company has offered and agreed to do; and certainly we ought, out of consideration to the public interest, to have this thing done in the speediest manner in which we can reasonably and practically obtain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be reported at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in section 8, line 23, to strike out "two" and insert "three," and in line 29 to strike out the words "two and a half" and insert "four."

Mr. MITCHELL. The effect of that is simply to give the company three years' time in which to build five or six miles, and four years' time in which to build fourteen or fifteen miles more. They have already two years' after the passage of the bill to build the five or six miles, and two years and a half according to the bill as it stands to build the remaining fourteen or fifteen miles.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. MITCHELL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—19.
Anthony,	Christiancy,	Harris,	McCreery,
Bailey,	Davis of Illinois,	Hill,	McMillan,
Burnside,	Eaton,	Howe,	Maxey,
Butler,	Garland,	Johnston,	Morrill,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	Kernan,
NAYS—38.
Allison,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Ransom,
Barum,	Dennis,	Lamar,	Rollins,
Bayard,	Dorsey,	McDonald,	Sargent,
Beck,	Eustis,	Matthews,	Saunders,
Booth,	Ferry,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Bruce,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Oglesby,	Wallace,
Chaffee,	Hereford,	Paddock,	Windom,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Patterson,
Conkling,	Kellogg,	Randolph,
ABSENT—19.
Armstrong,	Edmunds,	Merrimon,	Thurman,
Blaine,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Wadleigh,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,	Whyte,
Conover,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,	Withers,
Davis of W. Va.,	McPherson,	Spencer,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EATON. I desire to offer another amendment, and I hope it will not be subject to any objection. After the word "Cascades," in line 27, of section 8, I move to insert "the State of Oregon consenting thereto."

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. EATON. I understand the Senator does not object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know how it would read, if the two high contracting parties are willing to let us hear it.

The CHIEF CLERK. If amended as proposed, the section will read:

To suitable points of junction with navigable water in said river, above and below said Cascades, the State of Oregon consenting thereto—

Mr. SARGENT. What shall be done then with the State's consent? What is the context?

The CHIEF CLERK—

and shall also, within two years from the passage of this act, construct and equip their said railroad around the portage at the Lower Cascades of the Columbia River, on the south side thereof, to suitable points of junction with navigable water in said river, above and below said Cascades, the State of Oregon consenting thereto.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think that is the present law. I do not think the amendment is necessary.

Mr. SARGENT. When is the Legislature to meet? It will require a new act.

Mr. MITCHELL. It meets in September. There will not be any difficulty about that, although I think that is the law as it stands now. The eighteenth section of the original act provides:

That said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall obtain the consent of the Legislature of any State through which any portion of said railroad line may pass, previous to commencing the construction thereof; but said company may have the right to put on engineers and survey the route before obtaining the consent of the Legislature.

But I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. EATON. There is still another clause requiring the same amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON. In the same section, line 32, after the word "thereto," I move to insert "the State of Oregon consenting thereto." It is the same amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see how that will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. If so amended, the section will read:

And shall also construct and equip their said railroad around The Dalles of the Columbia River, on the south side thereof, within two and a half years from the passage of this act, so as to connect conveniently with steamboats on the Columbia River above and below said portages and by means thereof, the State of Oregon consenting thereto.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose agreeing to that does not necessarily raise the implication that Congress would not have the power to authorize the construction of a railroad between two or more States; but it merely raises the implication that in this instance Congress does not choose to exercise the power, if it has it, without the consent of that State. With that understanding, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. EATON. That is not my understanding. My understanding of it is that Congress has no power to construct that railroad without the consent of Oregon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is open to the other construction; so I will not raise any question about it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROVER. I desire to offer an amendment. In line 8, section 9, after the word "lines," I move to insert "when completed from Portland to Umatilla."

Mr. MITCHELL. I think that is a very proper amendment.

Mr. GROVER. It will make the bill more distinct.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let the whole section be read as it will stand if amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 9. The grants, privileges, and franchises herein granted are upon the further express condition that from the point of junction of the Northern Pacific and the proposed Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroads at or near the town of Umatilla, in the State of Oregon, by the pass of the Columbia River, through the Cascade Mountains, to the city of Portland, the said Northern Pacific Railroad shall be a common road for both lines when completed from Portland to Umatilla; and the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall receive such compensation from the other company and such use shall be on such terms as the said corporations may agree upon; and if they are unable to agree, then the Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall receive from the other such compensation and at such times, and the use thereof shall be upon such terms, as a commission of three disinterested and competent persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, shall determine to be equitable and just.

Mr. MITCHELL. I supposed that was the construction of the section as it stood; but it is not as clear as it should be, and the amendment of my colleague makes it plain.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROVER. I offer another amendment. In line 62, section 8, after the word "thirty-three," I move to insert "consecutive."

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a proper amendment.

Mr. GROVER. And in line 63 of the same section, after the word "twenty-five," I move to insert "consecutive," and after the word "miles" to insert "commencing at the end thereof;" so as to have a continuous road.

Mr. MITCHELL. All right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROVER. Mr. President—

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator wishes to make any extended remarks, I hope he will yield to me to move an amendment.

Mr. GROVER. Understanding that I hold the floor, I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. At the end of section 9, for the purpose of cutting off any implied recognition of this Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company outside of the line of Oregon, I propose to add the words—

Nothing in this act shall be construed as recognizing the existence of said Portland, South Pass and Salt Lake Railroad Company with any right or power of said company outside of said State of Oregon.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that he put his "outside" a little further back, to make it a little more clear. "The existence of said railroad outside of the State of Oregon" would be better.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I think it is very clear as it is now.

Mr. DAWES. I think it would be clearer by a change of language.

Mr. MITCHELL. For one, I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment; but there is not a thing in this bill from beginning to end that makes any provision for that company outside of the State of Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I presented a memorial this morning and asked that it be printed. It relates to this bill, I find. I want to inquire of those in charge of the bill whether they expect to bring it to a vote this evening, and, if they do, to allow the memorial to be read.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly we want to dispose of this bill this evening.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I find that the memorial relates to this bill mainly. It is from the Portland, South Pass and Salt Lake Railroad Company. If the gentleman in charge will consent to the memorial being read, it will be all that is needed, and it will then not be necessary to print it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The memorial cannot be received now except by general consent.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. GROVER. Mr. President, I had not intended to address the Senate on this bill, choosing rather to obtain a speedy vote upon it than to consume time in debate. But after the very able and interesting speech of the honorable Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] delivered yesterday, exhibiting in a striking light the physical features and development and the promising future of the vast region of new country traversed and to be traversed by the Northern Pacific Railroad between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains, I deem it proper to add a few words, more particularly descriptive of that portion of country through which this road will pass lying west of the Rocky Mountains, known as the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington and Idaho and a part of Montana. These are all watered by the Columbia River and its tributaries. This great river of the West, the largest which flows into the Pacific Ocean from the American continent, is navigable for one hundred miles from its mouth for deep sea-going vessels, and, with the exception of occasional rapids, rendering portages necessary, ordinary river steamers can ascend five hundred miles into the interior. Three hundred and fifty miles from its mouth the Columbia opens out its branches like a fan, spanning more than twelve degrees of latitude, equal nearly to one-half the width of the domain of the United States on the western shore of the Rocky Mountains. The headwaters of this river meet and interlock with the headwaters of the Missouri at about 112° of west longitude, forming, with the exception of a single divide, in a pass of the Rocky Mountains less than five thousand feet high, a valley line for a railroad from the great lakes to the Pacific Ocean. The extent of region drained by the Columbia is three hundred thousand square miles, or one-tenth of the area of the United States. It is equal to the country drained by the Danube. It is as large as France and the British Islands, and yields products of these countries.

Lying within the latitudes of France, it possesses a climate of equal mildness and salubrity. There is a great river of the Pacific Ocean which affects the climate of the western coast of North America in the same manner as the Gulf Stream of the Atlantic affects the climate of Western Europe. A late writer describes this as follows:

This thermal stream from "India's coral strand," coming through the sea of Japan, along the Asiatic coast, and dividing into several branches, the greatest of which passes through Behring Strait into the Arctic Ocean, and carrying the ice formed in those waters away from our shores; a considerable stream shoots to the northeast, striking with some force against the island of Saint Lawrence, again deflects to the eastward and finally to the southward and westward, leaving the northern shores of the peninsula of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands. A considerable volume of this current crosses on an easterly course, washing the southeastern base of Alaska, strikes the shores of British Columbia, and deflects to the north, northwest, and westward, creating a strong counter-current along the Gulf of Alaska and imparting a double dose of heat to the shores fringing those waters. The westerly winds blowing over this thermal plateau temper the coast climate, and in passing through the Cascade Mountains are known as "Chinook winds" in the broad basin of the Columbia River. These winds thus tempered exert vital influence along the coast, stimulating vegetation and dense underbrush. The condensation of this warm wind by the colder air on the main land produces moisture and heavy rains; hence the rank growth of trees, grasses, plants, and moss. Larger trees are found here than on the Atlantic slope on the same parallels, while gay plants and beautiful flowers flourish and give to those regions the appearance of budding fields.

This is a description by one who has roamed these seas and traveled these lands.

The soil of this region differs from that of other portions of the United States. It seems to be composed of phosphates and wheat-producing qualities. It is full of marine fossils and the sediments of a departed sea. It produces cereals, fruits, and vegetables in greater abundance than any other country. No failure of any crop has occurred since its settlement. Oregon was represented at the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia in 1876. She was awarded diplomas "for," in the words of the judges, approved by the commissioners, "grains, grasses, cereals, dried fruits, and vegetables, for the extent and excellent quality of exhibit of all the above-named products;" again, "for a superior display of cereals, textiles, and timber resources, and the variety and excellence of her fruits, the salmon fishery and the educational system evincing the steady development of the State;" also "for forest wood, for interest and variety of the exhibit, some of the specimens of most gigantic size."

Oregon fruits were exhibited in considerable quantities, and notwithstanding a journey of four thousand miles by express, they were in good condition, and were universally admired. They received medals and diplomas "for," in the words of the judges, approved by the commissioners, "a remarkably fine exhibit of fifty kinds of apples, and eight kinds of pears; all were of unusual excellence;" again, "cherries of remarkable size and excellent flavor;" "pears, ten varieties of superior excellence and size, beauty, and flavor;" "apples, twelve varieties of remarkable excellence, color, flavor, and size;" "prunes, four varieties, "superior, and illustrates how well the State of Oregon is adapted to their culture;" also for "pears, one cluster of Clapp's Favorite, containing six large and handsome specimens—an evidence of the remarkable fruitfulness of that variety."

Flax in straw and in lint was exhibited and received medals and diplomas "for," in the words of the judges, approved by the commissioners, "very fine quality, extraordinary length, good in strength, good color, superior gloss, and silky softness;" and for the oil manufactured at Salem, Oregon, from flaxseed, pronounced "of superior quality, fine color, being clear, fine, and free from sediment, of excellent body, and high merit."

Medals and diplomas were awarded upon wool from Oregon, pronounced by the judges and the commissioners "Merino wool, very fine specimens, of fine fiber and good staple, very much resembling Australian wool, and giving evidence that Oregon can produce wool of very great value;" again, for Merino wool "of fine staple and good strength;" "for fleece and combed wool of fine fiber, and healthy, resembling Australian, also Oxfordshire and Lancaster wool;" "for three samples of Leicester combing-wool, noticeable for long staple and bright luster;" also "for a sample of Cotswold wool, with twelve samples improved by a series of crossings pursued for many years, of high-bred Cotswold buck on high-bred Oxfordshiredown ewes, producing a combing-wool retaining the length of the original Cotswold, but with greatly increased fineness and softness, and total absence of hair." The Angora goat thrives in Oregon as well as upon its original pastures, and Cashmere wool will shortly be one of its leading products.

Not all the lands west of the Rocky Mountains in these latitudes are suitable for cultivation; but broad reaches of rolling upland and mountain-sides, which will never submit to the plow, yet are covered with an almost perennial verdure, and are the best natural pastures in the world. The meat-producing capacity of this region is very great. The rivers flowing into the Pacific Ocean between the forty-second and forty-ninth parallels of north latitude and the Puget Sound abound in salmon, the imperial food-fish.

Oregon salmon, as prepared for the markets of the world, was exhibited at the Centennial, and awarded medals and diplomas "for very great excellence, the preparation being wonderfully sound and of choice flavor;" "pickled, a very excellent preparation;" again, "for good flavor and soundness."

Already the export value of this product has reached $3,000,000 a year. While speaking of fisheries permit me to say a word for Alaska. Mr. Seward was condemned and ridiculed in many quarters for purchasing Alaska for $7,000,000. The fisheries alone of this vast territory are worth more than the price. Not only do the many rivers abound in salmon, but the coast is fringed by fishing-banks broader than the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, where all the way from Queen Charlotte's Island round into Behring's Sea can be taken every variety of sea fish which are found in the same latitudes in the Atlantic. Why give Great Britain money for the privilege of fishing in her waters while we possess better fisheries of our own?

But the great staple product of the valley of the Columbia River is wheat; all kinds of wheat can be grown here, winter, spring, summer, and fall wheat. A farmer told me he could sow wheat every month in the year and produce a good crop. The soil does not surrender under cultivation, nor is there ever a failure of crops. During the thirty-six years in which general farming has been carried on in the country not a single failure of crop has occurred. The qualities of the soil seem to be like those of Sicily and the regions about the Black Sea, which have been the never-failing granaries of Europe for the last two thousand years.

Several medals and diplomas were awarded by Centennial commissioners to Oregon exhibitors for fifteen varieties of wheat, five of oats, white rye in grain with straw nine feet high; again, "ninety-day white wheat," grain and sheaf, raised upon land neither plowed nor harrowed, and yielding thirty bushels per acre; also upon Oregon flour and oatmeal, all of excellent quality.

The crop of last year, produced by a population of about one hundred and twenty-five thousand, was six millions of bushels. The clip of wool was five million pounds. The product of cured meats was large; the export value of the year was sixteen millions. During five months from the 1st of September last seventy vessels, averaging twelve hundred tons each, bound for foreign ports, went out of the Columbia River laden chiefly with wheat and flour for European markets.

The wheat market of Portland, Oregon, is as good as the wheat market of Chicago, for the grain once on board at Portland is not handled again until it is delivered in Liverpool, which can be done in less than four months, with the expense simply of seamen's wages, costing less than export rates from Chicago. No grain products grown west of the mountains will come east by the Northern Pacific Railroad, but they will go west, and find a quicker and better market. Then we are the nearest point of supply to Japan and China who do not produce wheat, but consume much, and will in future consume a great deal. I make these allusions to show that farmers who go to Oregon are not going out of the world, but are going to a new world, and that there are two sides to this continent.

This railroad, when built, will have a way business running westward from the divide of the Rocky Mountains, made up of the products of the country traversed by it and of the business of the people who will live there, far greater than will come to the support of any like distance of the same road east, for the reason that the land will produce more relative exports and will sustain a greater relative population. In ten years after this road is completed the wheat exports to foreign markets from the country tributary to it will exceed two hundred millions of bushels, one hundred millions of which will go out of the Columbia River. The exports of wheat from the entire United States for the last year did not reach seventy millions of bushels.

Mr. President, allow me to say to my friends of the South, if you want a generous rivalry as to who shall be king in America, wheat or cotton, food or clothing, give us the Northern Pacific Railroad and you take the Texas Pacific, and we will try the title.

There is more new land on the line of this road than in any other section of our public domain. From the mouth of Snake River, stretching away three hundred miles to the northeast, lie the broad plains of the Columbia, smiling this day in their robes of greenest verdure, variegated with myriads of blossoms, and sparkling with a thousand fountains, awaiting the farmer as the bride awaits the groom ready for the marriage. If this railroad goes forward this year an agricultural population of ten thousand will occupy these lands within twelve months, and they will attend the progress of its construction like the march of triumph over the mountain.

The grades of this road, as compared with the Central and Union Pacific, should not be overlooked.

As I have said, the Northern Pacific is a valley road. There is steamboat navigation on the Missouri now and on the Yellowstone, its main upper tributary, as far west as Utah, and the headwaters of the Missouri extend farther west than the Great Salt Lake. So that in crossing the continent, while the Union Pacific is passing the main chain of the Rocky Mountains at Sherman, at an elevation of eighty-two hundred and forty-two feet, and the Wind River Mountains at an elevation of seven thousand and thirty feet, and laboring through the deep canyons and heavy grades of the Wahsatch, the Northern Pacific has not left the broad valley of the Upper Missouri, of the Union Pacific there are six hundred miles of road lying above the elevation of five thousand feet. Here all the snow-sheds are required and snow blockades are met, while for the same distance on the Northern Pacific no elevation will exceed twenty-five hundred feet, with no requirement whatever of snow-sheds.

The Central Pacific crosses the divide between Salt Lake and the Humboldt at an elevation of sixty-one hundred and eighty feet and the summit of the Sierra Nevadas at an elevation of seven thousand and forty-two feet and with forty miles of snow-sheds. Two hundred miles of this road lie above the elevation of five thousand feet. The corresponding section of the Northern Pacific has but a single summit, as I have said, the divide of the Rocky Mountains, at an elevation of less than five thousand feet, with regular and easy approaches from either side. And owing to the fact that the pass lies seven degrees of longitude on this road west of the pass at Sherman on the Union road, the temperature of the place is affected by the Pacific climate, having mild winters and light snows, showing that the constant and easy operation of the road will meet with no obstructions the year round. No snow-sheds will be necessary on any part of the line.

This road will command transcontinental business. As the grades will be easy no dividing of trains and doubling of locomotives will be required to pass mountains, and regular speed can be kept up throughout its entire distance. The Cascade Mountains in Oregon correspond with the Sierra Nevadas in California. Through these mountains the Northern Pacific road passes along the margin of the Columbia River, which like a giant has removed this great barrier and invited the tides of the Pacific Ocean into its very gorges one hundred and fifty miles from its mouth.

Mr. President, I have thus endeavored in a hasty manner to give a faint outline of the physical features of the country which I have the honor in part to represent as affecting the conditions of railway communication.

But there are other attractions. The family from the North can come among us and find a new climate, mild and agreeable, and a new scenery of most attractive beauty and grandeur. The family of the South can come and plant the magnolia and the climbing roses and vines of their own home, and see them grow and bloom. England, France, and Switzerland may come, and each find his own climate and scenery. Oregon is a land of profit and a land of beauty, but she is sitting alone and waiting for the world to come and meet her. This land was the dream of Thomas Jefferson a hundred years ago. In the second century of our Republic let it be made a reality and a living child of the Union.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I have but one more amendment to offer, and if it be adopted I shall be very glad to vote for the bill. I may as well say that this bill seems to be based on the idea of a reorganization of this company. The company, as I understand, had become insolvent, a receiver had been appointed, and the stockholders, or most of the stockholders, and most of the bondholders have united in this reorganization. Some of them have not. The first section of the bill provides:

That the grants, rights, privileges, corporate powers, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, conferred upon the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by its charter and the various joint resolutions of Congress amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, granted, and continued to the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, as now reorganized, except as hereinafter modified.

Now, as Congress is not a court able to decide between those stockholders and bondholders who have not come into these arrangements and those who have, and there may be paramount rights in some of these stockholders and bondholders which we ought not to assume to dispose of, I propose this amendment: after "modified," in line 10, to insert:

And subject to any lawfully existing paramount right of any stockholder in, or the holder of any bond against, the said company under its former organization, if any such there be.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not see that there is any objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. There is an amendment I wish to propose that I think will not be objectionable. In line 10 of the first section, after the word "modify," it is to insert:

And subject to any lawful adverse right.

Mr. MITCHELL. An amendment of that character has just been agreed to, offered by the honorable Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BAYARD. I was not in the Senate at the time.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it will be satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The amendment just adopted covers the point.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Railroads as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, the title was amended by striking out all after the word "railroad;" so as to read:

A bill extending the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. FREDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 20th instant, approved and signed the act (S. No. 484) to authorize the construction of a bridge abutment and approach within the Fort Riley military reservation, and the act (S. No. 1014) requiring the commissioner for preparing and publishing a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States to revise and perfect the index to the first volume of the same.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. MERRIMON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONERS TO PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I move to reconsider the vote indefinitely postponing the joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) supplemental to a joint resolution in relation to the international industrial exposition to be held in Paris in 1878.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask for the reconsideration of the vote simply that the joint resolution may be put on the Calendar. The vote was taken a few days ago, and it is necessary to have the question taken now if it is done at all. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the joint resolution was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator merely wants to enter his motion I suppose.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I want to put it on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the reconsideration had better be acted on now. I suppose there will be no objection whatever to the reconsideration so as to put the resolution on the Calendar.

Mr. SAUNDERS. So that it is put on the Calendar, it is all I want at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, then, will put the question on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, rose.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Senator will understand that I do not ask any vote on the main question now.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand it perfectly, and I have something to say about it.

Mr. PADDOCK. There can be no objection to reconsidering the vote by which it was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Perhaps the Senator will hear what I have to say about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This resolution, as I understand it, was reported adversely from the Committee on Appropriations. I see no use in this reconsideration unless Senators desire to make a talk on the subject. The joint resolution was reported adversely, when one of the Senators at least of the State of Nebraska was present; and unless there is some special object I see no use in recalling a resolution that has been reported on adversely and has by the Senate been postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think I have some good reasons and I could give them now, but I thought from the lateness of the hour if it was put on the Calendar I could do so at some future time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator does not desire to give any reason, let the motion be pending, and I object at present to the reconsideration. Let it be pending; I have no objection to that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have no objection to that. I can make my remarks on taking it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be considered as entered and pending.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to make a statement. Yesterday, in submitting my remarks on the Northern Pacific Railroad bill, I read a statement handed me by a gentleman in which was contained an alleged statement of Hon. S. S. FENN in regard to the amount of freight paid by him to the Oregon Steam Navigation Company. Judge FENN, by a letter which he has handed me, informs me that the statement was incorrect in giving the weight of the freight. In all other respects it was entirely correct. I ask that his letter to me be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1878.

DEAR SIR: I observe from the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings that you have fallen into an error in your speech on the Northern Pacific Railroad bill. You are quoted in the RECORD as follows:

"Hon. S. S. FENN paid the Oregon Steam Navigation Company for freight on a Pitt thrasher, weight not over two and a half tons, from Portland to Lewiston, $72."

I informed Mr. Montgomery, (who I presume is your informant,) in speaking of freights on the Columbia and Snake Rivers, that "the Pitt thrasher with which my grain was thrashed last year cost $373 freight from Portland to Lewiston, and the machinery was hauled from farm to farm with a two-horse team and a four-horse team. The weight I did not know." Please make the correction.

Very respectfully,

S. S. FENN.

Hon. J. H. MITCHELL.

DEFICIENCY IN PRINTING APPROPRIATION.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations, and I ask consent of the Senate to make a very brief statement as to what it is. The bill that I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back with a recommendation that it pass appropriates $200,000 to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year. I have in my hand a note from the Public Printer, which is very brief and I will read it, addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations:

SIR: The House passed a bill yesterday providing for a deficiency for public printing and binding, &c. Will you please urge its passage by the Senate at once? as I cannot even order paper on which your bills are printed until it is passed.

I think it is important that this bill (H. R. No. 4222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year be passed at once. It has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object, Mr. President. I do not think we ought to pass a two-hundred-thousand-dollar deficiency bill on the run. It will not kill anybody to let it wait until twelve o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONKLING. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seventeen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 23, 1878.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL AND RECORD.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I rise to make a correction of the Journal. Upon the final vote I am recorded as not voting; the same mistake appears in the RECORD. I was present and voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. CABELL. When the vote was taken upon the passage of the river and harbor bill, I announced that I was paired with Mr. PUGH, of New Jersey, and stated that if he were present he would vote in the affirmative, while I would vote in the negative. The statement in the RECORD is just the contrary.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The Journal, as corrected, was then approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 2818) to authorize T. and J. W. Gaff & Co. to use a certain building in the city of Aurora, Indiana, for the rectification of distilled spirits; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4394) to prohibit the coinage of the twenty-cent piece of silver.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 350) to enable citizens of the State of Florida to transfer a portion of their pre-emptions and homesteads to aid in the construction of railroads;

A bill (S. No. 426) for the relief of the Masonic Hall Company of Atlanta, Georgia;

A bill (S. No. 455) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan;

A bill (S. No. 612) for the relief of John A. Torrence;

A bill (S. No. 770) fixing the compensation of the telegraph operators of the Senate and House of Representatives;

A bill (S. No. 800) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith;

A bill (S. No. 902) for the relief of Carl Jussen; and

A bill (S. No. 909) to authorize the Secretary of War to accept an absolute gift of land necessary for military purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] to lay on the table the appeal of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] from the decision of the Chair in relation to the protest against the passage of the river and harbor bill presented by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.]

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word upon the appeal.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is the motion to lay upon the table debatable?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not give way for a motion to lay on the table. Mr. CARLISLE. But I made the motion yesterday to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. REAGAN. It does not so appear in the RECORD.

Mr. CARLISLE. It does appear in the RECORD and also in the Journal. Still if the gentleman desires to be heard—

Mr. REAGAN. The previous question has not been called, and I ask that in justice I may be allowed to be heard.

Mr. CARLISLE. We asked yesterday to be heard on the river and harbor bill, but the privilege was not accorded to us.

Mr. REILLY. Is the motion to lay on the table debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that I be allowed a few minutes, because a very serious injustice has been done to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. That can be by unanimous consent only.

Mr. REILLY. I object.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not propose to debate the bill. If the gentleman goes into that, I am willing to meet him. I am perfectly willing to have the gentleman address himself to the appeal.

Mr. REAGAN. That is all that I ask.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I ask an opportunity to reply.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FINLEY. Is debate now in order?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I understood that objection was waived.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not understand it to be waived at all. I insist upon the objection.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I ask to be heard on a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. There is one question of privilege already pending.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rose to a question of personal privilege yesterday and the gentleman tried to cut me off. I will not do so with him.

Mr. THOMPSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. REILLY. I object to any debate and insist upon the regular order.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] says he is willing I shall be heard in opposition to the protest.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it be in order to move to lay the whole subject—protest, appeal, and all—upon the table?

Mr. COX, of New York. There is a motion pending already to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is a motion to lay on the table amendable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it the object of the gentlemen who signed the protest to deny the privilege of replying to it?

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not deny it. The gentleman denied the privilege to me, and would not even allow the protest to be read.

Mr. REILLY. I insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the appeal of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it be in order to move to postpone the whole subject until the first day of the next session?

Mr. CARLISLE. The motion to lay on the table takes precedence of the motion to postpone.

Mr. DUNNELL. If the motion to lay upon the table the appeal shall prevail does that carry into the RECORD or into the Journal of the House the protest signed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] and others?

The SPEAKER. It does not carry it into the Journal of the House; but should the motion to lay upon the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair prevail, it would cause the paper to be read as a part of the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] and would in consequence go into the RECORD.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry—

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Mississippi will allow me, I wish to say that if I can do so I will withdraw the appeal, so as to allow the gentleman from New York to present his question of privilege, provided I can have the opportunity to say something in reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state distinctly the grounds upon which he based his decision; and he thinks he ought to be allowed to do so. The question before the House seems to the Chair to be a plain one.

Mr. ELAM. If the gentleman from Texas sees fit (and I concur in that view) to withdraw the appeal, does not that dispose of the whole question?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. CARLISLE. But the gentleman cannot withdraw the appeal while the motion to lay it on the table is pending.

The SPEAKER. Under Rule 40 it can be withdrawn at any time before it is determined.

Mr. CARLISLE. But, Mr. Speaker, the appeal which the gentleman made is not now the immediate question before the House; the pending question is on the motion to lay the appeal upon the table. Now I desire to say to the gentleman from Texas—

The SPEAKER. Laying the appeal on the table is only one of the ways to dispose of it. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment; and all incidental questions fall with such withdrawal.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay the appeal upon the table is in the opinion of the Chair an incidental question, as mentioned in rule.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move the indefinite postponement of this whole subject?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. COX, of New York. How could the gentleman from Mississippi get the floor for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi only made the parliamentary inquiry whether he could do so if he should obtain the floor.

Mr. HOOKER. I obtained the floor as much as the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas obtained the floor by appealing from the decision of the Chair; and that has a parliamentary connection with the subject-matter.

Mr. REILLY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Did I understand the Chair to state that he desired to communicate to the House his reasons for the ruling he gave yesterday? If so, I think that the House, as an act of courtesy, ought to listen to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thanks the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and will, before submitting the question, state exactly the position which he took in reference to this subject, and which he thinks impregnable.

Mr. KENNA. May I ask in a parliamentary way this question: If the Chair, representing his view of the question, is allowed to state his reasons for the decision, will it follow that those representing the opposite view will be allowed to state their reasons?

The SPEAKER. When the Chair decides a question of order, if he is not allowed to state his reasons for it, it would seem to be impossible for him to make his decision intelligible to the House.

Mr. KENNA. That is not the question I asked. I am not asking whether the Chair has a right to state the reasons for his ruling. My question is this: if the Chair does make such statement of his reasons, will the other side be allowed to state their views?

The SPEAKER. The Chair in deciding a point of order states the grounds on which he decides it; and that ends the matter—

Mr. KENNA. That, I understand, relates to the time of the rendition of the decision.

The SPEAKER. Just as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] hears opinions delivered in court, winding up with the decision of the court upon the question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I understand that, the appeal being withdrawn, the motion to lay the appeal on the table falls with it, and I am on the floor. I therefore ask to have the protest read. I will not occupy the time of the House in further debate unless the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] desires to debate the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask consent to place upon the record the reasons for the decision which he has given, if by any means he is deprived of the opportunity to do so orally.

Mr. REAGAN. When the paper of the gentleman from New York has been read I do desire an opportunity to respond.

Mr. KENNA. If the Chair understood me as objecting to his stating the reasons for his decision, he misunderstood me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand the gentleman. This question is a plain one in the mind of the Chair; and he would like to try and make it plain to others.

Mr. THOMPSON. Can the appeal of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] be withdrawn without the consent of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE?]

The SPEAKER. The House will observe one matter: the Chair has decided only that he was unable to decide, until the paper was read, whether it did embrace a question of privilege. The point whether it is a question of privilege to have the protest inserted on the Journal has not been touched upon by the Chair.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall make no objection to the reading of the paper and putting it on the record, if it is desired that it should go there; but I simply wish to say that the gentleman from New York presented it as a protest and urged it for some time as a protest. The suggestion that it was a question of privilege came from the Chair. Now, if before the question of privilege can be decided the paper must be read and go into the record, that seems to me to admit the whole mischief, while it avoids the direct question before the House.

The SPEAKER. This is a very plain matter. Yesterday it was suggested by the gentleman from Ohio that the Chair ought to look at this paper to see whether it was a question of privilege. But if the Chair should do that, he would arbitrarily assume a right which might perhaps run to the extent of preventing the House from hearing a paper upon which it might be called to vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair will allow me, that is a matter which can always be rectified by an appeal from the decision of the Chair if the House thinks his ruling is wrong.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, it would be too late.

Mr. GARFIELD. The point I wish to make is this: I do not care at all about this particular question of a protest one way or the other, but the good order of the House is involved. Suppose any gentleman rises to what he may choose to call a question of privilege, and has read and printed a speech three-quarters of an hour long upon the merits of a bill already passed, and the Chair decides it must be read through before he can determine whether it is a question of privilege or not. This places the business of the House at the mercy of every member's caprice, for under the pretense of a question of privilege he gets a speech and accomplishes his purpose. The subsequent decision of the Speaker that it is not a question of privilege does not prevent the disorder.

The SPEAKER. That is not the case here at all. Rule 141 provides that "when the reading of a paper is called for, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House." In the Digest it is expressly stated in the same connection that the "rule above recited is not construed to apply to the single reading of a paper or proposition upon which the House may be called upon to give a vote or to the several regular readings of the bill, but to cases where a paper has been once read or a bill has received its regular reading and another is called for, and also where a member desires the reading of a paper having relation to the subject before the House."

Further, in relation to questions of privilege, when a proposition is offered which relates to the privileges of the House it is the duty of the Speaker to entertain it at least to the extent of submitting the question to the House as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege. Now, how could the Chair submit a question of privilege to the House, or a paper as to whether it involved a question of privilege or not, if the paper was not read so it could be seen whether it involved a question of privilege or not? Under the rules it is the duty of the Chair to entertain it at least to the extent of submitting the question to the House as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege. The rule also provides that the gentleman has the right to call for the reading of a paper or proposition upon which the House may be called upon to give a vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair will allow me I will remind him that yesterday it was declared by the gentleman from New York himself when he first addressed the Chair that all he wanted was to present a protest against the action of the House on the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. And at the same time alleged that it involved a question of privilege.

Mr. GARFIELD. That was later. At the first he stated to the House, and to the Chair, that what he wanted was to present a protest against the passage of the river and harbor bill. The Chair therefore knows from the gentleman himself exactly what it is that is claimed as a question of privilege by the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not know until this morning when he read it in the daily paper what was contained in the protest, but if he had known under the rules of the House it was the duty of the Chair to entertain the question of privilege alleged by the gentleman from New York to the extent at least of submitting it to the House, and as it was a proposition upon which the House might be called upon to vote, the reading of the paper was a right which the gentleman from New York could demand. The only question decided by the Chair is that under the rules the reading of the paper is in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I believe I have the floor, the gentleman from Texas having withdrawn the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REAGAN. Of course it is understood that I shall have the right to answer.

Mr. BURCHARD. We have the right to know, Mr. Speaker, upon what ground the decision of the Chair is based.

The SPEAKER. That is a legitimate inquiry.

Mr. BURCHARD. I wish to be heard before the Chair rules. The point of order was made, not on the word of the gentleman from New York as a question of privilege in reference to a matter affecting himself, to rise and send up a paper and have it read, but whether any member of this House at any time has the right to rise and protest against the passage of a bill, announcing he has the right to take the floor as a question of privilege on that matter. That was the position, as I understand it, and upon that the point of order was raised.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentlemen from New York rose to a question of privilege and the Chair was bound to recognize him and take his word that the paper which he presented had at least the semblance of a question of privilege on which the House might be called to vote.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the appeal, and I do so on condition I shall be permitted to respond to the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be withdrawn conditionally.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not make any conditions with the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not ask it of the gentleman from New York, but I ask it of the House. I do not withdraw the appeal, if I am not to be heard. I only ask it in common fairness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas cannot qualify the withdrawal of his appeal. He can submit the question whether or not afterward he shall be heard on the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. Can I have common consent to be heard?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Texas may be heard by consent.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Texas has the right to be heard on a question of privilege.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let me call the attention of the Chair to the actual proceedings of yesterday as found in the RECORD on page 2717:

Mr. Cox, of New York. I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of presenting a protest against the passage of this bill, signed by members of Congress, and I ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will read on, and not pick out a particular paragraph.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have read every word thus far from the beginning of the transaction.

The SPEAKER. Read a little further on, and the gentleman from Ohio will find that the gentleman from New York did raise a question of privilege.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will read:

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. Has the gentleman any such right?

The SPEAKER. The right was established in the Thirty-ninth Congress by the democratic side of the House—

Here the Speaker was interrupted.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have the floor on a question of privilege, and I do not yield for debate.

It will be seen that the gentleman [Mr. Cox, of New York] there assumes to have the floor—

The SPEAKER. On a question of privilege.

Mr. GARFIELD. He assumed to have the floor, assumes the right to have a protest against that bill read to the House; and that is all he asked at first, except that he wanted to make a speech as well. Now having clearly declared to the House his purpose and his only purpose, it seems to me the Speaker is bound upon that declaration to rule whether the offer of such a protest is a question of privilege or not—

The SPEAKER. That appears to the Chair to be mere sophistry. The fact stands, nevertheless, that the gentleman from New York came to the Chair and was recognized by the Chair because he was taking the floor upon a question of privilege, otherwise he would not have been recognized. And the Chair stated that the gentleman rose to a question of privilege. Before he could state what that was he was interrupted by members on the floor.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to say a word.

Mr. WADDELL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair which authorizes this paper to be read under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio renews the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was on the floor and did not yield it to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is bound to recognize the appeal from his decision.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman makes his speech on the appeal and I have no chance to respond. I am on the floor all the time and yet he cuts me off by making a motion.

Mr. FORT. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to be heard for a few moments on the question:

Mr. FORT. I withdraw the motion to lay the appeal on the table that the Speaker may be heard.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is a plain one. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] presented a paper signed by members of the House, alleging it involved a question of privilege. Its reading was objected to upon the ground it could only be read by unanimous consent. The Chair decided it must be read so it could be determined whether it did or not involve a question of privilege. From this decision the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] took an appeal. This morning he withdrew it, and it has been renewed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Rule 141 provides that when the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member it shall be determined by a vote of the House. But in the Digest it is expressly stated in the same connection that the rule above recited "is not construed to apply to the single reading of a paper or proposition upon which the House may be called upon to give a vote, or to the several regular readings of a bill, but to cases where a paper has been once read, or a bill has received its regular reading and another is called for, and also where a member desires the reading of a paper having relation to the subject before the House."

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires not to be interrupted. Further in relation to questions of privilege it is laid down in the Digest:

When a proposition is submitted which relates to the privileges of the House, it is his duty to entertain it, at least to the extent of submitting the question to the House as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege.

It will be observed that the Chair is compelled to entertain the gentleman's question of privilege "at least to the extent of submitting it," and as it is a proposition on which the House may be called upon to vote, the reading of the paper is in order.

It has been the practice where bills involving millions, of appropriations passed under a suspension of the rules without debate or amendment, to allow more than ordinary latitude to questions of order and privilege. But in this instance the Chair has accorded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] only his right to have read the paper in reference to which he claims his right to be heard on said question of privilege.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say that I withdrew the appeal not because I did not believe it was well taken, but as a matter of courtesy in order that all parties might be heard in reference to it.

Mr. FORT. I now renew the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. COX of New York rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is recognized.

Mr. COX, of New York. I thought I had obtained the floor on the question of appeal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who made the appeal should be heard in advance.

Mr. GARFIELD. As to what transpired between the gentleman from New York and the Speaker before the gentleman from New York appeared in the forum of the House of course I have no right to have any knowledge, and I have none except what the Speaker has stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair only stated that as the reason of the recognition of the gentleman from New York, and then stated he took the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all right. But what appeared in the House was simply this: the gentleman from New York arose and said he did so for the purpose of presenting a written protest, signed by members of the House, against the bill that had just been passed. Having thus declared to the Speaker and to the whole House the sole ground on which he claimed the floor, I hold that the Speaker and the House were perfectly able to judge whether that proposition constituted a question of privilege, and that it was the duty of the Speaker to rule upon the case as put by the gentleman himself. The fact that the gentleman subsequently called it a question of privilege did not make it so.

Now the gentleman from New York claims that he had a further right to have read as a part of his remarks on the alleged question of privilege a paper; and my point is that for him to make any remarks, either oral or written, was to assume that he had the floor on an acknowledged question of privilege. I deny that it was a question of privilege; and I base that denial upon the statement with which he set out declaring his purpose; and I hold that the Speaker should have so ruled; and if the Speaker had so ruled there would have been no ground for the gentleman obtaining the floor to make a speech. The refusal of the Speaker to rule upon the question will result in allowing a speech—perhaps half a dozen speeches—which are not in order, if it shall finally be determined, as I believe it will be, that the offer of this protest is not a question of privilege. Any other view of our rules will result in disorder and serious delay to the business of the House, by allowing in this indirect and incidental way a debate upon a bill after it has passed and is no longer before the House. It is in behalf of good order and the public business that I have taken this appeal.

The SPEAKER. In reply, the Chair desires to say that his ruling ran only to the extent—and the gentleman from Ohio must not mistake that—that being on the floor on a question of privilege the gentleman from New York had a right to have that paper read as a part of his remarks, before the Chair could decide whether it embraced the question of privilege, and, as it seems to the Chair, before the House could be called upon to vote whether it was a question of privilege or not.

Mr. REAGAN. In the early part of this proceeding I find that the Speaker said: "Does the Chair understand that it is a protest against the bill?" and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] responded that it was.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized it as a question of privilege nevertheless, or the gentleman from New York could not have got the floor.

The question now is upon the motion of the gentlemen from Illinois, [Mr. FORT], to lay upon the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CARLISLE. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 101, not voting 59; as follows:

So the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. CABELL. I am paired with Mr. PUGH, of New Jersey. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. MAYHAM, is paired with Mr. HAZELTON. I do not know how they would vote. I desire also to announce that my colleague, Mr. VEEDER, is detained from the House by indisposition.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with Mr. EVANS, of Indiana.

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to state that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. QUINN. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. BANKS, is paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to state that my colleagues, Mr. TIPTON and Mr. TOWNSEND, are paired; and also my colleagues Mr. BRENTANO and Mr. HARRISON.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask that the paper which I send up to the Clerk's desk be now read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paper, as follows:

We, the undersigned, members of the Forty-fifth Congress, protest against the passage of the substitute report of Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, to House bill 4226, making appropriation for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, for the following reasons:

1. The bill contains appropriations to the amount of $7,293,700, and is of such large amount that the rules of the House should not be suspended to facilitate its passage without debate and consideration.

2. All our rules, and especially Rule 121, specially applicable to appropriations for works of internal improvement, are intended to guard against a vote in gross on such appropriations, and require, for wise purposes, separate votes on each item, under certain conditions. We protest against the infraction of so salutary a rule on a bill where the tendency is to combine for general spoliation upon the Treasury.

Mr. CONGER, (interrupting.) I claim that that part of the remarks of the gentleman from New York—for this paper is submitted as a part of his remarks—in which he charges the members of this House with the spoliation upon the Treasury shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MCCOOK. If it is proper in this connection, I desire to say that I shall rise to a question of privilege under the precedent set, to enter my protest against the action of the House and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would have no objection, but there is one question of privilege pending.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the last sentence, impugning the motives of members of this House, be taken down, as it forms a portion of the gentleman's speech.

The SPEAKER. That can be done after the paper is read.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; the rule requires it to be done at once.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will modify it.

Mr. REED. There is no occasion to modify it.

The SPEAKER. The words will be taken down.

Mr. CONGER. I object to it as an insult to this House, and I call the gentleman to order for using that language, and I demand that he be not permitted to proceed further until the question of order is settled.

The SPEAKER. Rule 62 provides that—

If a member be called to order for words spoken in debate, the person calling him to order shall repeat the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's table; and no member shall be held to answer, or subject to the censure of the House, for words spoken in debate, if any other member has spoken, or other business has intervened, after the words spoken, and before exception to them shall have been taken.

The Clerk will read the words excepted to by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The Clerk read as follows:

We protest against the infraction of so salutary a rule on a bill where the tendency is to combine for general spoliation upon the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] to withdraw the words objected to.

Mr. COX, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a ruling upon the point of order which I raised.

Mr. CARLISLE. Those words do not charge that the members of the House—

Mr. COX, of New York. I have the floor now.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the gentleman's speaking until the question is decided whether he was out of order or not in using that language.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] is having this paper read as a portion of his remarks. If he should make remarks not in order the Chair thinks he can withdraw them and proceed in order.

Mr. CONGER. I wish the Chair to rule whether his remarks were in order.

The SPEAKER. That the Chair is not called upon to rule now. The Chair would say, however, that this only confirms the position he took this morning as to the propriety of having the paper read.

Mr. CONGER. That is a remark by way of argument or opinion. I raised the point of order that the gentleman was out of order in using that language.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from New York withdraws the words objected to.

Mr. CONGER. I object to his withdrawing them until the Chair has ruled upon it.

Mr. CARLISLE. The language referred to is only to the effect that the tendency of this legislation is so and so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not raise any such line of distinction, because the gentleman from New York withdraws the words.

Mr. CONGER. I am not done with this point of order yet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided it.

Mr. CONGER. Then I demand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] cannot under the rule proceed with his remarks unless permitted by the House so to do, and I ask that that question be put to the House. That is a part of the rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. Rule 62 is not now applicable to any language used by the gentleman, for the reason that he has withdrawn the language objected to.

Mr. CONGER. But if he has used offensive remarks, he must obtain permission from the House to proceed, even if he withdraws those remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman's withdrawal of the remarks leaves Rule 62 inoperative as against him.

Mr. CONGER. But it is for the House to determine whether it will permit him to go on.

The SPEAKER. He does go on naturally, occupying the floor, in order.

Mr. HALE. Allow me to make a suggestion on the point of order. The contest that has just been settled was upon the inclination or the ruling of the Chair to hear read the protest, in order to decide the question of privilege. The position of the Chair in that matter has been sustained by the House. The protest has been read.

Mr. COX, of New York. No, it has not.

Mr. HALE. The knowledge desired by the Chair has been brought to his mind by the reading of that protest. I now make the point of order, although it is always a pleasant thing, personally, to listen to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] that the Chair should rule upon the question of privilege. Certainly all the knowledge that the Chair can ever have upon that question is already before him.

The SPEAKER. The paper has not been read through.

Mr. HALE. Comments cannot add to the knowledge.

The SPEAKER. Whenever it is proper for the Chair to decide the point, the Chair will decide or submit the question whether this paper is one of personal privilege or not.

Mr. CONGER. The point of order I made has not been decided by the Chair. I ask that Rule 61 be read.

The SPEAKER. Rule 61?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call to order; in which case, the member so called to order shall immediately sit down, unless permitted to explain; and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, but without debate; if there be no appeal, the decision of the Chair shall be submitted to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was not called to order by the gentleman. The Clerk read the remainder of the rule, as follows:

If the decision be in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed; if otherwise, he shall not be permitted to proceed, in case any member object, without leave of the House; and if the case require it, he shall be liable to the censure of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] called the attention of the Chair to Rule 62.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; some one else did that.

The SPEAKER. The words objected to were read by the Clerk, and the Chair thinks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] was permitted to explain, for he withdrew the language to which objection was made.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. This protest is signed by twenty-six men. Can one of them withdraw a part of it without the consent of his associates?

Mr. REA. That is the point I was going to make.

The SPEAKER. That point is not well taken because this paper is being read as a part of the gentleman's remarks, and he chooses to modify or omit a part of his language just as a gentleman oftentimes does in reading a law-book, reading parts and omitting parts.

Mr. REA. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this point: the gentleman in the course of his remarks is having read a paper signed by certain members of this House. He proposes now to withdraw from that paper the word "spoliation" and insert "exhaustion." I make the point that he has no right to make the signers of any paper say to this House what they have not said themselves.

The SPEAKER. The paper is read as a part of the gentleman's remarks. The gentleman withdraws the language excepted to by the gentleman from Michigan, and the Chair thinks he has the right to do so. As to the point that the withdrawal relates to language to which other names are signed, that is not a question for the Chair to determine. That is a question between the gentleman from New York himself and those whose names may hereafter be read as the signers of this paper.

Mr. WADELL. Can the gentleman withdraw the language without unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly he can withdraw or modify his language; it is his right to do so, the words being excepted to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have the right to have that paper read under the ruling of the Chair; and these gentlemen who have appropriations in this bill ought to be a little modest when I come here and make a proper representation, withdrawing any word that they may think opprobrious. I stand here as a member of Congress to fight for honest, square practice in this House in the passage of money bills. I cannot be badgered by other members.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the gentleman proceeding without leave of the House.

Mr. COX, of New York, and others addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be seated, and the House will come to order.

[During the effort of the Speaker to obtain order an earnest colloquy took place between Mr. COX, of New York, Mr. HOUSE, and others, which the rapping of the Speaker's gavel rendered inaudible at the reporters' desk.]

The SPEAKER. (to Mr. Cox, of New York, who still endeavored to make himself heard.) The gentleman from New York will suspend.

Mr. ATKINS. Has the gentleman from New York the right to discuss the merits of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has asked the gentleman to be seated.

Mr. ATKINS. If the gentleman has not the right to do so he ought to take his seat.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am on the floor under the decision of the Speaker; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has no right to talk to me in that way.

Mr. ATKINS. I have the right to inquire whether the gentleman is in order in discussing the merits of this bill—

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. ATKINS. And if he is not, I have the right to object to his doing so.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will suspend. The gentleman has made certain remarks to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objected. The gentleman from New York thereupon withdrew or modified the language objected to.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I say that he cannot withdraw the language so as to exempt himself from the action of the House; for the House may, if it chooses, censure him. Under Rule 61 the gentleman cannot proceed, if any member objects, unless the House gives consent. Whether the gentleman withdraws his remarks or not, he may be censured; whether he withdraws them or not, any member may object to them; and whether he withdraws them or not, the House may refuse to let him proceed. Under Rule 61, I object to his proceeding further with his remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. I desire to say a word upon the point of order. The Chair will observe the language of the rule, "he shall immediately sit down unless permitted to explain." Now, the gentleman could neither withdraw his remarks nor explain them without the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he could.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. He has not had the consent of the House. Consequently the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan must be decided. Before the gentleman from New York can proceed with his remarks, objection being made, he must have the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. Why, it is the most natural proceeding in the world when a member of a legislative body makes remarks for which he is called to order that he should immediately withdraw the offensive language.

Mr. CONGER. He has not asked leave to withdraw it; he cannot get leave without the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. Surely nobody will object to the gentleman from New York withdrawing language which may be considered offensive.

Mr. CONGER. He cannot withdraw the language until the House has considered the case.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. The gentleman from New York has not yet asked permission to withdraw the language.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, he did.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. He attempted to withdraw the language without asking permission of the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I did withdraw the language.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Was the gentleman from New York authorized to withdraw the remarks of other gentleman who had signed this paper?

Mr. COX, of New York. So far as the reading has proceeded no names have appeared.

The SPEAKER. The matter is one between the gentleman from New York and the other gentlemen concerned; and as the gentleman from New York suggests, no names have been read.

Mr. SPARKS. I am one of the signers of that paper and so far as I am aware none of the signers object to this withdrawal. Why can the gentleman not withdraw the language if nobody objects? There seems to be a great effort to prevent this simple protest from going into the RECORD. I think that members of this House have a right to make their protest against vicious legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question raised by the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has made use of certain language to which the gentleman from Michigan objects. The gentleman from New York then desires to withdraw the language, and the gentleman from Michigan objects to the modification. The Chair now submits the question, shall the gentleman from New York proceed in order?

Mr. BURCHARD. Before that is decided I wish to inquire whether there is now pending a question of privilege—whether the gentleman has presented a question of privilege and whether he is making a speech on that question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman claimed the right to have that paper read touching the question of privilege that was raised. The Chair decided he had the right to have it read. Whenever the question is raised whether that protest, as it has been generally styled, is a question of privilege or not, then the Chair will decide or submit the question to the House.

Mr. HALE. That was the question I raised a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. Whenever the paper is read and is before the House, the Chair will decide or submit the question to the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I trust the gentleman from New York will be allowed to proceed and let us get out of this.

Mr. McMAHON. I call the attention of the Chair to this fact that neither the Speaker nor the House has yet determined that these words were out of order, and therefore I think the rule providing that the question shall be put to the House whether the gentleman shall proceed in order does not apply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the words might be construed into a reflection upon the House, and therefore the Chair recognized the gentleman from Michigan who took exception to the words.

Mr. CONGER. In order that there may be no question about the point I make—the Chair having decided the gentleman was out of order whether he changes his remarks or not, and that he could not do that without leave of the House under Rule 61, which says, if the decision be in favor of the member called to order he may proceed, but if otherwise, as the Chair has decided in this case, he shall not be permitted to proceed, in case any member objects, without leave of the House—now, sir, I rise as a member to object to his proceeding, and that is the question now for us to determine.

The SPEAKER. It is the constant practice of gentlemen upon the floor to withdraw anything that is offensive. The gentleman from Vermont the other day spoke of pettifogging, and the gentleman from Kentucky taking exception to it, the gentleman from Vermont was immediately allowed to withdraw the language. The Chair has never known that privilege denied.

Mr. CONGER. But the words were not taken down.

Mr. REED. No point of order was raised on the gentleman from Vermont; none at all.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the words were objected to by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. REED. The Speaker will recollect no point of order was raised, but the gentleman from Kentucky objected, to be sure.

The SPEAKER. The facts are mainly alike in both cases.

Mr. REED. Here the point of order has been raised and the words have been taken down.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed in order, he having withdrawn or modified the language objected to?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 72.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will proceed in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the finishing of the reading of that paper and then I will submit a few remarks, and I will show by ordinary uniform usage in this House and in other legislative bodies it is in order.

Mr. HOOKER. As I understand it the Chair has not yet passed upon the question whether this is a question of privilege or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not.

Mr. HOOKER. Then when that question comes up we shall be heard on it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk proceeded and read as follows:

3. The right of the House of Representatives to consider appropriations in Committee of the Whole House, or at least in the House itself, should be sacredly protected. This suspension of the rules deprives this House of our traditional privilege, and thus encourages similar attempts upon the Treasury to gratify local interests.

Mr. CONGER. I demand that the words just read be taken down.

The SPEAKER. What words?

Mr. CONGER. The words "and thus encourage similar attempts upon the Treasury to gratify local interests."

Mr. COX, of New York. I will not take those words back. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that those words impugn the character of the members of this House, and I call the gentleman to order for making remarks impugning the motives of members of this House.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, I submit those words are not out of order; and to show what a late President of the United States himself has said in regard to a similar bill to this, I ask the Clerk to read a message which he sent to this House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Is this question debatable?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have marked what I ask to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In affixing my signature to the river and harbor bill, No. 3922, I deem it my duty to announce to the House of Representatives my objections to some features of the bill, and the reason I sign it. If it was obligatory upon the Executive to expend all the money appropriated by Congress, I should return the river and harbor bill with my objections, notwithstanding the great inconvenience to the public interests resulting therefrom, and the loss of expenditures from previous Congresses upon incomplete works. Without enumerating, many appropriations are made for works of purely private or local interest, in no sense national. I cannot give my sanction to these, and will take care that during my term of office no public money shall be expended upon them.

There is very great necessity for economy of expenditures at this time growing out of the loss of revenue likely to arise from a deficiency of appropriations to insure a thorough collection of the same. The reduction of revenue districts, diminution of special agents, and total abolition of supervisors may result in great falling off of the revenue. It may be a question to consider whether any expenditure can be authorized under the river and harbor appropriation further than to protect works already done and paid for. Under no circumstances will I allow expenditures upon works not clearly national.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 14, 1876.

Mr. CARLISLE. Now, Mr. Speaker, the House received that message from the President of the United States and gave it a respectful consideration, and I submit to the House that the language used in that message with reference to a bill very similar in its provisions to this is at least as strong as the language which thirty and odd members of this House proposed to use in reference to this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. The President is not a member of the House.
